SEGORBA, a town of Spain, in the province of Valencia, on the river Morviedro, the ſee of a biſhop, founded in the 6th century, ſuppoſed by ſome to have formerly been the capital of Celtiberia. In its preſent ſtate it contains not more than from 5 to 6000 inhabitants. It is ſurrounded by well cultivated gardens; the climate is mild, and the country abounds in every kind of fruit. The Jeſuits had a college in Segorba; their houſe has been converted into an epiſcopal ſeminary. The greateſt curioſity in Segorba is the fountain, which, even at its ſource, furniſhes water ſufficient to turn two mill-wheels, and water all the neighbouring country. The water is wholeſome, clear, and well taſted; it does not breed either reptiles or flies, and becomes not corrupt by being kept; but its moſt remarkable property is that of petrifying the roots and branches of the trees which grow by its ſide, and even the channels through which it paſſes: 35 miles N. Valencia, and 150 E. Madrid. Long. 16. 7. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 39. 58. N.

SEGOVIA, a city of Spain, in Old Caſtile, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Toledo, ſurrounded with a wall, flanked with towers and a rampart. It contains 27 churches, 24 convents, and about 8000 houſes. The principal edifices are the cathedral, and the caſtle of Alcazar. The cathedral is a mixture of the Gothic and Mooriſh architecture. The inſide is very ſpacious, and of majeſtic ſimplicity. The windows are well diſpoſed, and the great altar has been lately decorated with the fineſt Grenadian marble. The Alcazar of Segovia, formerly the reſidence of the Gothic kings, is a well-preſerved edifice Within theſe few years, a military ſchool has been eſtabliſhed in it, for young gentlemen intended for the artillery. The Alcazar was for a long time made uſe of as a priſon, for the crews of the Barbary corſairs, who fell into the hands of the Spaniards. But nothing is more worthy the attention of curioſity at Segovia, than the aqueduct, which the ſingular ſituation of the city renders neceſſary. Segovia is built upon two hills, and the vally by which they are ſeparated; it beſides extends conſiderably in every direction. This poſition made it very difficult for a part of the citizens to be ſupplied with water. The difficulty was removed, according to the learned, in the reign of Trajan, by an aqueduct, which until this day is one of the moſt aſtoniſhing, and the beſt preſerved, of the Roman works. Two rows of arches riſe majeſtically, one above the other, and the ſpectator feels ſome impreſſion of fear in comparing their ſlender baſe with their amazing height. Its ſolidity, which has braved upwards of 16 centuries ſeems inexplicable, on cloſely obſerving the ſimplicity of its conſtruction. Segovia, which has ever been famous for the goodneſs of its wool, was formerly not leſs ſo for the number and perfection of its manufactures. It is fallen from its ancient ſplendour to a degree afflicting to every friend to his country. In 1785, the number of looms did not exceed 250. The mint of Segovia was for ſome years the only one in Spain, of late another has been eſtabliſhed at Seville: 73 miles E. Salamanca, and 40 NNW. Madrid. Long. 12. 28. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 41. 3. N.

SELKIRK, a town of Scotland, and capital of a county to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Ettrick, in what was formerly called Ettrick Foreſt. It is a burgh, with lands worth more than a thouſand pounds a year, which are divided into a great number of ſmall properties. The manufacture of boots and ſhoes have been long eſtabliſhed here, beſides which is a manufacture of inkle, the number of inhabitants in the town is about 1000; in the country part of the pariſh 700. Selkirk, united with Lanerk, Peebles, and Linlithgow, ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament. In the year 1513, one hundred of the inhabitants attended James IV. to the battle of Floddonfield, from which a few returned, laden with the ſpoils taken from the enemy. Some of theſe trophies ſtill ſurvive the ruſt of time, and the effects of negligence. The deſperate valour of the citizens of Selkirk, which, on that fatal day, was eminently conſpicuous to both armies, produced very oppoſite effects. The implacable reſentment of the Engliſh reduced their defenceleſs town to aſhes, whilſt their grateful ſovereign (James V.) ſhowed his ſenſe of their valour, by a grant of an extenſive portion of his foreſt, the trees for rebuilding their houſes, and the property as the reward of their heroiſm: 30 miles S. SEMIPOLATNAI, or Sempalat, a fortreſs of Ruſſia, in the government of Kolivan, on the Irtiſch, firſt built in the year 1714, on the bank of the Irtiſch; but it was taken down, and built on a new ſituation ſeveral times, on account of the gradual encroachments which the water made on the land; ſo that now it ſtands in its fourth ſituation. This fort is eaſily commanded from the mountains that lie to the eaſt of it; and the adjacent country is very pleaſant and fertile, but lies uncultivated. The gardens at Sempalat yield a very fine ſpecies of melons. The fort has its name from Sempalat, a ruinous town, lying about ſixteen wreſts from it, on the river Irtiſch, where ſome remains of old ſtone buildings are ſtill to be ſeen. The firſt Ruſſian ſettlers here found ſeven of theſe houſes, as the name of the place imports. The learned are of opinion that ſome old inſcriptions which were found among the ruins, relate to the mythology of the Calmuks; and that this place was deſerted by that nation, agreeable to a maxim of their religion, that when any conſecrated place is once profaned by war, it muſt be relinquiſhed for ever: 248 miles S. Kolivan, and 616 SE. Tobolſk. Long. 98. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 25. N.

SENECEY, a town of France, in the department of the Saône and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Châlons: 2½ leagues S. Châlons ſur Saône, and 1½ N. Tournus.

SENEFF, a town of Brabant, remarkable for a bloody battle fought there between the French, commanded by the prince of Condé, and the Dutch and the allies, commanded by William prince of Orange. The prince of Orange, to make the world imagine he had gained a victory, laid ſiege to Oudenarde; but Condé, to convince them that he had not loſt a battle, obliged him to relinquiſh the attempt: 13 miles NW. Charles-ſur-Sambre, and 13 ENE. Mons.

SENEGAL, or Senegambia, a country of Africa, ſituated between the rivers Senegal and Gambia, in which are included many kingdoms and ſtates. The former name it derives from the river Senegal and the latter from the Gambia.

SENEGAL, a river of Africa, which riſes in the interior country, and runs into the Atlantic. Some geographers are of opinion, that it riſes out of the great lake Mabeira, and paſſes through a courſe of 1500 miles before it diſcharges itſelf into the ocean; while others no leſs obſtinately aſſert it to be a continuation of the Niger, though neither opinions can be otherwiſe ſupported than by conjecture. The river Senegal is, doubtleſs, one of the largeſt rivers of Africa; for without aſcending higher than the lake Benin (the fartheſt that Europeans have penetrated, at leaſt upon unqueſtionable authority) it is 800 leagues to the iſland of Senegal, near the mouth of the river. So cruel, ſo ſavage, and ſo barbarous, are the inhabitants, that few people's curioſity is ſufficient to carry them through the dangers and fatigues which would neceſſarily attend ſuch a purſuit. Within two leagues of the ſea, the river in its courſe takes a ſudden turn to the ſouth, and for the remainder of its paſſage is divided from the ſea only by a natural ridge of ſand, ſometimes not a hundred toiſes over. By this curve, it prolongs its courſe for 25 leagues farther, from north to ſouth, till at length it diſcharges itſelf into the ocean, in 15 deg. 50 min. north latitude. This great river ſeparates the country of the Negroes from the Moors of Sahara, or the Deſert, ſtretching by a number of windings to a prodigious length, from eaſt to weſt. The extreme rapidity of this river is attributed to the ſpace paſſed through by ſo large a body of water, confined within ſo narrow a channel; the mouth of it being no more than half a league over, and that choked up with ſand, called a bar, which renders the paſſage exceeding difficult and dangerous. This bar is doubly dangerous, on account not only of the ſhallowneſs of the water at all times, but the ſhifting of the bar, and the change of its ſituation after floods and heavy rains, by which the channels are loſt, and new ſoundings requiſite to diſcover them; indeed, the Senegal would be quite ſhut up but for one channel of 200 toiſes in breadth, and two fathoms' depth, which has long kept its ſituation immoveable amidſt the floods and overflowings of the river. This bar prevents ſhips of five or ſix hundred tons from entering the river, and mooring under the fort; an inconvenience that obliged the French company to keep a veſſel conſtantly at anchor in the channel, for no other purpoſe than to keep an account of the ſoundings. The moſt commodious time of the year for croſſing the bar is from the month of January till Auguſt, the winds being then variable, the river ſmooth, and the bar fixed till the enſuing rainy ſeaſon, when the prodigious ſwell of the river, and ſouth-weſt winds, oppoſed to its rapid courſe, raiſe waves of ſo prodigious a height at the bar, that their claſhing reſembles the ſhock of mountains, and ſo furious, as to daſh in pieces the ſtouteſt ſhip. After croſſing the bar, it becomes a beautiful, ſmooth, and gently gliding river, at four fathoms' depth. In advancing a league higher, the country on the ſouth ſide is clothed with a beautiful verdure, the trees in perpetual bloom, than which nothing can form a more agreeable contraſt to the dry, ſandy, and barren points of land, that firſt preſent themſelves to ſhipping. All around lie a great number of iſlands, pleaſantly ſtocked with trees, fruits, herbage, and birds, but appropriated to no uſe, except the iſland of Senegal. The mouth of the river is laid down in Lat. 15. 50. N.

SENEGAL, an iſland of Africa, in the river ſo called, about one mile and a quarter in length, from north to ſouth, and almoſt half a mile in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. It is compoſed of a bed of looſe ſand, productive of nothing but what is forced by art and the richeſt manure, notwithſtanding which, it contains 3000 inhabitants, whoſe principal food is fiſh and maize. This ſort of corn grows in great plenty almoſt all over the whole country. It may ſeem ſurpriſing that a part of the world ſo very unhealthy as this, ſhould yet be ſo populous, but the wonder will ceaſe when we come to underſtand, that the greateſt pride among the men conſiſts in the number of their wives; ſo that every one takes as many as he is able to maintain: ſome ſix, others eight, and others twelve, at a time. Lat. 16. 5. N.—In the year 1758, this iſland was taken from the French by the Britiſh troops, and by the peace of 1763 it was ceded to Great Britain.

SENNAAR, a kingdom of Africa, in the country of Nubia, ſituated on the banks of the Nile, between Egypt and Abyſſinia. In the beginning of the 16th century, the whole of this country between Abyſſinia and Egypt, was ſubject to an Arab prince of the race of Beni Koreiſh, called Wed Ageeb, whoſe capital was Gerri. In the year 1504, it was invaded by a nation of Negroes, who compelled the Arabs to pay them a conſiderable tribute. Theſe Negroes were called Shillook, and founded Senaar, which has ever ſince been the capital. At the eſtabliſhing of this monarchy, the king, and the whole nation of Shillook, were Pagans. They were ſoon after converted to Mahometaniſm, for the ſake of trading with Cairo, and took the name of Funge, which they interpret ſometimes lords, or conquerors, and at other times free citizens, though Mr. Bruce ſays, that the firſt title of nobility in this country is that of ſlave; indeed, there is no other. All titles and dignities are undervalued and precarious, unleſs they are in the hands of one who is a ſlave. Slavery in Senaar is the only true nobility. It is one of the ſingularities which obtains among this brutiſh people, that the king aſcends his throne under an admiſſion that he may be lawfully put to death by his own ſubjects, or ſlaves, upon a council being held by the great officers, if they decree that it is not for the advantage of the ſtate that he be ſuffered to reign any longer. There is one officer of his own family who, alone, can be the inſtrument of ſhedding his ſovereign and kinſman's blood. This officer is called Sid el Coom, maſter of the king's houſehold, or ſervants, but has no vote in depoſing him, nor is any guilt imputed to him, however many of his ſovereigns he thus regularly murders. Upon the death of the king his eldeſt ſon ſucceeds by right; and immediately afterwards as many of the brothers of the reigning prince as can be apprehended are put to death by the Sid el Coom.

SENAAR, a city of Africa, and capital of a kingdom of the ſame name, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the Nile. Mr. Bruce ſays the ground whereon it ſtands, riſes juſt enough to prevent the river from entering the town, even in the height of the inundation, when it comes to be even with the ſtreet. The town of Senaar is very populous, there being in it many good houſes, after the faſhion of the country. Poncet ſays, in his time they were all of one ſtory high; but now the great officers have all houſes of two. They have parapet roofs, which is a ſingular conſtruction; for in other places within the rains the roofs are all conical. The houſes are all built of clay, with very little ſtraw mixed with it, which ſufficiently ſhows the rains here muſt be leſs violent than to the ſouthward, probably from the diſtance of the mountains. However, when Mr. Bruce was there, a week of conſtant rain happened, and on the 30th of July the Nile increaſed violently, after loud thunder and a great darkneſs to the ſouth.

The whole ſtream was covered with the wreck of houſes, canes, wooden bowls, and platters, living camels, and cattle, and ſeveral dead ones paſſed Sennaar, hurried along by the current, with great velocity. A hyena, endeavouring to croſs before the town, was ſurrounded and killed by the inhabitants. The water got into the houſes that ſtood upon its banks, and by riſing ſeveral feet high, the walls melted, being clay, which occaſioned ſeveral of them to fall. It ſeemed by the floating wreck of houſes that appeared in the ſtream, to have deſtroyed a great many villages to the ſouthward. The ſoil of Sennaar is very unfavourable, both to man and beaſt. This ſeems to me to be owing to ſome noxious quality of the fat earth, with which it is every way ſurrounded, and nothing may be depended upon more ſurely than the fact. No horſe, mule, aſs, or any beaſt of burden, will breed, or even live at Sennaar, or many miles about it. Neither dog nor cat, ſheep nor bullock, nor poultry can be preſerved a ſeaſon there. They muſt go all, every half year to the ſands. Though all poſſible care be taken of them, they die in every place where the fat earth is about the town, during the firſt ſeaſons of the rains. Several kings have tried to keep lions, but no care could prolong their lives beyond the firſt rains. This remarkable quality ceaſes upon removing from the fertile country to the ſands Aira, between three and four miles from Sennaar, with no water near it but the Nile, ſurrounded with white barren ſand, which agrees perfectly with all animals. But however unfavourable this ſoil may be for the propagation of animals, it contributes very abundantly both to the nouriſhment of man and beaſt. It is all ſown with dora, or millet, the principal food of the natives. It produces alſo wheat and rice, but theſe at Sennaar are ſold by the pound, even in years of plenty. The ſalt made uſe of at Sennaar is all extracted from the earth about it. About twelve miles from Sennaar, nearly to the north-weſt is a collection of villages called Shaddly, from a great ſaint, who in his time directed large pits to be dug, and plaſtered cloſely within with clay, into which a quantity of grain was put when it was at the cheapeſt, and theſe were covered up, and plaſtered again at the top, which they call ſealing, and the hole itſelf matamore. Theſe matamores are in great number all over the plain, and, on any proſpect of corn growing dear, they are opened, and corn ſold at a low price, both to the town and country. To the north of Shaddly, about twenty miles, is another foundation of this ſort, called Wed Aboud, ſtill greater than Shaddly. Upon theſe two charities the chief ſubſiſtence of the Arabs depends; for as there is continual war among theſe people, and their violence being always directed againſt the crops rather than the perſons of their enemies, the deſtruction of each tribe would follow the loſs of its harveſt, was it not for the extraordinary ſupplies furniſhed at ſuch times by theſe granaries. The ſmall villages of ſoldiers are ſcattered up and down through this immenſe plain, to watch the grain that is ſown, which is dora only, and it is ſaid that here the ground will produce no other grain. Prodigious excavations are made at proper diſtances, which fill with water in the rainy ſeaſon, and are a great relief to the Arabs in their paſſage between the cultivated country and the ſands. The fly, that inexorable perſecutor of the Arabs, never purſues them to the north of Shaddly. The knowledge of this circumſtance, was what, perhaps, determined the firſt builders of Sennaar to place their capital here, this too, probably, induced the two ſaints, Shaddly and Wed Aboud, to make here theſe excavations for corn and water. This is the firſt reſting place the Arabs find, where, having all things neceſſary for ſubſiſtence, they can at leiſure tranſact their affairs with government. The banks of the Nile about Sennaar reſemble the pleaſanteſt parts of Holland in the ſummer ſeaſon; but ſoon after, when the rains ceaſe, and the ſun exerts his utmoſt influence, the dora begins to ripen, the leaves to turn yellow and to rot, the lakes to putrify, ſmell, and be full of vermin, all this beauty ſuddenly diſappears; bare ſcorched Nubia returns, and all its terrors of poiſonous winds, and moving ſands, glowing and ventilated with ſultry blaſts, which are followed by a troop of terrible attendants, epilepſies, apoplexies, violent fevers, obſtinate agues, and lingering painful dyſenteries, ſtill more obſtinate and mortal. The dreſs of Sennaar is very ſimple. It conſiſts of a long ſhirt, of blue Surat cloth, called Marowty, which covers them from the lower part of the neck down to their feet, but does not conceal the neck itſelf; and this is the only difference between the men's and the women's dreſs, that worn by the women covers the neck altogether. The men have ſometimes a ſaſh tied about their middle; and both men and women go barefooted in the houſe. In the greateſt heat at noon, they order buckets of water to be thrown upon them, inſtead of bathing. Both men and women anoint themſelves at leaſt once a day, with camels' greaſe mixed with civet. The principal diet of the poorer ſort is millet, made into bread or flour. The rich make a pudding of this, roaſting the flour before the fire, and pouring milk and butter into it; beſides which they eat beef, partly roaſted and partly raw. Their horned cattle are the largeſt and fatteſt in the world, and are exceedingly fine; but the common meat ſold in the market is camels' fleſh. Mr. Bruce ſays, the liver of the animal, and the ſpare-rib, are always eaten raw through the whole country, and he never ſaw one inſtance where it was dreſſed with fire: it is not then true that eating raw fleſh is peculiar to Abyſſinia; it is practiſed, in this inſtance of camels' fleſh, in all the black countries to the weſtward. Hog's fleſh is not ſold in the market, but all the people of Sennaar eat it publicly; men in office, who pretend to be Mahometans, eat their's in ſecret. The forces at Sennaar, immediately around the capital, conſiſt of about 14,000 Nuba, who fight naked, having no other armour but a ſhort javelin, and a round ſhield, and about 1800 horſe, all black, mounted by black ſlaves, armed coats of mail, and without any other weapon but Sclavonian ſword. The trade of Sennaar is not ſo great; they have no manufactures, but the principal article of conſumption is blue cotton cloth from Surat. Formerly, when the ways were open, and merchants went in caravans with ſafety, Indian goods were brought in quantities to Sennaar from Jidda, and then diſperſed over the black country. The return was made in gold, in powder called Tibbar, civet, rhinoceros's horns, ivory, oſtrich feathers, and, above all, in ſlaves and glaſs, more of which were exported from Sennaar than from all the reſt of Africa together. But this trade is almoſt deſtroyed, ſo is that of the gold and ivory. However, the gold ſtill keeps up its reputation of being the pureſt and beſt in Africa, and therefore bought at Mocha, to be carried to India, where it all at laſt centres. Long. 33. 30. E. The Goths, from Hiſpalis, made Hiſpalia; but the Arabians, who came after them, not pronouncing the p, called it Ixbilla, of which the Caſtilians have made Sevilla. The Romans granted it the privilege of a Roman colony, and called it Julia Romula, or Little Rome. Hercules is ſaid to have been the founder of Seville, and the opinion is ſo general, that it is current among the common people by long tradition: it is even inſcribed on the gates of the city. Of the 43 Hercules, mentioned in hiſtory, or fable, two came into Spain: one was a Lybian; the other from Thebes. It remains to be known which of the two founded Seville. It is ſituated on the Guadalquiver: when in poſſeſſion of the Romans, it was embelliſhed with temples, academies, theatres, and fountains: all theſe were deſtroyed by the Goths, and re-eſtabliſhed by the Moors. When Ferdinand took it from the Mahometans, it contained 600,000 inhabitants; but, ſince that time, has declined conſiderably: its harbour is choked with ſand. In the time of Ferdinand and Iſabella, 6000 looms were employed in this city, and 1600 manufacturers of wool and ſilk: at preſent there are ſcarcely 400. Seville is large, ſituated in a vaſt plain, of a circular form, and ſurrounded with walls, flanked with towers. It contains 29 pariſh-churches, 77 convents, 24 hoſpitals, 24 ſquares, an univerſity, founded in the year 1054, and an academy of the Belles Lettres, founded in the year 1730, a court of inquiſition, an exchange, and a mint. The cathedral is the largeſt Gothic building in Spain; and by ſome ſuppoſed to be the largeſt church in the world, next to St. Peter's, at Rome. The royal palace, called Alcaçar, ſtands near the cathedral, and is very ſpacious. It was built by the Moors; ſince which the kings of Spain have alſo conſiderably enlarged and decorated it; but the new works are inferior to the old. Some particular parts of this vaſt ſtructure are very grand, but want the conveniencies of modern architecture. Seville contains ſeveral fauxbourgs; one of which, called Triana, is on the oppoſite ſide of the river, and the communication with it is by a bridge of boats. In the year 1729, a treaty of peace was concluded here between England, Spain, France and Holland. In the year 1755, this city felt the ſhock of the earthquake which proved ſo fatal to Liſbon; and the cathedral, in particular, ſuffered conſiderably. The celebrated Miguel de Cervantes was a native of this city: 45 miles N. Cadiz. Long. 10. 40. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 37. 12. N.

SHAFTESBURY, or Shaſton, a town of England, in the county of Dorſet. It ſtands in the northern extremity of the county, on the borders of Wiltſhire, on a high hill, difficult of acceſs, except on the eaſt, with an extenſive proſpect over Dorſet, Somerſet, and Wilts. This town is ſuppoſed to have been built in the 8th century, and to have been enlarged by king Alfred, and had 12 churches, beſides a Benedictine monaſtery, in the Saxons' time, but has now only three. St. Edward the Martyr was buried here. It had three mints before the conqueſt, and in the reign of Henry VIII. was the ſee of a biſhop. It was incorporated by queen Elizabeth, and Charles II. and is governed by a mayor, &c. Here are about 320 houſes. Water is ſo ſcarce here, that it uſed to be ſupplied with it from a village in the neighbourhood, but it was furniſhed with water more commodiouſly, in 1718, by means of engines, which raiſed the water above 300 feet perpendicular, and conveyed to a large ciſtern in the middle of the town, from the diſtance of two miles. Yet even this is laid aſide, and they have dug ſeveral pits, in which they preſerve the rain-water; and the poor get their living to this day, by fetching it in pails or on horſes. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 2 miles NE. Dorcheſter, and 102 WSW. London.

SHAFTESBURY, a town of the United States of America, in Vermont: 5 miles N. Benington.

SHAMBLES, or Shingles, a bank of ſand in the Engliſh Channel, near the coaſt of Dorſetſhire, lying about 4 miles eaſt-by-ſouth from Portland Bill, with 14 feet at low water.

SHANKLIN CHINE, a ledge of rocks on the eaſt coaſt of the Iſle of Wight, north of Ludcomb Chine.

SHANNON, the largeſt river in Ireland, and one of the fineſt in the Britiſh Iſles, rolling nearly from north to ſouth 200 miles, and expanding in its courſe, in many places, into deep and ſpacious lakes. Its weſtern banks are formed by the counties of Roſcommon, Galway, and Clare; its eaſtern ones by Leitrim, Longford, King's County, Meath, Tipperary, Limerick, and Kerry. From the city of Limerick to the Atlantic, a diſtance of 20 leagues, it is navigable for the largeſt veſſels, and forms an extenſive lake, being ſeveral leagues in breadth. At ſome diſtance above Limerick, and a little below Killaloe, there is a ledge of rocks which interrupts the navigation of this fine river. Here, however, there is a valuable eel and ſalmon-fiſhery; and from Killaloe to Carrick-on-Shannon, near its ſource, there is an inland navigation, which promiſes the greateſt advantages to the riſing ſtate of Ireland.

SHANNON BRIDGE, a village of Ireland, in the county of Galway.

SHANNON-BRIDGE, a village of Ireland, in the King's County.

SHAPINSHA, one of the Orkney Iſlands, in the North Sea, about 6 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 1½ to 4 from north to ſouth, a little to the north of the eaſt part of Pomona, almoſt in the form of a croſs. The body of the croſs ſtretches from ſouth-weſt to north-eaſt, and the arms from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt. Almoſt around the whole iſland, the ſhores are low, pretty level, and, to a conſiderable diſtance inland, covered with rich fields of graſs and corn. Towards the middle, the land riſes conſiderably higher, and as the hand of induſtry has never diſturbed its repoſe ſince the creation, it exhibits the appearance of a barren waſte, fit only for ſheep paſture. Formerly, there are ſaid to have been near 3000 ſheep in the iſland, and now, owing to a variety of cauſes, they do not exceed the half of that number. The black cattle amount to about 800, and the horſes only to 250. The harbour of Elwick, which is the only one that belongs to this iſland, is as excellent for its extent as almoſt any one in this country. In this harbour, as well as around all the coaſt, it is high water at three quarters of an hour after nine o'clock, when the moon is new and full. It has from four to ſix fathoms water, over a bottom of hard clay, covered with ſand. On the weſt ſide of it is a fine beach, with abundance of excellent freſh water; and as it opens to the ſouth-weſt, it is extremely convenient for ſhips bound to the ſouthward. The boats belonging to this place are about eighty, moſt of which are engaged in fiſhing. The ſummer months are occupied in burning kelp, which is the great manufacture of this country. The men almoſt of the whole iſland, and many of the women, alſo exert themſelves in this ſpecies of induſtry, and their joint efforts ſome ſeaſons produce upwards of 3000 tons, which, at a moderate rate, brings near 20,000l. to the inhabitants. The number of inhabitants is about 730. Long. 0. 28. E. Edinburg. Lat. 58. 55. N.

SHAP, a town of England, in the county of Weſtmoreland, near which are the remains of an abby: 29 miles SSE. Carliſle, and 273. N. London.

Here is a dock-yard, dependent on Chatham: 3 miles N. Queenborough. Lat. 51. 26. N.

SHEESBY MOUNTAINS, mountains of Ireland, in the county of Cork, and barony of Carbery.

SHEFFIELD, a town of England, in the county of York. This town has been noted ſeveral hundred years for cutlers' and ſmiths' manufactures, which were encouraged and advanced by the neighbouring mines of coal, particularly for files, and knives, or whittles; for the laſt of which, eſpecially, it has been a ſtaple for above 300 years; and it is reputed to excel Birmingham in theſe wares, as that does this town in locks, hinges, nails, and poliſhed ſteel. The firſt mills in England for turning grindſtones were alſo ſet up here. The houſes here look black, from the continual ſmoke of the forges. Here are about 600 maſter-cutlers, incorporated by the ſtyle of the cutlers of Hallamſhire, of which this is reckoned the chief town, who employ not leſs than 40,000 perſons in the iron manufactures, and each of the maſters gives a particular ſtamp to his wares. Here is a large market on Tueſday, for many commodities, but eſpecially for corn, which is bought up here for the whole weſt-riding. By means of the river Dun, which is navigable within two or three miles of the town, it receives iron from Hull, and conveys thither its manufactures for exportation to America and the Weſt Indies, as well as various parts of Europe. Its neighbourhood, as well as all this part of the country, abounds with coals. There are alſo at Sheffield lead-works, and a ſilk-mill. The Sheffield manufactures extend ſeveral miles over the country: 31 miles S. Leeds, and 131 N. London.

SHEPHERD'S TOWN, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia: 125 miles WSW. Philadelphia.

SHEPPEY, an iſland of England, in the county of Kent, formed by the Thames, which paſſes on the north, and the Medway, which bounds it on the weſt by the main ſtream, and on the ſouth by the eaſt Swale. It is ſaid to have received its name from the ſheep formerly kept on it, which were remarkable both for their number and the fineneſs of their fleece. The Danes landed twice and plundered it, and once wintered their ſhips in it. It is 21 miles in compaſs, and yields plenty of corn, but is in want of wood. There are ſeveral hillocks in the marſhy parts all over the iſland, which the vulgar call cotterels, ſuppoſed to have been caſt up in memory of the Daniſh leaders buried there. The paſſage hither from the main land is by the King's Ferry. Moſt of the ſprings here are brackiſh; but lately a well was ſunk ſo deep, as to lie below the bed of the ſea, and to furniſh the garriſon of Sheerneſs with freſh water. A great number of marine plants grow in the ſalt marſhes, and, therefore, they are often viſited in the ſummer by the botaniſts. The iſland has one conſtable, who has command of all its pariſhes.

SHEPTON MALLET, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet, conſiderable for its manufactures of woollen cloth, in which at preſent about 4000 hands are daily employed, and this, with a conſiderable manufacture of knit ſtockings, affords a ſufficient object of induſtry to the indigent part of its inhabitants. The pariſh is exceedingly populous; the town tithing contains 967 houſes : 5 miles E. Wells, and 114 W. London.

SHERBORN, a town of England, in the county of York, at the conflux of the Werk and the Ouſe, with a weekly market on Friday : 16 miles S. York, and 181 N. London.

SHERBORN, a town of England, in the county of Dorſet, divided by the river Parret into two parts, called Sherborn and the Caſtle Town, in which latter are a church, and a market. The ſee of a biſhop was fixed here, in 704, by Ina, king of the Weſt Saxons; in which there ſat twenty-five biſhops ſucceſſively, till the 11th century, when after being united with the biſhopric of Sunning, it was removed to Sarum ; whereupon the county of Dorſet was made a part of that dioceſe, till Henry VIII. erected a new ſee at Briſtol, to which dioceſe it has belonged ever ſince. Soon after the tranſlation of the ſee, the cathedral was converted into an abby; the church is a moſt magnificent ſtructure both within and without, being the beſt in the county, and ſo much prized by the inhabitants at the reformation, that it is ſaid they bought it, and pulled down three churches and four chapels about the town to ſave it. Roger, the third biſhop of Saliſbury, built a caſtle here, in that part ever ſince called Caſtle Town: but king Stephen, incenſed at the biſhop's pride, ſeized it, and his ſucceſſors kept it until the year 1350, when it was recovered from the crown by Robert Wyvil, a biſhop of more courage than learning. This was the firſt caſtle that was formerly beſieged in the civil wars, and the laſt that held out for Charles I. It is now the property of the earl of Digby. The markets are on Tueſday and Saturday. The inhabitants had formerly a good trade in medley cloth ; but now ſilk-throwing is the chief manufacture : 18 miles NNW. Dorcheſter, and 118 WSW. London.

SHERBURN, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts, ſituated in Nantucket Iſland.

SHEREZUR, a town of Aſia, in Curdiſtan, and reſidence of a Turkiſh pacha : 260 miles SE. Diarbek, and 350 WNW. Iſpahan.

SHERIFFMUIR, or Sheriff Moor, a plain of Scotland, near the Grampian Mountains, in the county of Perth, where a bloody battle was fought between the army of George I. and the rebels, under the earl of Mar. See Dumblaine.

SHERMA, or Cherma, a province of the empire of Morocco, to the ſouth-weſt of the province of Morocco.

SHERSHELL, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Algiers, generally ſuppoſed to be the city called Jol, and by the younger Juba named Cæſarea, in compliment to Auguſtus. This town, when Dr. Shaw ſaw it, in the year 1730, was in great reputation for making ſteel, earthen veſſels, and ſuch iron tools as are wanted in the neighbourhood ; but a few years afterwards (1738) it was entirely thrown down by an earthquake. The ruins upon which this town was ſituated, are not inferior in extent to thoſe of Carthage; and we may likewiſe conceive no ſmall opinion of its former magnificence, from the fine pillars, capitals, capacious ciſterns, and beautiful moſaic pavements, that are every where remaining. They have a tradition, that the ancient city was deſtroyed, as the new one was lately, by an earthquake ; and that the port, formerly very large and commodious, was deſtroyed by the arſenal and other adjacent buildings being thrown into it by the ſhock. The cothon, or artificial harbour, that had a communication with the weſtern part of the port, is the beſt proof of this tradition. For when the ſea is calm, and the water low (as it frequently happens after ſtrong ſouth or eaſt winds) all over the area of it ſo many maſſy pillars and pieces of great walls may be ſeen, that it cannot well be conceived how they ſhould come there without ſuch a concuſſion. The port is nearly of a circular form, of 200 yards in diameter; but the ſecureſt part of it, which, till of late, was towards the cothon, is now filled up with a bank of ſand, that daily increaſes. However, there ſtill lies in the mouth of it a ſmall rocky iſland, which at preſent is the main ſhelter and defence againſt the northern tempeſt. Long. 2. 36. E. Greenwich. Lat. 36. 35. N.

SHERWOOD FOREST, a foreſt of England, in the weſt part of the county of Nottingham.

SHETLAND ISLANDS, a collection of iſlands in the North Atlantic Ocean, ſituated to the north of Scotland. They are reckoned to be forty-ſix in number, beſides forty ſmaller, called Holms, which produce paſture, and as many barren. Only one, called Shetland or Mainland, is of any conſiderable ſize. They are included in the county of Orkney; in general rocky and barren, and many of them without inhabitants. Shetland, the principal iſland, otherwiſe called Mainland, is about ſeventy miles in length, but ſo interſected with bays, here called Voes, on its coaſt every way, that no part of it is above five miles from the ſea ; ſome theſe form ſafe commodious harbours, capable of receiving veſſels of the largeſt ſize: t face of the country is covered with craggy mountains, interſperſed with fe tile ſpots and moraſſes ; no trees are found, or ſhrubs, except heath and j niper : the ſea and voos abound in fiſh, and on the rocky coaſts are foun a variety of water-fowls and amphibious animals, ſuch as ſeals and otter the principal fiſh are cod, turbot, and haddock, and, eſpecially at certai ſeaſons, herrings, purſued by whales and other fiſh of prey. Of ſhell-fiſ the chief are lobſters, oyſters, and muſcles. Moſt of the fiſhing banks a thirty or forty miles from the coaſt. On the hills are paſtured ſome ſhee of a ſmall ſize, and of a ragged appearance, which yet furniſh a fine ſort wool : the horſes are remarkably ſmall, and are named, from their countr Shelties. A mine of copper, and another of iron, have been diſcovered and are wrought, and in ſeveral parts quarries of ſtone are found, fre ſtone, and limeſtone. Turf and peat are the chief fuel. Coals there ar none. The principal fiſhery of the inhabitants is that of cod ; the herrin fiſhery is carried on almoſt wholly by foreigners, 200 buſſes from Hollan 50 from Denmark, 40 from Pruſſia, 20 from Dunkirk, and about th ſame number from the Netherlands, are employed every ſummer in thi fiſhery. They generally put into Breſſay Sound before the fiſhery, which with the Dutch in particular, does not commence until the 24th of June The Dutch formerly carried on this fiſhery far more extenſively than no It has been on the decline with them ever ſince the year 1703, They ha then about 500 buſſes in Shetland, under the convoy of four ſhips of wa commanded by an admiral ; but a French fleet of ſix ſhips of war, ſe out for the purpoſe, fell in with the Dutch ſhips of war ; and an engagement taking place, the Dutch admiral's ſhip was ſunk, on which the re maining three ran away, and made their eſcape. Whereupon the Frenc fleet ſailed for the entry of Breſſay Sound, ſent their boats into the ba and burned and deſtroyed about 400 of the Dutch fiſhing veſſels, ſparin only a number barely ſufficient to carry home the crews of the whole. Th annual export of kelp from the whole country, does not exceed 200 ton Doubtleſs more might be made ; but the quantity muſt ſtill be inconſidera ble, the ſhores being ſteep, and the fall of water not exceeding ſix or ſeve feet of perpendicular height, even with ſpring tides. The ebb tides he run north, and the flood tides to the ſouthward, unleſs on the north an ſouth extremities of the country, where they run eaſt and weſt ; their ra pidity is inconſiderable, at leaſt when compared to that of the friths Orkney. There is no light-houſe in Shetland ; nor is there any chart the country extant that can be depended on. A light-houſe, erected Noſs, a ſmall iſland eaſt from Breſſay, might be of eſſential ſervice, many ſhips have been loſt on the eaſt coaſt of Shetland, eſpecially withi theſe laſt twenty years, that ſuch a light-houſe in all probability migh have ſaved. Some of the moſt remarkable of theſe are the following :—I 1775, a Liverpool ſhip, two men only ſaved out of twenty-four. In 177 the Ceres, of London, Greenland ſhip, was loſt, with her whole crew. I 1779, a Dutch Greenland ſhip loſt, one of the crew ſaved. In 1780, Ruſſian man of war, of thirty-ſix guns, on her way from Archangel t the Baltic loſt, and of her whole crew only five men ſaved. In 1786, th Concordia, a Daniſh Eaſt India ſhip, with a valuable cargo, outwar bound, loſt, and only fifteen of her crew ſaved. In 1789, a Dutch Greenland ſhip loſt, of her crew only five ſaved. Lerwick is the capital. Th other chief iſlands are Breſſay, Wallſey, Yell, Fitlar, and Unſt. Th whole of the iſlands extend from Long. 1. to 2. 30. E. Edinburgh. La 59. 45. to 61. 10. N.

SHIANSHIA, a town of Egypt : 25 miles S. Manſora.

SHIANT ISLANDS, a cluſter of ſmall iſlands, among the weſter iſlands of Scotland ; about 7 miles from the ſouth-eaſt of Lewis.

SHIELDS (North), a town of England, in the county of Northumberland, ſituated on the north ſide of the Tyne ; which, in the beginning the reign of Edward I. conſiſted only of ſix fiſhermens' huts. The churc was built in 1659 ; and at this time upwards of 400 veſſels are loaded annually at this port : 7½ miles ENE. Newcaſtle, and 279 N. London.

SHIELDS (South), or Shields, a village of England, in the county Durham, on the ſouth ſide of the Tyne. Though only a village, is ver populous, and participates in the trade of Newcaſtle, as well as its neighbouring town on the oppoſite ſhore ; where, alſo, many of the largeſt co liers take in their lading. At this place, alſo, are many ſhips built ; a many ſhips alſo belong to it. This ſide of the Tyne is in the county Durham. It is a place very famous for its ſalt-works, having more tha 200 pans, and great quantities of ſalt are boiled and made here ; its glaſ works, alſo, are a diſtinguiſhed manufactory. On both banks of this r ver are, alſo, many convenient houſes, for the accommodation and ente tainment of ſeamen and colliers ; for moſt of the Newcaſtle coal-fleet ha uſually their ſtation here, till their coals are brought down in barges a lighters from Newcaſtle.

SHREWSBURY, a town of United America, in the ſtate of Maſſachuſetts: 32 miles W. Boſton.

SHREWSBURY, a town of England, and capital of the county of Salop, or Shropſhire, ſituated on a peninſula, formed by the river Severn, originally built by the Britons, in the 6th century. In the time of Alfred, it was called a city. In the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, here was a mint. Roger de Montgomery, to whom it fell by gift from the conqueror, built a caſtle on a riſing cliff facing the north, for which purpoſe he pulled down near fifty houſes; and his ſon Robert, revolting from Henry I. walled round the ſide where it is not defended by the river The caſtle was defended by William Fitz-Allan, for the empreſs Matilda, againſt king Stephen, who made himſelf maſter of it by aſſault. Only one part, with two round towers, remains, and the walls on the north-eaſt. The inſide is cleared from buildings, and the keep made a garden, with a beautiful view. The town walls, on the ſouth-eaſt ſides, are kept in good repair, and form pleaſant walks; thoſe on the north weſt ſide are entirely covered with houſes. The ſtreets are ſpacious, but irregularly built, and ſome ſteep. In the early Norman times, it was ſufficiently inhabited and frequented. According to the ſurvey of England, it paid a yearly tax of 7l. 16s. 10d. and had 252 citizens, of whom twelve were bound to keep guard before the kings of England when they were in this city, and as many to attend them when they went hunting. In the reign of Henry III. it was burned by the Welch. In the reign of Edward I. a parliament was held here, and another in the reign of Richard II. In the year 1403, a bloody battle was fought near this town, in a place called Battlefield, between Henry IV. and Percy, ſurnamed Hotſpur, in which the former proved victorious. Percy was ſlain, and, on both ſides, upwards of 2000 gentlemen were left dead on the field. In the year 1551, the ſweating-ſickneſs, which proved ſo fatal through the whole kingdom, is ſaid to have made its appearance firſt in this town. Shrewſbury was eminent for its loyalty to Charles I. who, after ſetting up his ſtandard at Nottingham, and finding no encouragement there, removed to Shrewſbury, being invited by the gentry of the town and country round; where he was received with ſuch a general affection and hearty zeal, that his majeſty recovered himſelf from the diſcouragement of his firſt ſtep at Nottingham, and raiſed and completed a ſtrong army in leſs time than could be imagined; inſomuch, that, to the ſurprize of the parliament, and, indeed, of all the world, he was in the field, before them, and advanced upon them ſo faſt, that he met them two-thirds on his way to London, and gave them battle at Edgehill, near Banbury. But the fate of the war turning afterwards againſt the king, the weight of it fell heavy upon this town, and almoſt ruined it. But they are now fully recovered, and it is one of the moſt flouriſhing towns in England. Here is a ſchool, firſt founded and endowed by king Edward VI. by the name of the Free Grammar School. Queen Elizabeth rebuilt it from the ground, and endowed it more largely. The abby was built in the year 1085, and dedicated to St. Peter and Paul. It was ſuppreſſed at the reformation, of which nothing now remains but the weſt part, from the croſs aiſle to the weſt tower, and the ſtone roof of this part fallen down. The market-days for corn, cattle, and proviſions, are Wedneſdays and Saturdays; and every Thurſday is the market for Welch cottons, frizes, and flannels; of which here are ſold as much as come to 1000l. a week, one with another. The magiſtracy conſiſts of a mayor, recorder, ſteward, town-clerk, 24 aldermen, and 48 common council men, who have their ſword-bearer, 3 ſerjeants at mace, and other inferior officers. The corporation has a power of trying cauſes within itſelf, even ſuch as are capital, except for high treaſon. Shrewſbury ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. There are about 2000 houſes, and 12,000 inhabitants in Shrewſbury. About 20 veſſels are conſtantly employed on the river Severn, between Shrewſbury, Glouceſter, and Briſtol: 41 miles S. Cheſter, and 160 NW. London.

SHREWSBURY, a river of the United Stater of America, in Jerſey, which runs into the ſea, 3 miles S. Sandy Hook.

SHROPSHIRE, or Salop, a county of England, bounded on the north by Flintſhire and Cheſhire; on the eaſt by Staffordſhire; on the ſouth by Herefordſhire, Worceſterſhire, and Radnorſhire; and on the weſt by Montgomeryſhire and Denbighſhire; about 40 miles in length, and 36 in its greateſt breadth. It is divided into 15 hundreds, which contain 15 towns and 170 pariſhes. Before Wales was annexed to England, there were 32 caſtles of defence on the frontiers of this county. The river Severn runs through it, from north-weſt to ſouth, dividing the counties into two parts, and is navigable for boats in every part. Along the banks are meadows, which produce excellent hay, and ſome good corn land. The ſoil in the other parts of the county is various, moſtly ſhallow, ſome on clay, others on rock, with extenſive tracts of hills; but neither chalk nor flint are found. Coal pits are numerous, and there are ſome good mines of iron and lead, with quarries of limeſtone, freeſtone, and in ſeveral places pipe-makers' clay. The towns are Shrewſbury, Ludlow, Bridgenorth, Wenloch, Biſhop's-Caſtle, Church-Stretton, Cleobury, Drayton, Elleſmere, Newport, Oſweſtry, Shefnal, Wellington, Wem, and Whitchurch. The four firſt and the county ſend two members each to the Britiſh parliament.

SIAM, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by Ava; on the eaſt by Camboja and Laos; on the ſouth, by that part of the Eaſtern Indian Sea called the Gulf of Siam, and Malacca; and on the weſt by the Bay of Bengal; about 800 miles from north to ſouth, and 200 to 350 in breadth. The kingdom of Siam is divided into the Upper and Lower. The Upper, which lies to the north, contains ſeven provinces, denominated from their chief cities: Proſelouk, Sanquelouk, Lakontay, Kampeng-pet, Kakonrepina, Peſhebon, and Pihay. In the Lower or Southern Siam, they reckon the provinces of Jor, Patany, Ligor, Tenaſſerim, Chantebon, Petelong, or Bordelong, and Chiay. The country may be divided into cultivated and uncultivated lands, of which latter it for the moſt part conſiſts; being covered with woods. The moſt profitable trees to the Siameſe, are thoſe which produce cotton, oil, and varniſh. Their varniſh is very good. The foreſts afford timber for building ſhips and houſes, for wainſcotting and carving. The iron-wood grows here very heavy and tough, of which anchors are made; and a ſpecies of wood as light as fir, and of the ſame colour, but more fit for carving, as it never ſplinters under the chiſſel. The Siameſe have alſo trees ſo tall and ſtraight, that it is ſaid one alone is ſufficient to make a boat, or balon, ſixteen or twenty fathom long. They have the cinnamon-tree, the beſt next to that of Ceylon; ſapan, and other woods proper for dying; the aquila, or aloes-wood. From the number of ſtatues, and other caſt works, great number of which are of gold, as well as from the gilded roofs of their temples, one would imagine that Siam muſt be rich in mines: however, they have of late ſought in vain for mines, either of gold or ſilver. The king had made a metal called tambuk, by mixing a little gold with copper. M. Vincent, a French phyſician, diſcovered a mine of very good iron, and another of cryſtal; together with antimony, emeril, and other mineral, beſides a quarry of white marble. They have plenty of lead and tin, called kalin, which is ſold throughout India. It is ſoft, and not well purified; but to render it whiter and harder, they mix it with kadmia, a mineral eaſily reduced to powder; and it is this white tin which is called totuinague. The kadmia melted with copper, makes it yellow; but both metals become more brittle by the mixture. There are mountains of loadſtone, and ſome mountains afford very curious agate. The land of Siam ſeems to be formed by the mud deſcending from the mountains; to which mud, and the over-flowing of the river, the ſoil owes its fertility; for, in the higher places, and parts not covered by the inundation, all is dried up and burnt with the ſun, ſoon after the rains are over. Thoſe parts are likewiſe ſubject to contagious diſtempers, and the annoyance of inſects, which the overflowings deſtroy. However, the ants, to avoid the water, make their neſts in trees; partridges and pigeons obey the ſame inſtict of nature. Among the inſects are the white ants, the maringowins, a kind of gnats, the millipes, and little ſhining flies. The Siameſe reckon only three ſeaſons in the year: winter, little ſummer, and great ſummer. The firſt, which laſts but two months, anſwers our December and January; the ſecond ſeaſon is compoſed of the three following months, and the other ſeven form the great ſummer. Rice, called kaow, is the principal grain, and chief food of the Siameſe: this is the produce of the low lands; but wheat grows in thoſe which eſcape the inundation. Theſe lands they refreſh with watering-pots, or by overflowing them with rain water, kept in ciſterns, raiſed on higher grounds. But whether it coſts more to rear it, or is not ſo well liked as rice, the king only uſes it; and that, perhaps, more out of curioſity, than for any other reaſon. Turkey-wheat is found in Siam, but reared only in gardens. Their way is to boil or parch the whole ear, and then eat the inſide. They have peas and other legumes, but different from the European. Moſt of the herbs with which Europeans compoſe ſallads, were unknown to them: however, the ſoil of Siam may be proper for them, ſince they thrive about Batavia. Siam, conſidering its extent, is but indifferently peopled; it is at preſent inhabited chiefly along the rivers; the country being almoſt entirely overgrown with woods; which, in all likelihood, would not be the caſe, were the inhabitants as numerous as they are in ſome of the neighbouring countries. The Siameſe are ſober and reſpectful to the aged; begging is diſhonourable, and theft infamous; adultery is very rare. In perſon they are rather ſmall than large, but ſtraight and well-proportioned: their faces rather ſquare than oval, and their cheek bones large: they all go naked, except a piece of calico or ſilk, called pagne, two or three ells in length, girded round their loins and thighs. The furniture of their houſes is ſimple, as their dreſs and diet; and the houſes themſelves, conſtructed of bamboo, are erected upon poſts above the ſurface of the ground, to guard againſt inundations: their uſual diet conſiſts chiefly of rice and fiſh; but notwithſtanding their temperance, their lives are not longer than in Europe; fluxes and dyſenteries, with other epidemical diſeaſes, annually carry off great numbers. The Siameſe women are ſometimes mothers at twelve years of age, and ſeldom bear children after they are forty. The religion of Siam is nearly the ſame with that of Laos. The kings are perfectly deſpotic. Juthia or Siam is the capital.

SIBERIA, a country of Aſia. The name of Siberia or Sibiria originally applied, and ſtill properly belongs only to the ſouth part of government of Toboliſk: But, in a more extenſive ſenſe, it now includ all the northern part of Aſia, which is bounded on the north by the Froz Ocean, on the eaſt by the North Pacific Ocean, on the ſouth by Tartar and on the weſt by Ruſſia. Its length, from weſt to eaſt, is ſomethi above 3000 miles; and the breadth, from north to ſouth, about 1200. S beria ſeems to derive its name from an old city called Siber, which, accord ing to a received tradition, ſtood on the right ſide of the river Irtiſch, abo 18 verſts from Toboliſk, and was the reſidence of the ancient ſovereigns Siberia. This city alſo, probably, gave name to the river Sibirka, whi in this province, falls into the Irtiſch. There are ſtill ſome ruins of a ra part to be ſeen on the ſpot, but no other remains of a city. The air Siberia is in general extremely piercing; and we learn from authentic obſervations, that the cold is more ſevere than in any other part of the Ruſſi dominions. The Siberian rivers are frozen very early, and it is late in t ſpring before the ice is thawed. The ſnow often falls in September, and frequently ſeen on the ground in May. If the corn does not come to ma rity in Auguſt, there is little hopes of a harveſt in this country; and, ſome parts, it is ſometimes covered with ſnow before the peaſants can re it. The earth is never thawed to any conſiderable depth in Siberia. M Gmelin, having, on the 18th of June, Old Style, cauſed the earth to dug near Yakutzk, where the ground was high, found the depth thawed be ſcarcely four feet from the ſurface; and in low places, it did not exce three feet. Near Fort Arguniſk, which is but a little beyond the fiftieth d gree of north latitude, the inhabitants acquainted him, that, in ſever places, the ſoil was not thawed to above the depth of an ell and a half and that this internal froſt made it very difficult to come at any ſpring Mr. Gmelin obſerved, that the quickſilver ſunk to a hundred and twen degrees of Fahrenheit's ſcale at Eniſeiſk, which is a degree of cold ne felt hitherto in any country of the globe. But Providence ſeems the mo liberally to have dealt out to the inhabitants of this country wood fuel, and furs, which they make uſe of to preſerve them againſt the ſeverity of the weather. Even ice itſelf is, by them, in ſome meaſure, converted into a fence againſt the cold: for, in the northern parts, particularly at Yakutzk, it is uſual to hew a piece of tranſparent ice of the ſize of the hole which ſerves the peaſants for a window; and, having placed it on the outſide, they ſprinkle a little water at the edges, which immediately freezes, and cements the ice into the hole. This ice-window keeps out the wind and cold, without much diminiſhing the light. Thoſe who have glaſs-windows beſides, place them on the inſide of the hole that the houſe may not be incommoded by the cold and moiſt effluvia of the ice; but this inconveniency the common people do not regard. Beer is ſeldom known to freeze in the cellars, when the holes for admitting the light are thus ſtopped with a piece of ice. As the winter-days in the north parts of Siberia laſt but a few hours, and the ſtorms and flakes of ſnow darken the air ſo much that the inhabitants, even at noon, cannot ſee to do any thing without artificial lights, they ſleep away the greateſt part of that ſeaſon. Theſe ſevere winters are ſucceded by warm and delightful ſummers; and the heat is ſo intenſe, that the Tunguſians, who inhabit the province of Yakutzk, go almoſt naked. Here is hardly any night during that ſeaſon; and towards the Frozen Ocean, the ſun continually appears above the horizon. The vegetables and fruits of the earth are extremely quick in their growth. Thunder is ſeldom heard near the Ice-ſea, on the coaſt of which the thunder-claps are ſaid to be ſo faint, as ſcarcely to ſtrike the ear; but the lightning may be ſeen very plainly in that climate. On the contrary, the ſouth part of Siberia is ſubject to very dreadful tempeſts. In the north part of Siberia, neither corn nor fruit grows; ſo that the whole tract of land that lies beyond the ſixtieth degree of latitude, is a barren waſte: However, barley is frequently known to come to perfection in Yakutzk. On this account, the inhabitants of thoſe northern parts are obliged to live on fleſh and fiſh; but the Ruſſians are ſupplied with corn from the ſouthern; for, in thoſe parts of Siberia, the fertility is ſurpriſing. The countries that lie beyond the lake of Baikal, eſpecially towards the eaſt, as far as the river Argun, are remarkably fertile and pleaſant; but, by the indolence of the inhabitants, ſeveral fruitful tracts of land, which would make ample returns to the peaſant for cultivating them, lie neglected. The paſtures are excellent; and one meets with vaſt numbers of fine horned cattle, horſes, goats, &c. in this country, on which the Tartars chiefly depend for ſubſiſtence. However, there are ſeveral barren waſtes, and unimproveable tracts in theſe parts, and not one fruit-tree to be ſeen. As for vegetables, here is a great variety; and in ſeveral places, particularly near Kraſnoiarſk, the ground is, as it were, over-run with aſparagus, of an extraordinary height, and delicious flavour. The bulbs of the Turkiſh bundes, and other ſorts of lilies, is much uſed by the Tartars inſtead of bread. Their want of fruit, &c. is richly compenſated by the great plenty of tame and wild beaſts and fowls, and the vaſt variety of fine fiſh, among which are the ſturgeon and the ſterled, which this country affords. In that part of Siberia which lies near the Frozen-ſea, and ſeveral other places, no trees, but ſhrubs and buſhes, grow; but the greateſt part of this country produces large woods of pine, larch, and other trees. Not to mention the great quantity of wild-fowl, as moor-hens, partridges, woodcocks, and ſnipes; here is an incredible number of wild quadrupeds; ſome of which are eatable, and others valuable for their ſkins or furs. The animals whoſe ſkins are moſt valued, are the black fox, the ſable, the hyæna, the ermine, the ſquirrel, the beaver, and the lynx. The ſkin of a real black fox is more valuable than even that of a ſable. In the country that lies near the Frozen Ocean, are alſo found blue and white foxes. The fineſt ſables come from Nertchinſk and Yakutzk; where thoſe animale are caught by the inhabitants in the mountains of Stannowoi. Krebet has ſtill other, and more valuable treaſures, than what we have yet enumerated. The ſilver mines of Argun are very rich, and the ſilver they produce yields ſome gold. Both ſilver and gold are likewiſe found among the copper ore of Kolivan. This country is alſo particularly rich in copper and iron ore. The former lies even on the ſurface of the earth; and ſeveral mountains are full of it; and, not to mention ſeveral others, the diſtrict of Kraſnoiarſk affords ſeveral copper-mines. Iron is ſtill more plentiful there, and of a very good ſort; from the copper and iron ſmelting-houſes ſeveral hundred thouſand of puds are annually exported. Theſe works belong partly to the crown, and partly to private perſons. Several ſorts of precious ſtones are alſo found in Siberia. The topazes of this country have ſuch a fine luſtre, that he muſt be a very good judge who can diſtinguiſh a Siberian from an Oriental topaz. Single ſmall pieces of agate are found near the Argun, in open ſandy places, and on the banks of other rivers and lakes; here are alſo cornelians, and green jaſper with red veins. The famous marienglas, or lapis ſpecularis, is dug up in great quantities in Siberia; this is a particular ſpecies of tranſparent ſtone, in ſtrata, like ſo many ſheets of paper; and is by ſome called Muſcovy, or Ruſſian glaſs, and by others, leſs properly, iſinglaſs. Siberia affords magnets of an extraordinary ſize, and even whole mountains of loadſtone. Pit-coal is dug up in the north parts of this country. The kamennoie maſlo, a yellowiſh kind of alum, is found in ſeveral mountains of Siberia. It is remarkable, that Siberia contains not only freſh-water-lakes, of which there are a great number in this country, but alſo ſeveral lakes whoſe waters are ſalt: and that its lakes are ſubject to very ſurpriſing alterations, a freſh-water lake being ſometimes changed into a ſaline, and a ſaline lake into a freſh one. Some lakes alſo dry up, and others break out in places where none were ever ſeen before. Salt-water brooks, ſaline ſprings, and a hill of ſalt, are alſo to be met with in Siberia. Siberia affords a great many other things that deſerve attention; and therefore they muſt not entirely eſcape our notice. That excellent root called rhubarb, grows in vaſt quantities in the neighbourhood of Selenginſk. The curious mamont's bones and horns, as they are called, which are found along the banks of the Oby, Eniſei, Lena, and Irtiſch. Some of the teeth or horns weigh ſix or ſeven puds, of thirty-ſix pounds each. The colour of them is like that of ivory, excepting a few of them, which are yellowiſh, brown, or of a black inclining to blue; and this, probably, is owing to their long continuance in the earth. The inhabitants of Siberia conſiſt of three ſorts of people, namely, the Aborigines or ancient inhabitants, the Tartars, and the Ruſſians. Of the two firſt, ſome have no other religion but that of nature; others are Pagans and Mahometans; and ſome of them have been converted to Chriſtianity, or rather only baptized by the Ruſſian miſſionaries. The Aborigines, or firſt inhabitants, conſiſt of the Wogulitzians or Wogulians, who live in the province of Tobolſk, and may more properly be claſſed here than among the Tartars. Theſe, by living among the Ruſſians, in a conſtant intercourſe of trade, &c. before the latter had conquered this country, are more civilized than the other Siberian nations. They have ſome notion of a God, or the creator and preſerver of all things. They believe a reſurrection of the dead, and a future ſtate of rewards and puniſhments; which important articles they probably received from the Ruſſians. The Samoides, who live in the diſtrict of Eniſeiſk; the Yuraki, a numerous tribe of Samoides, who inhabit the ſea-coaſt; and farther up the continent, between the rivers Eniſei and Oby; the Oſtiaks or Aſtaks, who call themſelves Conti or Koni-yung. and by the Tartars are ſtyled Yſhtuk, are divided into the Oſtiaks of Narim, Eniſei, Oby, Surgut, Irtiſch, &c.; the Barabinzians, who live on both ſides of the river Irtiſch; the Tunguſians, or rather Tingiſians; this populous nation is ſcattered far and wide in the government of Irkutzk; the Buratts or Buratians, whom the Ruſſians call Bratſki, differ from the Tunguſians only in their language, which has a great affinity with that of the Mongalians; they formerly lived on the ſouth-ſide of the Baikal lake; but, towards the cloſe of the laſt century, they gradually removed to the north of the government of Irkutſk. About the year 1644, a handful of Coſaks, ſent from Kraſnoiarſk, perſuaded them, by fair words, without ſtriking a blow, to become ſubjects of Ruſſia. The Jakutians, who, as to their features, very much reſemble the Calmuks, and, in their manner of living, are not very different from the other pagan nations we have been ſpeaking of; the Yukagirians, who live near the Frozen-Sea, and moſtly among the mountains; theſe are a tribe of the Jakatians. The Tſhukſhians, who live in the north-weſt part of Siberia, wear the tooth of a wallcroſs in each cheek, which are inſerted in the fleſh from their childhood. The ſecond principal claſs of inhabitants who live in this country, are the Tartars; theſe are the moſt civilized of all the foreign nations in Siberia; and thoſe Tartars who are Mahometans, are ſtill more ſo than the Pagan Tartars; of theſe there are many different hords or nations. The third principal claſs of inhabitants who live in Siberia, are the Ruſſians, of whom great numbers have ſettled here ſince the conqueſt of this country; but moſt of them, from time to time, fled to Siberia from other provinces; ſince their eſtabliſhment, they have founded a great many towns, oſtrogs, and villages, which, according to their cuſtom, are built and fortified with timber. Moſt of the villages are called after the names of the peaſants by whom they were firſt built, and but few from the rivulets on which they ſtand. The Siberian dialect in the villages is very different from the language commonly ſpoken in Ruſſia, and is corrupted with abundance of words never uſed in that country. Sauntering, drunkenneſs, and debauchery, univerſally prevail throughout all Siberia, ſo that in many parts of it, one meets with few perſons who are free from the venereal diſtemper. Dr. Buſching ſays, the notion believed and propagated by foreigners, that the criminals exiled by the Ruſſian court to Siberia, whoſe number is very conſiderable, are obliged, daily, or weekly, to catch, and deliver in, a certain number of ſables, is a vulgar error; for that is an exerciſe to which they are little accuſtomed. Theſe unhappy exiles are diſpoſed of in the following manner:—ſome, who are ſent hither as ſtate priſoners, are ſtrongly guarded in fortified houſes, and maintained at the expence of the crown; others enjoy their liberty, but under ſome reſtrictions: others again are ſent hither into ſlavery, to work in the mines, fortifications, &c. Several decayed merchants, who are exiled to Siberia, as debtors to the crown, meet with more favourable opportunities of getting money, and gradually retrieving their affairs, than if they had continued in Ruſſia; and they are not debarred from theſe opportunities when they offer. To ſuch induſtrious perſons, Siberia muſt be looked upon rather as a deſirable and advantageous country, than a wretched place of baniſhment. A very conſiderable trade is carried on in Siberia, which is much facilitated by the many navigable rivers that water every part of this country. By means of their commerce with the Chineſe, foreign European goods are often ſold in the towns of Siberia, nearly at the ſame rate as at Peterſburgh and Moſcow. There is not a city in Ruſſia, from which merchants do not travel to Siberia with foreign goods. Theſe traders diſpoſe of their commodities partly among the inhabitants of the Siberian towns, but moſtly to the Chineſe merchants, who frequent the great yearly fairs in Siberia, and purchaſe ſome of their commodities in return. All Siberia is at preſent under the Ruſſian dominion, and was reduced under that government about the cloſe of the 16th century, in the following manner: In the reign of the czar Iwan Baſilowitz II. and Feoder Iwanowitz, his ſucceſſor, Jermak Timiofevitz, a Don-Coſak, at the head of ſome thouſands of Coſaks, terribly ravaged the countries which lie about the rivers Oka and Volga, ſacking and plundering the towns, and deſtroying every thing before him. But at laſt, he was driven to ſuch extremities by the troops ſent againſt him, that his retreat to the country of the Coſaks was cut off. After a loſs of the greateſt part of his army, he croſſed the rivers Kama and Tſhuſowaia, and by the aſſiſtance of a certain ſtrobinow, who was a ſovereign of a vaſt tract of land near the Tſhuſowaia, he embarked with the eight hundred Coſaks ſtill remaining, and other auxiliaries, on the river Tura; laid ſiege to the town of Onzigidin, at preſent called Tiumen, and made himſelf maſter of it. He afterwards even took the city of Toboiſk, out of which he drove the Kuzium Kan. Theſe two were then the only towns in Siberia. Jermak had, indeed, got them into his power: but he very well perceived that he ſhould not be able to keep in awe the vaſt number of Mahometan Tartars who inhabited this country. This induced him to ſend to Moſcow, Altanai Sultan, ſon to the Kuſium Kan, whom he had taken priſoner, with a tender of his conqueſt to the Ruſſian court, on condition that the Czar ſhould grant him a free pardon. This favour was eaſily obtained, and a good body of troops were ſent to take poſſeſſion of the country. From this epoch, the Ruſſians have been continually extending their dominions in Siberia. Soon after, Jermak, being on an expedition with ſome ſhips on the river Irtiſch, was, in the night-time, ſurpriſed by the Tartars, and, with moſt of his people, cut to pieces: his memory is, to this day, held in great veneration in Siberia. As the Coſaks had been the inſtruments of his conqueſt, his honour was conferred upon them; namely, that all troops kept up by the Ruſſians, in Siberia, ſhould be incorporated with the Coſaks, and bear their name: hence the Siberian militia, to this day, are ſtyled Coſaks. Siberia is now divided into the governments of Tobolſk, Kolivan, and Irkutſk, which are again ſubdivided into provinces and diſtricts.

SICILY, an iſland in the Mediterranean; anciently, if we may give credit to the ancients, joined to the continent of Italy, from which it is now ſeparated by the Straits of Meſſina, about ſeven miles acroſs. It is the largeſt of all the iſlands in the Mediterranean, being about 156 miles in length, and 85 in breadth. Sicily, on account of its form being ſomewhat triangular, was called Trinacria and Triquetra, The ancient name of this iſland was Sicania, from its inhabitants, the Sicanii; but the Sic coming hither, and making themſelves maſters of the greateſt part of th iſland, gave it the name of Sicilia. In ſucceeding ages, ſome Grecian co lonies ſettled here, and, ſpreading over a great part of the country, the language, for a long time, was the vernacular dialect, till, at laſt, th iſland fell under the dominion of the Romans. Sicily is ſo hot a country that even in the beginning of January the ſhade is refreſhing; and it only for a few days in March that any chilling winds are felt, and then little fire ſuffices to baniſh the cold. The only appearance of winter toward the ſummit of Mount Etna, where ſnow falls, and is preſerved b the inhabitants. They dig pits in the open air, and in them lay the ſno with ſtraw or ſtubble, and ſalt, ſtratum ſuper ſtratum, and then again cov the place with earth. In ſummer, when ſnow is wanted to cool liquor one of theſe heaps of earth is opened on one ſide, and the quantity ſnow required being taken out, the hole is immediately cloſed. Thoug the iſland appears as one entire rock, the ſoil is exceedingly fertile; a ciently, it was ſtyled the granary of Rome, and, at preſent, amidſt a ſu ficient plenty of grain for home conſumption, it exports great quantiti to the kingdom of Naples, which otherwiſe would be diſtreſſed. It i however, far from being ſo well cultivated as formerly; ſeveral tracts l ing waſte, eſpecially in the weſtern part. Its wine is excellent, as are al the fruits of moſt kinds, in which it abounds, together with oil, hone ſalt, ſaffron, and ſugar: the latter chiefly produced in the neighbourhoo of Mount Ætna. All the coaſts afford good fiſheries, particularly f tunnies; the cattle are very fine, and all ſorts of game are in conſiderab plenty. Great profits are made of ſilk, the cultivation of which was fi introduced in the year 1130, by Roger, who, returning from an expeditio into the Holy Land, and in which he had taken Athens, Corinth, a Thebes, brought back with him ſome perſons well verſed in the managi of ſilk; hence it ſoon ſpread into Naples, the Milaneſe, Spain, a the French provinces bordering on Italy. In this iſland are found ge and valuable ſtones, as agate, porphyry, jaſper, lapis lazuli, marble, a alabaſter; and it is no leſs rich in metals and minerals, as gold, ſilve copper, tin, lead, iron, and alum, with medicinal ſprings. Different co lonies, from Greece, formed different ſtates, the moſt powerful of whi was Syracuſa. The Romans and the Carthaginians a long time diſput the ſovereignty; the Romans, at length, became conquerors, and Sici was ſubject to them till the year 440, when the iſland was invaded by t Vandals, who were driven away by Belliſarius, and it became a part of t Eaſtern empire till the year 828. It was then conquered by the Saracen who, in their turn, were driven out by a Norman prince, Roger, the ſon Tancred, who took the title of count of Sicily, in the year 1080. H ſon, Roger, united Sicily with Naples, and was crowned king of bo Sicilies, in the year 1130. His deſcendants had the ſame title. T French, under the conduct of Charles, brother of St. Louis, conquered from the Norman princes. Charles was hated by the Sicilians; they we prepared for a revolt, and a conſpiracy was formed, under the conduct John di Procida. In the year 1282, on the evening of Eaſter-day, as t French and Sicilians were going in proceſſion to the church of Monrea in the neighbourhood of Palermo, a bride happened to paſs by with h train, when one Droguet, a Frenchman, inſtantly ran to her, and began uſe her in a rude manner, under pretence of ſearching for concealed ar A young Sicilian, flaming with reſentment, ſtabbed Droguet to the hear a tumult enſued, and two hundred Frenchmen were ſlain on the ſp The enraged populace now ran to the city, crying aloud, "Kill t French! kill the French!" and, without any diſtinction of age or ſe murdered every perſon of that nation found in Palermo. The ſame fu ſpread itſelf through the whole iſland, and produced a general maſſac The rage of the conſpirators was ſo great, that they did not even ſp their own relations, but ripped up women with child by Frenchmen, a daſhed the half-formed infants againſt the walls; whilſt the prieſts, cat ing the general phrenzy, butchered all their French penitents. This m ſacre has been denominated The Sicilian Veſpers. Peter, king of Arag who had married the daughter of Mainfroy, the former uſurper of Sici ſupported the Sicilians in their rebellion, and openly claimed the kingdo in right of his wife. SIENNA, or Siena, a city of Italy, and capital of a diſtrict, in the duchy of Tuſcany. This diſtrict, called Sienneſe, or Territorio di Sienna, was once a free republic: conquered by the emperor Charles V. in the year 1554, whoſe ſon, Philip II. king of Spain, ceded all parts except the Stato-de-gli-Præſidii, to Coſmo I. duke of Florence. The city is pleaſantly built on three hills, in a healthy ſituation: the houſes are of brick, and the ſtreets paved with the ſame. It is nearly five miles in circumference, but not peopled in proportion to its ſize; the inhabitants ſcarcely exceeding 17,000. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and the cathedral is a fine Gothic building, coated with black and white marble, within and without. The great portal was begun in the year 1284, after the deſigns of Giovanni da Piſa, and finiſhed, in 1333, by Agoſtino and Agnolo, Sienneſe architects. The front is prodigiouſly loaded with ornaments. All the work of the inſide is moſt highly finiſhed, as the carving, in wood, of the choir; the ſculpture, in marble, of the pulpit; and, eſpecially, the hiſtorical engraving of the pavement, repreſenting, in chiaro-oſcuro the moſt remarkable ſtories of the Old and New Teſtament. From an aperture in the choir-pavement may be ſeen St. John's church which lies directly underneath. Its entrance is without, on the hill; and thus one church may be ſaid to ſtand on another. Near the cathedral is the archbiſhop's palace, and oppoſite to it a large and well endowed hoſpital, founded by a ſhoe-maker: here are alſo a great many other churches and convents The church of the Dominicans is remarkable for a very ancient picture of wood, repreſenting the Virgin with the infant Jeſus in her arms, by Guido Saneſe: it is dated 1221, and is in the Venturini chapel: though ſo ancient, it is ſtill in good preſervation. The univerſity was founded by Charles V. The German ſtudents enjoy particular privileges, which they derive from the ſame emperor. In the 15th century, the academy of the Intronari was here founded. This city ſtill retains ſome ſhadow of its former republican liberty, which may appear from the manner of electing its council, which conſiſts of nine perſons, ſtyled Excelenzi; but whoſe power the Great Duke has very much curtailed. The caſtle, built at one end of the city, in order to curb the inhabitants, is of no great ſtrength. Near it is the univerſity's academy for martial exerciſes. Many nobility reſide here, who have a caſino, or aſſembly, of both ſexes, and it is generallay allowed, that the Italian language is in no part of Italy, ſpoken with greater purity: 54 miles S. SIERRA D'ADRIANA, mountains of Spain, in the province of Guipuſcoa, which took their name from the hermit Adrian. The road leading over it to Alaba and Old Caſtile, is very difficult to travellers. At the very beginning of it is a dark ſpace, between forty and fifty paces in length, cut through a rock; after which we aſcend up a hill, which is reckoned the higheſt among the Pyrennées. Theſe mountains are but little inhabited: a few ſhepherds' huts only being to be ſeen: 6 leagues S. Toloſa.

SIERRA DE GUADARAMA, a mountain of Spain, in the ſouth part of Old Caſtile: 15 miles S. Segovia.

SIERRA LEONA, a country of Africa, in Upper Guinea; ſo called becauſe it is mountainous, and the mountains abound in lions: it is compoſed of ſeveral ſtates or kingdoms, and is well watered by a river of the ſame name, at the mouth of which an aſſociation of Engliſh gentlemen have eſtabliſhed a ſettlement, on land purchaſed of the prince of the country. This company was incorporated by act of parliament, in the year 1791. A conſiderable number of whites and free negroes were conveyed thither from Nova Scotia, beſides many who went from England. At firſt the new ſettlers ſeem to have ſuffered from the want of proper habitations during the rainy ſeaſon, but ſubſequent accounts have been more favourable. In the month of December 1793, the natives continued perfectly friendly; the neighbouring chiefs ſhowed every deſire of being connected with the company; ſome had ſent their children to be educated at Sierra Leona, and many others propoſed to ſend them in the enſuing dry ſeaſon. The rainy ſeaſon had paſſed over without any conſiderable mortality; and the Nova Scotia coloniſts had maintained their health, and appeared to have become well inured to the climate. The trade was much more briſk: the cultivation was advancing, both in the colony and parts adjacent; and there appears to have been no difficulty in procuring the native labourers. The rice, cotton, and other articles in the company's plantation, had thrived exceedingly, the ſugar-cane excepted, which had been hurt by the white ants, The ſchool of the company contained between 300 and 400 children, chiefly Nova Scotians, who appear to have made full as much improvement as is common in European ſchools, under ſimilar circumſtances. The colony had gradually improved in order, and appeared to be advancing in every reſpect. Sierra Leona river abounds in fiſh, but is much infeſted with alligators. The country adjacent produces abundance of millet and rice; and the woods are filled with parrots of various kinds, and other beautiful birds: ſerpents are found; ſome of a very large ſize, and numerous wild beaſts, ſuch as lions, tigers, elephants, wild boars, and monkies.

SIERRA MORENA, a mountain, or rather a chain of mountains of Spain, between the provinces of Cordova and Jaen to the ſouth, and Eſtramadura and La Mancha to the north. A few years ago, this diſtrict was the dread of travellers. M. le Maur, a Frenchman, who for a long time has been one of the corps of engineers in Spain, was choſen in the year 1779, by the count de Florida Blanca, to render practicable a road the moſt frequented of any in the kingdom, and he has made it one of the fineſt in Europe. Several new ſettlements have been formed, and new towns founded in this barbarous diſtrict.

SILESIA (Duchy of), a country of Europe, bounded on the north b
the marquiſate of Brandenburg, on the eaſt by Poland, on the ſouth b Hungary, from which it is ſeparated by a chain of mountains and a wi derneſs or thicket, about 4 miles broad, and on the weſt by Moravia, Lu ſatia, and Bohemia. To the weſt and ſouth Sileſia is environed by a chai of hills, for height and extent ſome of the moſt remarkable in all Europ
This chain is called the Sudenſche Gebirge, or Sudet Mountains, and com mences at Friedberg, in Luſatia, forming two ridges. The firſt of theſ which is in Sileſia, paſſes through the principality of Jauer and Schweid nitz, into the principality of Munſterberg and the county of Glatz, bei about 60 miles in length, and dividing Sileſia from Bohemia, on whi account it is generally called the Boheimiſche Gebirge. A conſiderable pa of it, however, lying in the principality of Jauer, is known by the name the Rieſengebirge, or Giant Mountain, the higheſt peak of which is the Schne koppe, or Snow Head, otherwiſe called the Rieſenkoppe, or Giant's Head. Th ridge, or rather a part of it, is likewiſe ſtyled the Montes Riphæ, or mo properly Riphæi. The ſecond ridge of the Sudet chain begins in the pri cipality of Munſterberg, at the end of the firſt, and paſſing through t principalities of Neiſſe, Jagerndorf, Troppau, and Teſchen, terminates Jablunka, about 96 miles in length. This ridge is called the Moravi Gebirge. Near Jablunka, alſo, in the principality of Teſchen, begins t Hungarian or Crapak chain, which afterwards divides Poland and Hung ry. In the above-mentioned mountains, and all over that part of Up Sileſia lying towards Moravia and Hungary, the winter ſets in earlier, is longer continuance, and much more ſevere, than in the levels. In th very months, when, at the foot of the Rieſengebirge and the Geſenk, eve thing is covered with ice and ſnow, the trees at Breſlaw are in full verdu in winter. The ſandy parts of the principality of Glogau, and beyond t Oder, towards Poland, with the mountainous tracts, which is of conſid rable extent, produce but little; beſides which, their grain alſo is ſhort of a ſufficiency for the inhabitants. This deficiency, however, good years, is compenſated by the fertility of the other and larger part Sileſia, which, excluſive of wheat, rye, barley, and oats, yield likew maize or Turkey wheat, ſpelt, buck-wheat, millet, linſeed, peas, a beans. The culinary vegetables about Breſlau, Brieg, Neiſſe, Franke ſtein, and Lignitz, are excellent, and the neighbourhood of Grunberg Lower Beuthen afford plenty of fine fruits. Such ſpots, likewiſe, as unfit for tillage, or not duly improved that way, either make good paſture-grounds, or are covered with wood, inſomuch, that there is ſcarcely any part of Sileſia which may be ſaid to be abſolutely uſeleſs and barren. Of flax, too, here is abundance, but hemp not in ſuch plenty as is wrought, conſiderable quantities of that commodity being imported from Hungary and Poland. Hops, likewiſe, are ſeen every where, but moſt principally abound near Munſterberg. Madder, which was firſt brought hither in the 16th century, by a Flemiſh merchant, is cultivated with ſuch ſucceſs about Breſlaw, Lignitz, Wohlau, and Strelen, as to form one of their moſt conſiderable exports. Scharte, a yellow dye, is found in plenty, beſides which are tobacco-plantations, but the ſaffron of the country has little to recommend it. In many ſeaſons the wine here may be drank with pleaſure, eſpecially when it has continued for ſome years in the cellar. In the mountains and Upper Sileſia, tar, pitch, and reſin, is made from the pine, and fir and the larch-tree yields turpentine. From theſe reſinous trees, eſpecially the trunks of the coarſer pines, the inhabitants among the mountains make a lamp-black. Yet, however great the plenty of wood for all uſes may have been in Sileſia, and in many places ſtill continues; in other parts, particularly on this ſide of the Oder, it ſenſibly diminiſhes. Terra ſigillata is found near Strigau and many other places, but inſtead of being uſed as a medicine, is principally applied towards the making of an earthen-ware. In the mountains are found agate, jaſper, and even ſome gems, particularly amethyſt of an uncommon hardneſs and beauty; and diamonds near Prieberg, in the principality of Brieg. Here are quarries of lime-ſtone, other ſtones for ornament and building, and mill-ſtones. Here are mines of gold and ſilver, copper, lead, and iron: vitriol is likewiſe found in ſeveral places. Their breeding of horned cattle extends no farther than what is juſt neceſſary for the plough, and a ſufficiency of milk, butter, and cheeſe; and their oxen are ſtill fewer in number, on which account the markets are principally ſupplied from Poland and Hungary. The moſt noted of theſe ox markets are thoſe of Brieg, Breſlau, and Schweidnitz, where formerly, annually, it was uſual to ſee 10 or 12, or 15,000 head of Poliſh and Hungarian cattle, and ſometimes even more. The ſtuds here breed many fine and ſtout horſes, but the country does not afford a ſufficiency, wherefore beſides thoſe bought up at Franckfort fair, great numbers are brought hither likewiſe from Lithuania. The inhabitants of the hilly tracts keep goats, and eſtimate the profit of two good ones to be equal to that of a cow, a great deal of cheeſe being made of their milk. The breed of ſheep here alſo is very profitable, on account of the excellency of their wool. Theſe ſheep are ſhorn twice a year, but the ſummer-wool is reckoned preferable to that of the winter, though ſomewhat lighter. The wild beaſts of this country, whoſe ſkins are valuable, are lynxes, which frequent only the mountainous parts, foxes, weaſels, otters, and beavers, but theſe in no great number. In the Oder are caught ſalmon and ſturgeon, the latter of which are ſometimes exceedingly large; zante, ſkate, from forty to fifty pounds and upwards; lampreys, &c. The other rivers here, but more eſpecially the lakes and ponds, abound in various kinds of fiſh, ſuch as pike, carp, trout, mullets, &c. The breeding of bees in this country is not ſo conſiderable as to anſwer the conſumption of honey and wax, for which reaſon great quantities of both are imported from Poland; but their culture of ſilk is in a fair way of being carried to its utmoſt extent. The inhabitants of Sileſia are of different ſects in their religion. Frederick II. at the peace of Berlin, in the year 1742, promiſed that the Popiſh religion ſhould remain in ſtatu quo, though without detriment to the freedom of conſcience of the Proteſtants inhabitants, or to his own prerogative as ſovereign. This promiſe has accordingly taken place ſo happily, that all parties enjoy a perfect liberty of conſcience. The principal manufactures in Sileſia are thoſe of thread, twine, linen, flax, and damaſk. The principal exports are madder, mill-ſtones, thread, yarn, linen, veils, wool, and woollen cloth, with ſtuffs and paper. Since Sileſia has fallen under the dominion of the kings of Pruſſia, commerce has been conſiderably improved, and many excellent regulations have been made for that purpoſe. The ancient inhabitants of this country were the Lygii and Quadi, till about the middle of the 6th century, when the Slavi having overrun the country of the latter, a part of it came to Poland, and was called Zlezia. Under the Poliſh ſovereignty, Sileſia received the Poliſh language, manners, and uſages, with the Chriſtian religion. In the year 1138, by the partition made of the territories of Boleſlaus III. king of Poland, among his ſons, the eldeſt, named Wladiſlaus II. beſides the provinces of Cracow, Siradia, and Pomerania, obtained likewiſe Sileſia, with the chief ſhare in the government. In the 14th century, John, king of Bohemia, availed himſelf of ſome diviſions and occurrences, by which Sileſia had been weakened, to bring it under his dominion, in which he ſucceeded; for, from the year 1342, all the dukes of Sileſia, two only excepted, ſubmitted, one after another, to hold their territories in fief from him, with a reſerve only of the moſt conſiderable regalia. On the death of the emperor Charles VI. in the year 1740, Frederick II. king of Pruſſia, laid claim to the principalities of Lignitz, Brieg, and Wohlau; and his claims were ſo effectually ſupported by the march of an army into Sileſia, that Maria Thereſa, daughter and heireſs to the emperor Charles VI. and queen of Hungary and Bohemia, by a preliminary treaty at Breſlau, which was ſoon followed by a ratification of the ſame at the peace of Berlin, did, on behalf of herſelf, her heirs and ſucceſſors, of both ſexes, for ever cede to the king of Pruſſia, and his heirs and ſucceſſors, of both ſexes, with entire ſovereignty and independency of the crown of Bohemia the countries of Upper and Lower Sileſia, together with the diſtrict of Katſcher, formerly belonging to Moravia, as alſo the county of Glatz; reſerving, however, to herſelf the principality of Teſchen, with the lordſhips annexed thereto, the part of the principalities of Troppau and Jagerndorf beyond the Oppa, the part of the principality of Neiſſe bordering on Moravia, and a ſmall diſtrict belonging to Moravia, with ſome frontier towns. Sileſia was never immediately connected with the empire, having at no time been an imperial fief, nor obtained a ſeat or vote in the diet. Neither has it been ever ſubject to the ſupreme tribunals of the empire, ſo that here the imperial laws are of no force; and though in the ancient matriculas of the years 1431, 1447, 1471, 1481, it ſtands aſſeſſed with Bohemia, Moravia, and Luſatia, this was afterwards diſcontinued; yet when it came to be annexed to the crown of Bohemia, it acquired a mediate conjunction with the empire: and, in the year 1708, when the emperor Joſeph reaſſumed his ſeat and vote in the electoral college, as elector of Bohemia, he engaged both for that kingdom as well as for all the territories appertaining thereto; conſequently, therefore, for Sileſia alſo to pay to the ſeveral impoſts and taxes of the empire and the circle the aſſeſſment of an elector, with 300 guilders beſides, annually to the chamber of Wetzlar. On the other hand, the Germanic body obliged itſelf to take into its defence and protection the kingdom of Bohemia, with all its incorporated territories, and, of courſe, Sileſia; in which mediate conjunction with the empire the Bohemian part of Sileſia ſtill continues; whereas the king of Pruſſia, having obtained the greater part of this country with entire ſovereignty, and abſolutely independent of the crown of Bohemia, governs it accordingly, as a ſtate abſolutely free and diveſted of the leaſt connection with the empire: but, in the year 1751, the empire becoming a guarantee to his Pruſſian majeſty for the ſecure poſſeſſion of the duchy of Sileſia, a proviſo was made for its rights conſequential to ſuch an engagement. Ever ſince the cloſe of the 12th century, Sileſia has been divided into Upper and Lower, and this diviſion is ſtill in uſe. Lower Sileſia contains thirteen principalities, the names of which are as follows, viz. Breſlaw, Brieg, Glogau, Jauer, Lignitz, Munſterberg, Glatz, Neiſſe, Oels, Sagan, Schweidnitz, Wohlau, Trachenberg, and Carolath; the free ſtandeſherrſchafts or lordſhips of Wartenberg, Militſch, and Goſchutz; and many minderherrſchaften or inferior lordſhips. To Upper Sileſia belong the ſix principalities of Teſchen, Troppau, Jagerndorf, Oppeln, Ratibor, and Bilitz, the free ſtandeſherrſchafts of Pleſz and Beuthen, and certain minderherrſchafts. At preſent under two ſovereigns, the capital diviſions muſt neceſſarily be into that of Pruſſian and Bohemian: Breſlau is the capital of Pruſſian Sileſia: the regency of Bohemian Sileſia is erected at Troppau. The whole country is ſaid to contain 180 cities and towns, 4000 villages, and 1,800.000 inhabitants.

SIMMEN, or Siben, a river of Switzerland, which riſes in the mountains between the Valais and the canton of Berne, and runs into the lake of Thun, four miles NNW. Spietz. The vally through which this river runs, is called Simmenthal. The ſtupendous heights of the rocks, on each ſide this vally, whence vaſt fragments frequently fall into the road, renders the entrance ſomewhat frightful, eſpecially in ſpring-time, when, by the diſſolution of the ice and ſnows, whole maſſes of rocks are ſeparated from each other, which renders it really dangerous. The rivulet divides the vale into the Upper and Lower, the length of the former of which is not leſs than ſeven hours. Very few places in this long vally ſow either rye, oats, or wheat, but the inhabitants derive great profit from their graſs, which is of an extraordinary richneſs, and breed likewiſe vaſt numbers of cattle, from which they make butter and cheeſe. Of the latter, the better ſort is held in great repute abroad, under the title of Saan cheeſe, it being made entirely of cream ; and of the common cheeſe, France and other countries purchaſe conſiderable quantities. The greateſt part of the inhabitants, inſtead of bread, eat the ſecond ſort of cheeſe, with thin barley cakes, while the principal food of the commonalty is potatoes, and their drink milk or whey.

SINDY, a country of Aſia, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the river Indu from its mouth to the frontiers of Moultan ; and may be reckoned at lea 300 Britiſh miles in length that way. Its breadth is very irregular ; it may be about 160 miles in the wideſt part. On the north-eaſt lie the territories o the Seiks, and on the north, thoſe of the king of Candahar ; on the weſt, is Mecran, a province of Perſia, whoſe prince is tributary to the king of Candahar. A ſandy deſert bounds Sindy on the eaſt, and extends the whole way from the territory of Cutch to the confines of Moultan ; being near 550 Britiſh miles in length, and from 100 to 150 wide. The province of Sindy, in many particulars of ſoil and climate, and in the general appearance of it ſurface, reſembles Egypt ; the lower part of it being compoſed of rich vegetable mould, and extended into a wide delta ; while the upper part is a narrow ſlip of country, confined on the Perſian ſide by a ridge or ridges of mountains, and on the other by a ſandy deſert ; the river Indus, equal at leaſt to the Nile, winding through the midſt of this level vally, and annually overflowing it. During great part of the ſouth-weſt monſoon, or at leaſt, in the months of July, Auguſt, and part of September (which i the rainy ſeaſon in moſt other parts of India) the atmoſphere is here generally clouded ; but no rain falls, except very near the ſea. Indeed, very few ſhowers fall during the whole year. Captain Hamilton ſays, that no rain had fallen during the three years preceding his viſit to Tatta. Owing to this and to the neighbourhood of the ſandy deſerts, which bound it o the eaſt, and are not far removed from it, on the north-weſt, the heats are ſo very violent, and the winds from thoſe quarters ſo pernicious, that the houſes are contrived ſo as to be occaſionally ventilated, by means of apertures on the top of them, reſembling the funnels of ſmall chimnies. Nadir Shah, in the year 1739, obtained from the great Mogul, Mahommed Shah, a ceſſion of the province of Sindy, as well as the reſt of the Indian provinces, lying on the weſt of the Indus : and he even viſited Tatta. Abdalla, when he ſeized on the provinces which compoſe his empire, retained the ſovereignty of Sindy alſo : and the prince of this province is, accordingly, tributary to the king of Candahar. The prince is a Mahomedan, and of Abyſſinian extraction : his uſual place of reſidence is at the fort of Hydrabad, ſituated on the Indus, not far above the head of the Delta and in the neighbourhood of the city of Nuſſerpour. The Hindoos, wh were the original inhabitants of Sindy, and were reckoned to out-numbe the Mahometans, in the proportion of ten to one in captain Hamilton's time, are treated with great rigour by their Mahometan governors ; an not permitted to erect any pagodas, or other places of worſhip : and thi ſeverity drives vaſt numbers of them into other countries. Tatta is th capital.

SKYE, a ſmall iſland near the weſt coaſt of Scotland, and one of the largeſt of thoſe called the Weſtern Iſlands, being 47 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and from 12 to 20 in breadth, from eaſt to weſt; ſeparated by a narrow channel from the county of Inverneſs. Towards the ſouth-weſt is a chain of rude mountains, black and red, which, according to Mr. Pennant, appears as if diſcoloured by fire, and on the eaſt a long extent of lofty hills: there is, however, a conſiderable quantity of level ground, which affords paſture, and is capable of tillage. In the mountains are found quarries of marble and limeſtone; with ſome appearance of mineral ores. Dr. Johnſon, who viſited Skye, ſays, "as this iſland lies in the 57th degree, the air cannot be ſuppoſed to have much warmth. Skye lies open on the weſt and north to a vaſt extent of ocean, and is cooled in the ſummer by perpetual ventilation, but by the ſame blaſts is kept warm in winter. Their weather is not pleaſing. Half the year is deluged with rain. From the autumnal to the vernal equinox, a dry day is hardly known, except when the ſhowers are ſuſpended by a tempeſt. Under ſuch ſkies can be expected no great exuberance of vegetation. Their winter overtakes their ſummer, and their harveſt lies upon the ground, drenched with rain. The autumn ſtruggles hard to produce ſome of our early fruit. He gathered gooſeberries in September; but they were ſmall, and the huſk was thick. Their winter is ſeldom ſuch as puts a ſtop to the growth of plants, or reduce the cattle to live wholly on the ſurpluſage of the ſummer. In the year 1771, they had a ſevere ſeaſon. The ſnow lay long on the ground, a calamity hardly known before. Part of their cattle died for want, part were unſeaſonably ſold to buy ſuſtenance for the owners. The ſoil, as in other countries, has its diverſities. In ſome parts there is only a thin layer of earth ſpread upon a rock, which bears nothing but ſhort brown heath, and, perhaps, is not generally capable of any better product. There are many bogs or moſſes of greater or leſs extent, where the ſoil cannot be ſuppoſed to want depth, though it is too wet for the plough. The vallies and the mountains are alike darkened with heath. Some graſs, however, grows here and there, and ſome happier ſpots of earth are capable of tillage. Their agriculture is laborious, and, perhaps, rather feeble than unſkilful. Their chief manure is ſea-weed, which, when they lay to rot upon the field, gives them a better crop than thoſe of the Highlands. They heap ſea-ſhells upon the dunghill, which in time moulder into a fertiliſing ſubſtance. When they find a vein of earth where they cannot uſe it, they dig it up, and add it to the mould of a more commodious place. Their corn-grounds often lie in ſuch intricacies among the craggs, that there is no room for the action of a plough. The ſoil is then turned up by manual labour, with an inſtrument called a crooked ſpade. The grain which they commit to the furrows, thus tediouſly formed, is either oats or barley. They do not ſow barley without very copious manure, and then they expect from it ten for one, an increaſe equal to that of better countries. When their grain is arrived at the ſtate which they muſt conſider as ripening, they do not cut, but pull the barley: to the oats they apply the ſickle. Wheel-carriages they have none, but make a frame of timber, which is drawn by one horſe, with the two points behind preſſing on the ground. On this they ſometimes drag home their ſheaves, but often convey them home in a kind of panier or frame of ſticks upon the horſe's back. Their rocks abound with kelp, a ſea plant, of which the aſhes are melted into glaſs. They burn kelp in great quantities, and ſend it away in ſhips, which come regularly to purchaſe them. The cattle of Skye are not ſo ſmall as is commonly believed. Since they have ſent their beeves in great numbers to the ſouthern marts, they have probably taken more care of their breed. Their horſes are, like their cows, of a moderate ſize. The goats and the ſheep are milked like their cows. A ſingle meal of a goat is a quart, and of a ſheep a pint. There are in Skye neither rats nor mice; but the weaſel is ſo frequent, that he is heard in houſes rattling behind cheſts or beds, as rats in England. The inhabitants of Skye, and of the other iſlands which I have ſeen, are commonly of the middle ſtature, with fewer among them very tall or very ſhort, than are ſeen in England." In the year 1746, the unfortunate prince Charles Stuart concealed himſelf in a cave on this iſland for two nights. Long. 2. 20. to 3. 40. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 48. to 58. 45. N.

SLESWICK (Duchy of), a province of Denmark, bounded on the north by Jutland, on the eaſt by the Baltic, on the ſouth by the duchy of Holſtein, and on the weſt by the North Sea: about 72 miles in length, and from 30 to 56 in breadth, without including ſeveral iſlands on the coaſt. The country is well ſupplied with corn, cattle, and fiſh; mountains there are none, and but few eminences which deſerve the name of hills. The ſoil is, in general, well cultivated, and great encouragement given to the huſbandmen and farmers by the crown. It is not unfrequently called South Jutland, but takes the name of Sleſwick from its capital. Sleſwick has from time immemorial been united to Denmark, but has ſometimes been given to a brother of the reigning king, as a fief, but this has been attended with great diſputes, eſpecially in the laſt century, when the duke in poſſeſſion attempted to become an independent prince. In 1720, it was recovered to the crown. The adminiſtration is veſted in a governor, chancellor, vice-chancellor, and counſellors: the governor reſides at Gottorp. The inhabitants are a mixture of Danes, Saxons, Friſchians, and Hollanders, all which languages are ſeverally ſpoken. The prevailing religion is Lutheran. Sleſwick contains ſeveral towns, and 1500 villages. Sleſwick is the capital.

SLESWICK, a city of Denmark, and capital of a duchy of the ſame name, ſituated on a river of gulf of Sley. It was formerly called Hetheby, from queen Hetha, who was the founder. In the 9th century, it flouriſhed on the ruins of Mecklenburg; in the 10th it was deſtroyed and rebuilt; in the 15th it was burned down; it afterwards became rich and flouriſhing till the year 1713, after which, in loſing its dukes, it loſt its conſequence. It is at preſent no longer a port; the Sley being choked up with ſand. Sleſwick is an irregular town, of great length, and contains about 5630 inhabitants. The houſes are of brick; and, like thoſe of all the other towns in the country, reſemble in neatneſs and manner of building thoſe of Holland: the inhabitants dreſs alſo like the Dutch; and many of them ſpeak their tongue, though the uſual languages are the German and the Daniſh. Cloſe to Sleſwick, is the old palace of Gottorp, formerly the ducal reſidence, at preſent inhabited by the ſtadtholder or governor, prince Charles of Heſſe Caſſel, who married Louiſa, princeſs of Denmark. It is a large brick edifice, ſurrounded with a rampart and moat: from this caſtle the ducal line, formed by Adolphus, ſon of Frederic I. king of Denmark, was denominated Holſtein Gottorp, which ſtill ſubſiſts in the perſon of the preſent great duke of Ruſſia: 60 miles N. SLUYS, or Ecluſe, a ſea-port town of Flanders, and formerly one of the beſt ports on that coaſt, capable of receiving conveniently 500 veſſels: but it has been daily growing worſe, ſo as to be capable of receiving ſmall veſſels only. Its ancient name was Lammens Vliet. It belonged to the comtes of Nevers, the deſcendants of Guy de Dampierre, Comte of Flanders, who died in 1305. Philip the Hardy, duke of Burgundy, obtained it in exchange for Bethune, of William, comte of Namur, and ſurrounded it with walls, in the year 1385. In 1493, Philip de Cleves, lord of Raveſtein, having revolted againſt Philip le Bel, retired to Sluys, which was beſieged by Albert duke of Saxe. After a ſiege of four months, the city ſurrendered, and the lord of Cleves made an atonement. The city having taken part with the Hollanders, was beſieged by the prince of Parma, in the year 1587; it had then an Engliſh garriſon; Arnold Groevelt, the governor, ſuſtained ſeven aſſaults, until proviſions and warlike ſtores failing, he was compelled to ſurrender, but upon honourable terms. It continued in the poſſeſſion of Spain, till the year 1604, when prince Maurice of Naſſau beſieged it in form, and compelled the garriſon to ſurrender in about four months. General Spinola attempted, with part of the archduke's army, to raiſe the ſiege, but loſt more than 200 men, in the different attempts. His brother, Frederick Spinola, attacked ſome veſſels of Zealand and Holland, which blocked up the mouth of the harbour, and hindered the entrance of proviſions, but was repulſed with the loſs of 80 men, and himſelf killed, ſo that Don Mather Serano, governor of the place, was obliged to ſurrender it the 19th of Auguſt. Twelve Spaniſh veſſels, which were in the harbour, remained, by the capitulation, in poſſeſſion of the captors, with all their loading. It is furniſhed with ſluices, by means of which they can lay the whole country under water, and from thence its preſent name is derived. Charles VI. king of France, in the year 1386, fitted out a grand fleet againſt the Engliſh, great part of which were diſperſed by a ſtorm, and the remainder fell into the hands of the Engliſh. In the year 1340, a ſevere battle was fought between the fleets of France and England, when the former were totally defeated. The garriſon of Sluys was ſummoned by the French republicans in the month of July, 1794, but the commander Vander Dugn replied, "the honour of defending a place like Sluys, that of commanding a brave garriſon, and the confidence they repoſe in me, are my anſwer." This brave man held out till the 25th of Auguſt, when the garriſon were made priſoners of war, but marched out with the honours of war, in teſtimony, ſays the French general (Almain) of the noble defence they made. 18 miles NE. Oſtend, and 8 N. Bruges. Long. 20. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 19. N.

SMALAND, or Smoland, a province of Sweden, about 100 miles length, and 60 in breadth, formerly governed by kings of its own. was alſo, for a conſiderable time, included in Eaſt Gothland, and had th ſome laws with that province. It was probably called Smaland, that is, Small Parcels of Land, becauſe, in ancient times, the country was ſo over-run with woods and waſtes, that the inhabitants could only cultivate a few ſpots here and there between them : and even to this day, large heaps of ſtones are met with in the woods, which were thrown together by the firſt inhabitants of this country, in order to clear the ground. Though Smaland is mountainous, thoſe parts which are cultivated and improved by induſtry, are very fruitful, and it is particularly remarkable for fine paſtures, which bring in great profits to the graziers. Here are large foreſts of beech and other trees : and alſo ſilver, copper, and iron mines, a great quantity of iron ore being found at the bottom of the lakes. A vein of gold ore has been likewiſe diſcovered in this province. The inhabitants are principally employed in agriculture, mining, and graziery. They alſo deal in planks, beams, maſts, tar, pot-aſh, iron, grain, cattle, butter, cheeſe, fleſh, bacon, tallow, hops, and fiſh. There are 21 lakes in this province, but they afford nothing remarkable. The principal towns are Calmar, Wexin, and Jonkioping.

SMOLENSK, a town of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, on the Dnieper. It is the reſidence of a governor, and a biſhop's ſee; and its commerce is very conſiderable. It is famous in hiſtory, as the ſubject of many diſputes between the Poles and Ruſſians, during which it was often beſieged and taken by both parties. Smolenſk is built on two hills, with a valley and the river between; and ſurrounded with walls thirty feet high, and fifteen thick, the lower part of ſtone, and the upper of brick, which follow the courſe of the hills, and encloſe a ſpace of about five miles : at every angle towns are erected. Moſt of the houſes of the common people are conſtructed of wood. The number of inhabitants rather more than 4000. The principal articles of trade, are flax, hemp, timber, maſts, planks, honey, wax, hides, hogs' briſtles, and Siberian furs : 420 miles ENE. Warſaw, 185 WSW. Moſcow, and 328 SSE. SMYRNA, or Iſmir, a city and ſeaport of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia, ſituated on a gulf of the Mediterranean, which is capable of containing the largeſt navy in the world. The commodiouſneſs of its harbour has rendered it the common rendezvous of the greateſt merchants in all the four parts of the world, and the ſtaple of their merchandiſe. It was very conſiderable in the time of the Romans, and has all along been famed for great commerce with all nations, eſpecially the Engliſh, many of our conſiderable merchants reſiding in it, and having a conſul to protect them. This city is reckoned to contain 15,000 Turks, 10,000 Greeks, and near 2000 Jews, beſides Armenians, Franks, and others. The whole trade here, as well as in all Turkey, is managed by the brokerage of the Jews, the Turks never tranſacting any bargain with Chriſtians, in any caſe, but leave it to thoſe ſubtle brokers, who are all wealthy, and live very handſomely, and ſome of them ſplendidly by it. The whole town is a continual bazar, or fair, where nothing that can be wiſhed for is wanting, either for clothing, ſuſtenance, or pleaſure; becauſe all the beſt commodities of Europe and Aſia are brought hither, and ſold at cheap rates. The territory about Smyrna is very fertile, with fine olive-trees and vines; and the wine that is made is excellent. The European conſuls live here in great ſtate and magnificence. This city ſuffered by a very extenſive and devouring fire on the 6th of Auguſt, 1763, which, by ſome fatal accident, broke out at midnight, and laſted twenty-ſix hours, involving, in its progreſs, the whole Frank quarter, inhabited entirely by the different factories of the foreign nations, particularly the Engliſh, French, Dutch, Venetians, Imperial, Swediſh, Daniſh, and Raguſan. Not one merchant's, nor conſul's, houſe was left ſtanding, except the Engliſh conſul's, and that not entire, nor without ſuffering great damage; even the magazines, which before had been looked upon as fire-proof, burſt through the intenſe violence of the flames. The ſcene of deſolation was, on all ſides, terrible; and the loſs ſuſtained reckoned at 1,500,000 of Turkiſh dollars, or near 200,000l. ſterling : 176 miles SSW. Conſtantinople. Long. 44. 53. E. Ferro. Lat. 38. 28. N.

SOCIETY ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands in the ſouth Pacific Ocean, ſo named by Captain Cook, in the year 1769. They are Ulietea, Otaha, Bolabola, Huaheine, Tubai, and Maurua; the two laſt are very ſmall: Captain Cook ſays he called them thus, becauſe they lay contiguous to each other, but did not think it proper to diſtinguiſh them, ſeparately, by any other names than thoſe by which they were known to the natives. They are ſituated between the latitude of 16. 10. and 16. 55. S. and between the longitude of 150. 57. and 152. W. from the meridian of Greenwich. Ulietea and Otaha lie within about two miles of each other, and are both incloſed within one reef of coral rocks, ſo that there is no paſſage for ſhipping between them. This reef forms ſeveral excellent harbours; the entrances into them, indeed, are but narrow, yet when a ſhip is once in, nothing can hurt her. The inhabitants, climate, and produce are ſimilar, in many reſpects, to thoſe of Otaheite, from which iſland they are not above 50 leagues diſtant towards the north-weſt. Huaheine ſeems to be a month forwarder in its productions than Otaheite. Of the cocoa-nuts the inhabitants make a food which they call poe, by mixing them with yams; they ſcrape both fine, and having incorporated the powder, they put it into a wooden trough, with a number of hot ſtones, by which an oily kind of haſty-pudding is made, that the Engliſh ſeamen reliſhed very well, eſpecially when it was fried. Mr. Banks found not more than eleven new plants; but he obſerved ſome inſects, and a ſpecies of ſcorpion, which he had never ſeen before. The inhabitants ſeem to be larger made, and more ſtout, than thoſe of Otaheite. Mr. Banks meaſured one of the men, and found him to be ſix feet three inches and a half high; yet they are ſo lazy, that he could not perſuade any of them to go up the hills with him; they ſaid, if they were to attempt it the fatigue would kill them. The women were very fair, more ſo than thoſe of Otaheite; and, in general, we thought them more handſome, though none that were equal to ſome individuals. Both ſexes ſeemed to be leſs timid, and leſs curious. Captain Cook ſays, while we were employed about theſe iſlands, we expended very little of the ſhip's proviſions, and were very plentifully ſupplied with hogs, fowls, plantains, and yams, which we hoped would have been of great uſe to us in our courſe to the ſouthward; but the hogs would not eat European grain of any kind, pulſe, or bread-duſt, ſo that we could not preſerve them alive; and the fowls were all very ſoon ſeized with a diſeaſe that affected the head ſo, that they continued to hold it down between their legs till they died: much dependance, therefore, muſt not be placed in live ſtock taken on board at theſe places, at leaſt not till a diſcovery is made of ſome food that the hogs will eat, and ſome remedy for the diſeaſe of the poultry. Long. 150. 57. to 152. SOCKIA, a town of Arabia, in the province of Hedjas: 75 miles S. Medina.

SOCONUSCO, a province of North America, in the audience of Guatimala, bounded on the north by the province of Chiapa, on the eaſt by Vera Paz and Guatimala, on the ſouth by the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean and Guaxaca. The climate is very hot; the rainy ſeaſon long, namely, from April to September; and ſtorms are very frequent; ſo that the country is very far from being either healthy pleaſant; nor does the ſoil produce much corn, but great quantities of indigo and cocoa-nuts, which are ſent by ſea to all the other parts of Ne Spain. There are few Spaniards in this part of the country, but ver rich.

SOCOTARA, or Socotra, an iſland in the Arabian Sea, ſituated abou twenty-five leagues from Cape Guardafu, about twenty-four leagues i length, and ſixteen in breadth. All the ſurrounding ſhore is bold, ever where affording ſafe anchorage, and good ports; it has, in particular, tw fine bays and ſecure harbours, where the ſhipping ride ſafely again every wind that blows: theſe are called the harbours of Benin and Cora. It is amazing that a place, ſo much frequented by all the tradin nations, ſhould be ſo variouſly and contradictorily deſcribed by differen authors; ſome affirming that it has only one town, called Tamart, o Tamary; others, that it has three, the former being the chief; an others, that there is neither a town, village, or houſe, on the whole iſlan the natives living in dens and caves, and burrows dug under groun the more effectually to ſhelter them againſt the ſcorching beams of th ſun. It is agreed, however, that the iſland is populous and fruitful, under the government of a prince (Soltan) who was tributary to the ſherif of Arabia. Moſt of the inhabitants are Mahometans, ſtyling themſelve Arabs; and, indeed, their manners and language bear a ſtrong reſemblan to thoſe of the Arabians, if they be not altogether the ſame. The whol country abounds in cattle and fruit, with which, and ſome other commodities, they trade to Goa, where they are better received than the nati Arabs, who are not permitted to enter that town without paſſports. Th produce of the iſland conſiſts chiefly in aloes, frankincenſe, amber-greaſe dragon's blood, rice, dates, and coral, which are tranſported from Go over many parts of the Indies, and to all the kingdoms of Europe. Formerly they had a more immediate intercourſe with Europe, by means o the Eaſt India ſhipping, which frequently ſtopped here, when diſappointed of their paſſage, either by being too early or too late, for the monſoons; but now the ſtated periods of thoſe winds are ſo well aſcertained that this port is entirely neglected. Long. 54. In the year 1444, it was given to the duchy of Cleves, with a reſervation of the ancient privileges: the appointment of its own magiſtrates yearly it preſerved till the year 1752, ſince which time the king of Pruſſia has appointed a permanent magiſtracy. In the year 1636, it was miſerably laid waſte by the Imperialiſts. In the year 1721, the emperor Charles VI. demanded of it 36,000 rix-dollars for 50 Roman months, as a ſubſidy towards the Turkiſh war: 22 miles E. Dortmund, and 27 SE. Munſter.

SOFALA, or Zoſala, or Quiterve, a country and kingdom of Africa, bounded on the north and weſt by the ſtates of Monomotapa, on the eaſt by the Mozambique Channel, and on the ſouth by Sabia; about 350 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 120 from north to ſouth. Sofala, the capital, was, at the arrival of the Portugueſe, but an inconſiderable town, neither large nor walled, fenced only with a thorny hedge; but it hath been ſince fortified, and in every reſpect very much improved by them, and called Cuama, as well as the fort, which they built for its defence. That name, however, hath been ſince obliterated, and both pilots and geographers have retained its old appellation of Sofala. It is conveniently ſituated on a ſmall iſland, at the mouth of the Cuama above-mentioned. There are beſides two towns on the coaſt, one called Haulema, and the other Dardema, with the villages of Savona, Bocha, and Gaſta, and ſome others, all of them mean, and worthy of no farther notice. The natives of Sofala, are, for the moſt part, black, with ſhort curled hair, there being but very few tawny or brown among them. Their ſhape is taller and more genteel than that of the negroes of Moſambique, Quiloa, &c. Their common dreſs is a piece of ſilk or cotton, wrapped round the middle, covering them down to the knees, all the reſt of the body being naked, except the head, the better ſort wearing a kind of turban. All of them adorn their necks, arms, wriſts, legs, and ancles, with rings of gold, ſilver, amber, or coloured beads, according to their condition. Theſe ſtuffs and trinkets are moſtly brought to them from Bombay by the Portugueſe; and thoſe of the better ſort affect to wear ſwords, with handles of ivory. All the coaſters ſpeak the Arabic tongue, which is their natural language; for they are not the original natives, but the deſcendants of the Arabs who left their native country, and ſettled more or leſs upon this weſtern coaſt. They cultivate rice and millet, which ſerves them for bread, and eat the fleſh of elephants, large and ſmall cattle, beſides fiſh, of which both the ſea and rivers yield a great plenty and variety. They have likewiſe beer, made of rice and millet, and ſome other liquors made of honey, palm, and other fruits: the honey is here in ſuch plenty, that a great part of it lies neglected, no more being gathered by the indolent people than ſerves that purpoſe, or for extracting ſo much wax out of it as will procure them painted cotton or ſilk, and other cloths in exchange. Their chief commerce here is with the inhabitants of Mozambique, Quiloa, Mombaſo, and Melinda, who came hither in their ſambucs or ſmall barges, which are freighted with variety of the above-mentioned cloths of all colours, and they exchange them for gold, ivory, wax, or ambergriſe. But beſides the gold which they draw from Monomotapa, the kingdom of Sofala hath ſome very conſiderable mines of that valuable metal, which, by the report of the Portugueſe inhabitants, yield to the value of above two millions of metigals yearly, each metigal valued at about 14 French livres. Many learned men venture to affirm that it was from this mine Solomon had his gold which is ſo highly commended by the ſacred hiſtorian; and that the kingdom of Sofala is the celebrated Ophir, the gold being allowed to be the pureſt and fineſt in all Africa. The Mahometan religion is, according to Pigafeta and the generality of Dutch writers, that of the king and court, and of a great part of the people; but it is more likely that the original natives live wholly without any religion, good or bad; and that the Arabs alone, who ſettled on this coaſt, are the only Mahometans, except ſome few proſelytes they have made among thoſe negroes for the ſake of commerce, ſeeing all the merchants who come hither from Quiloa, Mombaſo, and Melinda, are of that religion. Long. 28. to 33. SOLANDER'S ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, near the ſouth coaſt of New Zealand, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1770. It is nothing but a barren rock, about a mile in circuit, remarkably high, and lies full five leagues diſtant from the main. This iſland he named after Dr. Solander. The ſhore of the main lies neareſt eaſt-by-ſouth and weſt-by-north, and forms a large open bay, in which there is no appearance of any harbour, or ſhelter for ſhipping againſt ſouth-weſt and ſoutherly winds. The ſurface of the country is broken into craggy hills, of a great height, on the ſummits of which are ſome patches of ſnow: it is not, however, wholly barren, for wood was ſeen not only in the vallies, but upon the higheſt ground; yet no appearance of its being inhabited. Long. 192. 49. SOLEURE, or Solothurne, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a canton of the ſame name, on the river Aar. This town is very ancient, having been one of the towns of Helvetia, burned in the time of Julius Cæſar. It was one of the principal towns of the kingdom of Burgundy, and frequently the reſidence of the kings; it afterwards came to the empire, and obtained the privilege of electing its own magiſtrates. A little after the foundation of Berne, a treaty was entered into between the two cities, which has never been interrupted. In the year 1318, three years after the battle of Morgarten, Leopold, duke of Auſtria, undertook the ſiege of Soleure. During the ſiege, the river Aar being ſwelled by rain, carried away the bridge, which the duke had imprudently loaded with troops. By the humanity and aſſiſtance of the beſieged, a great number were ſaved, and the duke was ſo ſtruck with this generoſity, that he immediately raiſed the ſiege, and retired with the reſt of his army. In the year 1481, it was admitted into a perpetual alliance with the reſt of the cantons. It is ſituated at the foot of Mount Jura, in a fertile and pleaſant plain. It is well fortified, and contains ſix churches, an abby, a convent, and an arſenal. The town-houſe is a handſome building. Soleure is the uſual reſidence of the French ambaſſador to the cantons: 26 miles SSW. Bâle, and 18 S. Berne. Long. 24. 2. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 15. N.

SOLLAM MOSS, or Solway Moſs, a tract of country of England, i the county of Cumberland, ſituated to the north of the Eſk, in that tra which is now reckoned Engliſh ground; though, before the union of th two kingdoms it was called bateable or debateable ground, the inhabitan on both ſides always contending for it, and yielding it to neither. In 154 the Engliſh, not above 300, under Sir Thomas Wharton, lord warden the weſt marſhes, took 1000 men priſoners here, for which, it is ſaid, kin James V. died ſoon after of grief. Solom or Solway Moſs, conſiſts of 16 acres, raiſed a little above the cultivated tract, a maſs of thin peaty mu with a cruſt too weak in the drieſt ſummer to bear a man's weight. I December 1769, it burſt its banks by the exceſſive winter rains of thr days' continuance preceding, and the too near approaches of the peat-di gers, which had weakened the cruſt at a gap, about 50 yards wide. Abo 300 acres of moſs diſcharged themſelves in a black ſtream, charged wi large maſſes of peat, which ſurrounded the cottages, and covered 400 acr of cultivated land. Many cattle were drowned, but not one human li loſt. It filled the whole vally, leaving behind it great heaps of turf fro three to 15 and 30 feet, memorials of its height, and at laſt reached a fell into the Eſk. The ſurface of the moſs was reduced near 25 feet, ſu into a hollow form.

SOMERSET, a county in the State of Maryland.

SOMERSETSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by the Briſtol Channel and the county of Glouceſter, on the eaſt by Wiltſhire, on the ſouth-eaſt by Dorſetſhire, and on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by Devonſhire, and on the north-weſt by the Briſtol Channel. Its form is oblong, being in length from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt upwards of 80 miles, in breadth from eaſt to weſt between 30 and 40, and in circumference 200. The ſea coaſt is extremely irregular, in ſome parts projecting into large, lofty, and rocky promontories, and others receding into fine bays, with flat and level ſhores. It is divided into forty hundreds, and ſeven liberties, which contain two cities, Bath and Wells, thirty-three towns, and 482 pariſhes. In vegetable and animal productions, Somerſetſhire is by no means deficient; the hills, plains, vallies, rivers, and ſeas, abound with commodities uſeful to mankind, and adequate to the neceſſary wants of life. The vallies whether diſtributed into meads, paſture, or tillage, are in general very rich, and many of the hills, a few years ſince unacquainted with the plough, are now, by the improvements in huſbandry, brought to ſuch a ſtate of cultivation as to produce large crops of grain. Hemp, flax, teazels, and woad, are cultivated in conſiderable quantities. The plains are remarkable for their luxuriant herbage, particularly the moors, on which are fattened great numbers of nearly the largeſt cattle in England. The cheeſe made in this county is eſteemed remarkably fine. The ſheep are generally of the ſmaller kind; the Mendip mutton is well known for its peculiar ſweetneſs. The hills produce various ſorts of valuable ore; in thoſe of Mendip are dug immenſe quantities of lead and lapis calaminaris and ſome copper: the Quantock-hills alſo produce lead and copper; the Broadfield Downs, and other wilds, have their mines of calamine; and iron ore has been found, though little worked, in various parts of the county; on the rocks near Porlock, ſilver in ſmall quantities is diſcoverable. The coal mines in the northern part, are valuable treaſures to the neighbourhood, and ſupply great part of the cities of Bath and Briſtol with moſt excellent fuel. The former city has in great meaſure been raiſed by the fine free ſtone of its neighbouring quarries. The blue Kenton ſtone is admirable for paving. The rocks on the coaſt contain marble, alabaſter, and talk; and thoſe in the inland parts are generally compoſed of lime-ſtone, and abound with pyrites, ſpar, lava, and curious petrifactions. In this county are found yellow ochre, and that ſpecies of red ochre commonly called ruddle, ſo well known for its uſe in marking ſheep; of this there are three different ſorts, the firſt of which is that in general uſe for the above purpoſe; the ſecond is much harder, makes an indifferent kind of paint, and is frequently ſubſtituted by druggiſts for Armenian Bole; the third is peculiar to a very confined ſpace, on the top of Winford hill, about five miles from Briſtol, and differs materially from either of the other kinds, in the brightneſs of its colour, the evenneſs and ſmoothneſs of its texture, in its weight, its not crumbling between the fingers, and in being indiſſoluble in water. It is found at about the diſtance of ſix fathoms from the ſurface of the ground, in a ſtratum of four feet, lying on a bed of black marle, beneath ſtrata of ſoft reddiſh earth, clay, rock, and loam. It affords a moſt excellent and ſplendid colour, and is in every reſpect equal to that ochrous earth which is dearly imported under the denomination of Terra Perſica. There are ſeveral mineral ſprings beſides thoſe of Bath. The principal rivers are the Avon, Ax, Brew, Parret, Chew, Ex, and Frome. The towns are Taunton, Bridgewater, Minehead, Ivelcheſter, Milbourne-Port, Axbridge, Bruton, Caſtle-Cary, Chard, Crewkern, Dulverton, Dunſter, Frome, Glaſtonbury, Ilminſter, Keynſham, Langport, Milverton, Nether Stowey, North Curry, Norton St. Philip, North Petherton, South Petherton, Porlock, Shepton Mallet, Somerton, Stogumber. Watchet, Wellington, Wincaunton, Wivelſcombe, Wrington, and Yeovil. Of theſe the five firſt ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament, as likewiſe the county, and the two cities of Bath and Wells, to which if we add the city of Briſtol, a county of itſelf, part of which is in Somerſetſhire, the whole number of members will be eighteen.

SOU-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Kiang-nan, on a river which communicates with the lake Tai. This is one of the moſt beautiful and agreeable cities of the whole empire. Europeans who have ſeen it compare it to Venice, with this difference, that the latter is built in the ſea, and Sou-tcheou is interſected by canals of freſh water. There is not, perhaps, in the univerſe a country more delightful, either by the pleaſantneſs of its ſituation, or the mildneſs of its climate; the air is ſo temperate, proviſions ſo plentiful and cheap, the ſoil ſo fruitful, and the manners of the people ſo gentle, that this city is conſidered the paradiſe of China. Above (ſay the Chineſe authors) is the celeſtial paradiſe; but the paradiſe of this world is Sou-tcheou. To ſee the continual motion of its immenſe number of inhabitants, and the confuſion cauſed every where by their commercial intercourſe with ſtrangers, one would be induced to believe, that the trade of all the provinces centered in it. The brocades and embroideries made here are in great requeſt throughout the whole empire. Its juriſdiction extends over only eight towns, one of which is of the ſecond claſs, and the reſt of the third: 562 miles SSE. Peking. Long. 137. 46. E. Ferro. Lat. 31. 22. N.

SOUTHAMPTON, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

SOUTHAMPTON, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Hants, or, as it is ſometimes called, the county of Southampton, ſituated at the union of two rivers, which run into a bay of the Engliſh Channel, called Southampton Water: near this ſpot was formerly a town, called Hanton, which was plundered by the Danes, in the year 980; and, in the reign of Edward III. it was burnt down by the French: after which it was rebuilt in the ſituation it now ſtands, which was ſurrounded with walls, ditches, battlements, and towers, and, for its further defence, a ſtrong caſtle was built by order of Richard II. on a mount, or artificial hill; and a fort was erected in the reign of Henry VIII. The inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade with Portugal for wine and fruit, as likewiſe with the iſlands of Guernſey and Jerſey, to which iſlands they ſend a certain quantity of wool, allowed by act of parliament: here are manufactures of ſilk and carpets. The town chiefly conſiſts of one broad well-built ſtreet, with ſome ſmaller branches, and contains five pariſh-churches, and an hoſpital. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and was made a county of itſelf, in the reign of king John. The corporation is compoſed of a mayor, aldermen, recorder, ſheriff, two bailiffs, common-council, &c. There are for the town eleven juſtices of the peace, viz. the biſhop of Wincheſter, the recorder, the mayor, the laſt mayor, five aldermen, and two burgeſſes, all who have paſſed the chair are aldermen. The mayor is admiral of the liberties. The reſort of company here, during the ſummer months, for the purpoſe of ſea-bathing, has occaſioned conſiderable improvements in the town, and a regular maſter of ceremonies has been appointed to regulate the amuſements. The town is well ſupplied with good freſh water, from diſtant ſprings, by pipes; and adjacent to the town is a chalybeate ſpring. Packets ſail regularly, in time of peace, from Southampton to Cherburg: packet boats ſail every morning, except Monday, to the iſle of Wight. In time of war, a cutter is ſtationed here, by government, which ſails every fortnight for Guernſey and Jerſey, which convey paſſengers or parcels; and veſſels, of from twenty-five to forty tons, continually trade to thoſe iſlands; beſides which, there are about thirty veſſels employed in foreign commerce, and upwards of one hundred in the coaſting-trade: the river is deep enough for the largeſt ſhips. Southampton has three markets weekly, on Tueſday, Thurſday, and Saturday: 25 miles SE. Saliſbury, and 75 SW. London. Long. 1. 26. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. 51. N.

SOUTHAMPTON, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia: 30 miles SW. Suffolk.

SOUTHAMPTON WATER, or Triſſanton Bay, a bay of the Engliſh channel on the coaſt of Hampſhire, extending from about three miles above Southampton to the channel, that ſeparates the Iſle of Wight from the continent.

SOUTHBURY, a town of the United States of America, in Connecticut: 8 miles NNE. Danbury.

SOUTHOLD a town of United America, in the ſtate of New York, in Long Iſland.

SOUTHWARK, or The Borough, that is, the Borough of Southwark, a town of England, in the county of Surry, on the right ſide of the Thames, oppoſite the city of London, to which it may be conſidered as a fauxbourg or ſuburb. It contains four pariſhes, and for its number of houſes and inhabitants is equal to many cities. Southwark was governed by its own bailiffs till the year 1327. The city however found great inconveniences from its neighbourhood, malefactors eſcaping thither out of the reach and cognizance of the city magiſtrates. This made the city long deſirous of getting Southwark under her ſubjection, and a grant was made of that town to the city in the laſt mentioned period, when the mayor of London was conſtituted bailiff of Southwark, and impowered to govern it by his deputy. The inhabitants ſome time after recovered their former privileges, but in the 4th year of the reign of Edward VI. the crown granted it to the city of London, for the ſum of 647l. 2s. 1d. and within about a month after the paſſing of that patent, in conſideration of the farther ſum of 500 marks, paid to the crown by the city, Southwark was made one of the city wards, named Bridge Ward without; when the number of aldermen being increaſed from twenty-five to twenty-ſix; a new one was choſen to govern that borough. In virtue of the above grant, Southwark has ever ſince been ſubject to the Lord Mayor, who has under him a ſteward and a bailiff; the former of whom holds a court of record every Monday at St. Margaret's-hill, for all debts, damages, and treſpaſſes, within his limits. There are ſeveral priſons in Southwark; and two hoſpitals, that of St. Thomas and Guy's. It is mentioned in hiſtory, in the year 1052, when earl Godwin arrived there with a powerful fleet, and having caſt anchor till the return of the tide, paſſed London bridge without oppoſition, in order to engage the royal navy, which conſiſted of fifty ſhips of war, and then lay oppoſite to Weſtminſter; but matters being accommodated between the king and earl Godwin, the latter returned, and repaſſed the bridge, which was then of wood. Southwark ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament.

SOUTHWELL, a town of England, in the county of Nottingham. Its church is Collegiate, and was founded in the 7th century. There belong to it ſixteen prebendaries or canons, ſix vicars choral, an organiſt, ſix ſinging-men, ſix choriſters, beſides ſix boys, who attend as probationers, a regiſter to the chapter, a treaſurer, an auditor, a verger, &c. It was ſurrendered at the diſſolution, but Henry VIII. refounded it, and appointed it a biſhop in 1534, and reſtored it to its ancient privileges, which were confirmed by queen Elizabeth and James I. The cuſtos rotulorum and juſtices of the peace, who are nominated by the archbiſhop of York, and conſtituted by a commiſſion under the great ſeal, hold their ſeſſion both at Southwell and Scroby, and perform all other judiciary acts diſtinct from the county. Here are the ruins of a very grand palace, demoliſhed in the civil wars, which belonged to the archbiſhops of York, who had three parks here, which, though diſparked, ſtill retain the name. Here is a weekly market on Saturday: 12 miles NE. Nottingham, and 135 N. London.

SOUTHWOLD, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Suffolk, ſituated on a point of land at the mouth of the river Blythe, in a bay of the German ocean, almoſt ſurrounded by the ſea at high water. It is fortified with two batteries, and has a weekly market on Thurſday. In the year 1747, the haven was cleared by act of parliament. The bay, vulgarly called Solebay, is remarkable for the famous fight in the year 1666, between the Engliſh fleet of 114 men of war and frigates, and the Dutch fleet of 103 men of war, in which the latter were defeated, with the loſs of near ſeventy ſhips, two admirals and 6000 men; while the Engliſh loſt only one ſhip and ſome gallant officers. This fight was off the bay to the north: but that in 1672, was in the bay, between the Dutch fleet of ninety-one men of war, and the combined fleets of England and France of 101, commanded by the duke of York, afterwards James II. the iſſue of which day was rather uncertain. The French being remiſs in their duty, we loſt four ſhips, the earl of Sandwich, and ſeveral other officers of note, and the Dutch three: 35 miles NE. Ipſwich, and 104 NE. London. Lat. 52. 18. N.

SPA, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia and biſhopric of Liege, ſituated in the marquiſate of Franchimont, on a ſmall river which runs into the Ourte; it was only a ſmall village before the diſcovery of its mineral waters, about the year 1326; it now conſiſts of one large ſtreet, or rather two joined by a bridge over the ſtream that runs through it, with ſeveral ſmaller ſtreets and rows of houſes; the older houſes irregularly built, and moſtly of wood and plaſter, the more modern of brick and ſtone. The ſoil about the town is rocky, gravelly, or loamy, with ſome mixture of iron ore of one kind or other, more or leſs viſible every where; the country about it is not fertile in grain, on account of the hills and woods with which it abounds; but they have plenty of ſheep, kine, and poultry, with great quantities of game, and the ſtreams abound with fiſh, trout, eels, cray fiſh, &c. During the water drinking ſeaſon, the town is furniſhed like a fair with a variety of toys, &c. There are beautiful and healthful rides on every ſide, with great variety of pleaſant and romantic walks. For evening diverſions, there are public rooms for aſſemblies every night, and balls two or three times a week. The medicinal waters of Spa, are by ſome ſuppoſed to have been known to Pliny, while others ſuppoſe that the waters which Pliny mentions in his natural hiſtory, were thoſe at Tongres. The chief ſprings are called, 1. Pouhon, 2. Sauveniere, 3. Groiſbeeck, 4. Geronſter, to which Dr. Lucas has added the 5. Pouhon Pia, and 6. Barriſar. The waters have been deemed the property of the community of Spa, till a late biſhop of Liege thought proper to ſeize them into his own hands; but by an appeal to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar, in the year 1745, the waters were reſtored to their ancient proprietors, who impoſe a ſmall duty on every flaſk exported under their ſeal. The magiſtracy is compoſed of a mayor, two burgomaſters, ſeven echevins and a greffier, appointed by the biſhop of Liege and changed every year: 16 miles SE. Liege, and 21 E. Huy. Long. 23..20. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 29. N.—In the month of September, 1794, this town was taken by the French.

SPAIN, a country of Europe, bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean, on the eaſt by France, from which it is ſeparated by the Pyrennées, on the ſouth-eaſt and ſouth by the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar and the Atlantic; and on the weſt by Portugal and the Atlantic. Its greateſt extent from north to ſouth, 460 miles; from eaſt to weſt, in the northern part, about 520 miles; towards the center 300, and near the ſouth-eaſt rather more than 200. Spain is at preſent divided into fourteen provinces, which are Navarre, Biſcay, and Aſturias to the north; of which Biſcay is ſubdivided into the provinces of Alva, Guipuſcoa, and Biſcay, properly ſo called: to the weſt are Galicia and Eſtramadura: to the ſouth Upper and Lower Andaluſia, containing Grenada, Jaen, Cordova and Seville, and the kingdom of Murcia: to the eaſt that of Valencia, Aragon and Catalonia; and in the middle of the monarchy, the kingdom of Leon and Old and New Caſtiles. The number of rivers is ſaid to be above 150, but the principal are the Ebro, Guadalquivir, Tagus, Duero, Guadiana, Guadalaviar, and Segura. The air in moſt of the provinces is pure and dry, but in June, July and Auguſt, the days are unſufferably hot, eſpecially in the middle of the country; while in the night a traveller often ſhivers with cold. Towards the north, and in the mountainous parts, the air, as uſual, is cooler than in the ſouth, and near the ſea contracts a moiſture. It ſeldom rains, and the winter froſts are never ſuch as to bind up the ground; want of temperature in the heat, and coolneſs of the air is the reaſon that ſeed lies a long time in the ground before it ſhoots up: ſometimes, indeed, a cool breeze, by the Spaniards called Gallego, iſſues from the mountains of Galicia; and this without great precaution, occaſions violent and frequently fatal colds. The country in general labours under a great ſcarcity of corn, which is chiefly owing to their neglect of agriculture; for though the ſoil is in many places extremely dry, and the growth of grain and other fruits very much obſtructed in the day-time by the exceſſive heats, and in the night by an intenſe cold; yet, from the hiſtorians and geographers, Spain appears to have formerly enjoyed a great plenty of corn, ſo that the preſent ſcarcity of that commodity muſt proceed from the neglect of tillage: on the other hand, it abounds in the moſt delicious fruits, ſuch as pears, peaches, olives, figs, grapes, almonds, cheſnuts, lemons, oranges, pomegranates, &c. It produces alſo very good ſaffron. The Spaniſh wines are greedily bought up by foreign nations. The value of the wine and grapes annually exported out of the country, about Malaga alone, amounts to 1,500,000 of piaſtres. Several parts of the country alſo produce ſugar canes. Spain enjoys likewiſe great plenty of exquiſite honey, and ſilk in abundance, but little flax and hemp; ſalt, eſpecially towards the ſea coaſt, is ſo plentifully procured, that conſiderable quantities thereof are exported; a great deal of ſea ſalt in particular is made in the maritime parts of Andaluſia, Catalonia, and Valencia; likewiſe on the iſlands of Majorca, Jviça, and Formentera; where the ſun ſerves inſtead of fire. But the principal ſalt-works are in Valencia; the kind of ſalt procured from the plant kali, which grows on the ſea ſhore, and is called ſoude de Barille, and de Bourdine, it being uſed alſo in the making of ſoap and glaſs, is produced in ſuch plenty in Murcia and part of Grenada, that Alicant alone has exported in one year 4,111,664 pounds of ſoude de Barille; and 770,960 pounds of the ſoude de Bourdine, excluſive of a better kind of ſalt called agua azul; beſides no inconſiderable quantities exported from other ports. In this country are alſo to be ſeen, innumerable flocks of fine ſheep, part of which during winter feed in the levels, and in ſummer are driven up again into the mountains; from theſe ſheep called Ovejas Merines, is procured the beſt wool: others are kept always in one place: and the third kind make the fat ſheep. Aſtariz computes the number of ſhepherds at 40,000. The beſt wool is that of Old Caſtile; though the Spaniſh wool in general is extremely fine and valuable. Andaluſia and Aſturia are particularly famous for their horſes; there are alſo great numbers of mules, and but few horned cattle. In Andaluſia are caught the wild bulls for the bull-fights. Among the many mountains in Spain, the Pyrennées are the moſt remarkable, which ſe rate Spain from France. The mountains of Spain, according to anc writers, are very rich in gold and ſilver; but the Spaniards rather cho that theſe metals ſhould be imported from America, than that they ſho have the trouble of ſearching for them in their own country; and th theſe treaſures lie buried in the mountains: but the iron mines are work here with great ſkill and induſtry. Spain wants not alſo other mineral ſuch as lead, tin, cinnabar, quickſilver, alum, vitriol, copperas, lapis mineral ſprings are found in many parts. The kingdom of Spain is e mated to contain about 7,500,000 inhabitants, though it would ſupp twice that number if properly cultivated, if its manufactures were enco raged, and its mines worked. In the times of the Goths and the Moo it contained between 20 and 30,000,000 of people. The uſual reaſ aſſigned for this difference is the expulſion of the Moors. It is ſaid, th when Ferdinand the Pious took Seville from them, in the year 1248, ſeveral diſtricts of the kingdom contained 100,000 towns and villages, very populous; and when Ferdinand the Catholic reduced the kingdom Grenada, it conſiſted of fifty fortified towns, beſides an infinite number leſſer places, the greater part of which were afterwards demoliſhed: th extirpation of the Moors was indiſputably one principal cauſe of the p ſent thinneſs of its inhabitants. But this affected Andaluſia and Grena and of the few to be met with here, the greateſt part are in the hands the French, who are very numerous in Spain; the natives, themſelv

A modern traveller ſays, it is, by nature, placed in the moſt happy ſitu labours. The ſoil, without requiring a fatiguing cultivation, is natura fertile, and produces every neceſſary of life: the men who inhabited were, according to hiſtorians, robuſt and warlike. By what means, the has this vaſt monarchy, which could never be ſubjugated by want, ſo oft become the prey of its neighbours? The ſolution of this curious proble muſt be ſought in the inteſtine wars of the coloniſts, and the native inh bitants. This country, unfortunate by the beneficence of nature, was lo a ſcene of bloodſhed, and ever diſputed and envied: theſe ſeem to ha been the unhappy conſequences of its mild and fertile climate, which b came the nurſery of rival and inimical nations. Spain, from its poſitio climate, and fertility, has been the victim of hoſtile nations. The Ph nicians are the firſt of which we find traces in hiſtory: this people land

The natives did not think themſelves ſufficiently powerful to repel the ne comers, or theſe, at firſt, treated them with mildneſs, and thereby gain their eſteem and admiration, and were even aided by them in ſome of th firſt enterpriſes. The Phœnicians founded a colony upon that coaſt, whi nature had marked out to become the centre of commerce. The Phœ cians, at firſt, made ſeveral voyages, with the conſent of the natives: th acquired, in exchange for their merchandiſe, certain portions of land, whi they were deſirous to occupy, and the firſt years of this alliance were them equally peaceful and lucrative; but becoming more avaricious, a the old inhabitants better underſtanding their true intereſts, they ſo ſtained with blood a country, inhabited by people whom they were co to civilize. Their ſettlements extended to the ſouthern coaſts, and i the country as far as Cordova. Much about the ſame time, the Greeks, Phœnicians, after having founded Marſeilles, went to Spain, and pla there ſeveral colonies; they poſſeſſed a part of the kingdoms of Valen and Catalonia; their ſettlements were afterwards extended to Arag and, according to Strabo, as far as Galicia. The Carthaginians, not deſirous of profit and of plunder, and being merchants and navigators well as their rivals, thought proper to diſpute with them a ſoil leſs ſcorch and more fertile, than that of Africa; they alſo founded colonies, not without firſt having ſhed much blood. The ancient inhabitants hav but few other wants than thoſe of nature, and not diſcovering their fut tyrants in the new coloniſts, and poſſeſſing but little knowledge of co merce and navigation, they left the care and profits of theſe, and with th all diſputes, to the Greeks and the Carthaginians. The Romans took ſt opportunity to drive the Carthaginians from Spain. This kingdom became the theatre of two of the moſt famous wars of antiquity: by the firſt, which laſted 24 years, Rome obliged Carthage to cede to her a part of her conqueſts; and by the ſecond, which continued but for 17 years, Carthage was entirely ſtripped of her poſſeſſions and her power. Under the Romans, Spain was divided into Bœtica, Luſitania, and Tarraconenſis. Bœtica, ſo called from the Bœtis, now the Guadalquivir, comprehended all the country between Grenada and the mouth of the Guadiana, properly ſpeaking, Upper and Lower Andaluſia, and a part of New Caſtile; Luſitania extended from the Guadiana to the Douro; and Tarraconenſis, as extenſive as the other two diviſions, comprehended all the reſt of the kingdom. The Romans poſſeſſed this rich and extenſive peninſula about 600 years. Towards the 5th century, a ſwarm of barbarians fell upon the fine provinces of the empire; the Vandals, Alans, and Suevi, invaded Spain, after having paſſed through Gaul, conquered a part of it, and divided their conqueſts among them. The Vandals inhabited Andaluſia, and gave it their name; the Alans had Portugal; and the Suevi, Galicia. Theſe barbarians thus eſtabliſhed, and war becoming one of the number of their ants, turned their arms againſt themſelves. The Suevi having ſubjugated the Alans, would have ſought to conquer the reſt of Spain, had not the Viſigoths, who had eſtabliſhed their throne in Narbonne, and held the ſovereignty of Rouſſillon, Catalonia, and Aragon, oppoſed their attempt, and driven them back to Galicia. Theſe Goths found no difficulty in driving the Romans almoſt entirely out of Spain: they ruined the little kingdom of Suevi alſo, and remained undiſturbed poſſeſſors of a monarchy there 130 years. Roderic was the laſt of their kings; the famous battle of Xeres, in 712, put the Moors in poſſeſſion of the greateſt and fineſt part of Spain. Other Moors, Arabs, Saracens, or Africans, ſucceeded to the firſt, and conquered, without difficulty, all the fine provinces of Spain, except thoſe of the north, where ſteep and barren mountains were always an aſylum of liberty for the inhabitants, and ſerved as a nurſery to that race of kings, who were one day to be the avengers of Spain and religion, for the invaſion and oppreſſion of the Moors. Nothing can be more confuſed than the dynaſties of the Moors, or Arabs, who reigned in Spain. That of the Chriſtian monarchs who diſputed with them the kingdom, and, taking advantage of their diviſions, drove them out of it, is not leſs e; their glory was at its greateſt height, when civil wars, treaſon, and frequent aſſaſſinations, diſturbed the peace of theſe powerful kingdoms, jealous of each other. The Chriſtian monarchs, long accuſtomed to conquer the Moors, thus divided, had, within little more than a century, taken from them Toledo, Cordova, Seville, and Murcia. Grenada ſtill flouriſhed, and was become their only ſtrong hold, when Caſtile and Aragon, united in the perſons of Ferdinand and Iſabella, formed too great a power to be reſiſted by a kingdom, enfeebled by inteſtine commotions: Grenada was reduced, in the year 1492, after a ſiege of two years. The Moors had reigned in Spain about eight centuries, and were totally ruined by this defeat; perſecuted, deſpoiled, burned, or converted and baptized by thouſands, they were, at length, driven from the kingdom in the reign of Philip III. The religion of Spain is that of the church of Rome, and the king is nearly abſolute.

SPAITLA, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Tunis: according to Dr. Shaw, one of the moſt remarkable places in Barbary, for the extent and magnificence of its ruins. For there is, firſt of all, a ſumptuous triumphal arch of the Corinthian order, conſiſting of one large arch, with a leſſer one on each ſide of it; from this arch, all along to the city, there is a pavement of large black ſtones, with a parapet wall, raiſed breaſt high on each ſide of it, intended, perhaps, to hinder the populace from incommoding the emperor in his triumphant entrance into the city. Near the end of this pavement, we paſs through a beautiful portico, built in the ſame ſtyle and manner with the triumphal arch, which conducts us afterwards into a ſpacious court: here are the ruins of three contiguous temples, whoſe ſeveral roofs, porticos, and facades, indeed, are broken down; but the reſt of the fabric, with its reſpective columns, pediments, and entablatures, remain perfect and entire. There is in each of theſe temples a nich, fronting the portico; and behind that of the middlemoſt, we have a ſmall chamber, which might have ſerved for the veſtry. Spaitla is pleaſantly ſituated upon a riſing ground, ſhaded all over with juniper-trees: 31 leagues SW. Tunis, and 34 SSE. Bona.

SPALATRO, a ſeaport of Venetian Dalmatia, with a good harbour, ſituated on a peninſula; the ſee of an archbiſhop. The harbour is large and deep, and well frequented. Without the walls is a ſulphureous ſpring, of conſiderable ſervice in chronical diſeaſes. Long. 34. 10. E. Ferro. Lat. 3. 56. N.

SPIRE, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and capital of a biſhopric of the ſame name. This city was founded before the birth of Chriſt, and receives its name from the ſmall river Spirbach, which runs into the Rhine, about 500 paces below. It contains a cathedral, three collegiate churches, and ſeveral convents, beſides two churches belonging to the Lutherans, of which religion the magiſtrates and the greater part of the inhabitants conſiſt. This city was taken from the Romans by the Franks, and was one of the original imperial cities. In the year 1529, a diet was held here, in which the reformers firſt obtained the name of Proteſtants. In the year 1689, it was deſtroyed by the French, and laid waſte for ten years, and not rebuilt till after the peace of Ryſwick. Before this diſaſter, it was the ſeat of the imperial chamber. In the year 1734, it was taken by the French; and in the month of December, 1793, it ſurrendered to the republican troops of France. The matricular aſſeſſment of the city of Spire for a Roman month is twenty-four florins, and the tax to the imperial chamber 118 rixdollars 14 kruitzers. The biſhopric of Spire is of conſiderable antiquity. The territories ſituated on the Rhine, between the Palatinate, the duchy of Wurtember the marggraviate of Baden, and the principality of Deux Ponts; about leagues in length, and 12 in breadth. It is mountainous, and covered wi foreſts, but produces nevertheleſs corn, wine, cheſtnuts, and almonds. T biſhop is ſuffragan of Mentz, and reſides at Bruchſal. Biſhop Lothari Frederick reſided eleven weeks in the city of Spire, and his ſucceſſors we for accounting it their place of reſidence; but this the city conſtantly o poſed. A new biſhop, before his entrance into the city, redreſſes all i complaints; and afterwards, ſitting on horſeback in the open air, betwi the two outermoſt gates, which during the ceremony are ſhut, with one ha in his left breaſt, he pronounces a bleſſing on the city, then binds himſe not to infringe the privileges of it, but rather to uphold and increaſe i liberties, and to live in quiet and harmony with it. He then makes h public entry, and the citizens pay homage to him. STAFFORDSHIRE, a county of England, bonnded on the north-eaſt by Derbyſhire, on the eaſt by Leiceſterſhire, on the ſouth-eaſt by Warwickſhire, on the ſouth by Worceſterſhire, on the weſt by Shropſhire, and on the north-weſt by Cheſhire, about 54 miles in length from north to ſouth, and from 18 to 36 in breadth. It is divided into five hundreds, which contain one city (Litchfield) twenty-one towns, and 181 pariſhes. Towards the north is a ridge of hills, which under various names are continued through different counties into Scotland. The middle and ſouthern parts of the county are more level, with a few hills, of which ſome are compoſed of gravel, others contain lime-ſtone, and other ſtones of a coarſe kind, fit for roads, rough walls, and pavement. The higheſt ground in the northern part called the Moorland, is ſuppoſed to be above 1500 fe above the level of the river Thames, at Brentford. The ſoil is various from a ſtiff clay to a looſe ſand, loamy, and in ſome places a thin light blac earth, with a gravelly bottom. This county contains about 780,800 acre of which 600,000 are in a ſtate of cultivation. The mines of Staffordſhire are rich and extenſive; thoſe of coal are ſuppoſed to occupy a ſpace o 50,000 acres: the beds of lime-ſtone alſo are numerous, and in ſome diſtricts alabaſter is met with: iron ore is found in large quantities, particularly in the ſouthern part of the county. In theſe mines of coal, ſays late ſenſible writer, lime, and iron, and in the founderies, blaſt furnace ſlitting mills, and other branches of the iron trade, great numbers of workmen are employed, and the extenſion of the iron trade in particular is o great conſequence to the intereſts of this kingdom. The extent of th iron trade in all its varieties, wrought and unwrought, for agricultural an other internal purpoſes, and for home conſumption and exportation, unde its innumerable ſhapes and forms, is now ſo very great, as to rival even tha of the great ſtaple, wool; and to make the ſuperiority of the latter ſomewhat queſtionable; and from the abundance of iron ore and fuel, wit which this county abounds, the trade, particularly ſo far as relates to th production of the metal, is capable of being much extended; and there ca be little doubt of the poſſibility that this county may wholly ſupply itſel with that article. The other minerals of the county are principally tho of copper and lead, of both which conſiderable quantities are raiſed in th northern part of the county, on the borders of Derbyſhire, with ſevera ſmelting and braſs-works; and in the neighbourhood of Cheadle is a conſiderable ſalt-work. The principal rivers are the Trent, Dove, Manifold Sow, and Tame. According to the agricultural report, the horned cattle ſheep, and ſwine of this county ſeem to be of a quality equal, if not ſuperior to moſt other counties of the kingdom. The towns are Stafford, Newcaſtle under Line, Tamworth, Brewood, Bromley Abby, Burſlem, Burton upon Trent, Betley (the market diſcontinued) Cannock (market diſcontinued) Cheadle, Eccleſhal, Leek, Lougnor, Penkridge, Rugely, Stone Tutbury, Uttoxeter, Walſal, Wedneſbury, and Wolverhampton. STALIMENE, anciently called Lemnos, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, about 15 miles in length, and 11 in breadth. It abounds with mountains and vallies, which in ſome places are cultivated, and produce a variety of fruit. The eaſtern part of the iſland is dry and barren; on the contrary, the weſt and ſouth coaſts are fertile, having a great number of ſprings. In it are two high mountains, by the ancients called Meſchilæ, which being volcanos occaſioned the name of Æthalia, to be given anciently to this iſland. It was formerly ſacred to Vulcan, whom the inhabitants worſhipped as their patron; and has always been famed for a certain kind of earth, or bole, which is called, from the place, Terra Lemnia, and from the ſeals or particular marks ſtamped upon it, bears likewiſe the appellation of Terra Sigillata. It was dug up formerly with many religious ceremonies, in all probability, firſt introduced by the Venetians, and conſiſting in this, viz. that the principal Turkiſh and Chriſtian inhabitants of the iſland meet on the ſixth of Auguſt, and on that day only, at a chapel called Sotira, half way betwixt the village of Cochino and the mountain where the earth is found, and from thence proceed in proceſſion to the top of the mountain, where Greek prieſts read the Liturgy; after which, certain perſons appointed for that purpoſe begin to dig, and as ſoon as they diſcover a vein of the deſired earth, give notice of it to the prieſts, who fill ſmall hair bags with it, and deliver theſe to the Turkiſh governor and other officers preſent. When they have taken up as much as they think proper, they fill up the place again, and return back in proceſſion as before. Some of the bags are ſent to the Turkiſh emperor, and the reſt marked with his ſeal, or with theſe words, Tin Imachton, i. e. the ſealed earth, and ſold by the ſangiak, or his deputies, to the inhabitants and foreign merchants. The ſangiak muſt give an account to the grand ſultan's treaſury of the money annually produced from it, and the inhabitants are capitally puniſhed if they keep this earth in their houſes, export or any wiſe trade in it without his knowledge and permiſſion. In this iſland formerly was a famous labyrinth, conſiſting of a ſtately building, ſupported by forty pillars, of an uncommon height and thickneſs. The two principal places, and once towns, here are Cochino, formerly Hepheſtias, and Lemno or Stalimene, the ancient Myrina. It is the reſidence of a Greek biſhop. Long. 43. 1. E. STATEN ISLAND, an iſland belonging to the United States of America, and forming the county of Richmond. It is about 18 miles in length, and at a medium ſix or ſeven in breadth, and contains 3152 inhabitants. On the ſouth ſide is a conſiderable tract of level good land; but the iſland in general is rough, and the hills high. Richmond is the only town of any note on the iſland, and that is a poor inconſiderable place. The inhabitants are principally Dutch and French.

STATEN LAND, an iſland at the extremity of South America, about twelve leagues in length, and five in breadth, ſeparated from Terra del Fuego by the ſtrait of Le Maire. The account in Anſon's Voyage ſays, "that though Terra del Fuego had an aſpect extremely barren and deſolate, yet this iſland of Staten Land far ſurpaſſes it in the wildneſs and horror of its appearance: it ſeeming to be entirely compoſed of inacceſſible rocks, without the leaſt mixture of earth or mould between them. Theſe rocks terminate in a vaſt number of ragged points which ſpire up a prodigious height, and are all of them covered with everlaſting ſnow; the points themſelves are on every ſide ſurrounded with frightful precipices, and often overhang in a moſt aſtoniſhing manner; and the hills which bear them are generally ſeparated from each other by narrow clefts, which appear as if the country had been rent by earthquakes, for theſe chaſms are nearly perpendicular, and extend through the ſubſtance of the main rocks, almoſt to their very bottoms: ſo that nothing can be imagined more ſavage and gloomy than the whole aſpect of this coaſt." Captain Cook, who paſſed the Straits of Le Maire in the month of January, 1769, ſays, "in the appearance of Staten Land he did not diſcover the wildneſs and horror th is aſcribed to it in the account of lord Anſon's Voyage. On the north ſid are the appearances of bays or harbours; and the land, when he ſaw it, wa neither deſtitute of wood nor verdure, nor covered with ſnow. Long. 6 W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 40. S.

STATO DELLA CHIESA, or State of the Church, the name give to the dominions of the pope, in Italy; theſe dominions are bounded o the north by the Venetian States, on the eaſt by the Adriatic and part o the kingdom of Naples, on the ſouth by the Mediterranean, and on th weſt by the Mediterranean, the duchy of Tuſcany, and the duchy of Modena. They are compoſed of ſeveral ſtates or provinces, viz. the Bologneſe duchy of Ferrara, Romagna, duchy of Urbino, marquiſate of Ancona county of Caſtello, territory of Perugia, the Orvietan, duchy of Spoleto or Umbria, Sabina, duchy of Caſtro, Patrimonio, or Patrimony of St Peter, and Campania, or Campagna di Roma. The whole forming country about 220 miles in length; the breadth is very unequal, being i the centre more than a hundred; towards the ſouth, where it borders o Naples, about thirty; northward, near the Venetian States, rather mor than forty; and where it joins Tuſcany, hardly twenty. Over thi country the pope is the temporal as well as eccleſiaſtical prince. The eccleſiaſtical power is claimed by the popes, as ſucceſſors of St. Peter over al the Chriſtian church, and is acknowledged by all Roman Catholic ſtates but this ſubmiſſion is different in different countries. The temporal powe has riſen from the grants of ſucceſſive emperors of Rome and Germany as likewiſe from other princes. He is elected by the cardinals from amon themſelves. The cardinals are the pope's council, and his miniſters, th chiefs of the tribunals, and the princes of the church; the time of thei inſtitution is unknown. Before the 10th century, they were called prieſt and deacons, who aſſiſted the biſhop; a long time after that, they wer conſidered as the only electors of the head of the church, their dignit being inferior to that of biſhops, and equal to that of abbots. After thi they became biſhops: and, in 1464, they were decorated with the purple and inſenſibly they obtained the firſt rank after the pope. They are divided into ſix cardinal biſhops, fifty cardinal prieſts, and fourteen cardina deacons. The Conclave is the place where the cardinals meet for the election of the pope, and is generally one of the galleries of the Vatican. Th court of Rome is numerous and brilliant; the principal offices are occupie by cardinals, ſuch as the chamberlain, who is head of the finances, an acts as pope between the death of one and the election of another; th ſecretary of ſtate, who is at the head of the adminiſtration; the datary who preſides over the appointment and inſtitution of benefices; the cardinal-vicar, who officiates as the biſhop of Rome, ſuperintends the moral of the inhabitants, examines the parochial clergy, and ſuperintends th preſs. Other cardinals are, vice-chancellor, auditor, ſecretary of briefs &c. The conſiſtory is the ſupreme tribunal, and formed of cardinals generally aſſembled in the palace once a week, or whenever the pope judge it neceſſary, when he himſelf preſides under a canopy. Here they deliberate on all affairs, temporal and ſpiritual, which concern the Holy See, and here they elect the cardinals, and thoſe biſhops which depend on the pope. The inferior colleges are called congregations, ſuch as that of the inquiſition and the conſultum, eſtabliſhed to receive the complaints of the people againſt their governors, and of vaſſals againſt their lords. The Rot is eſtabliſhed for the adjudication of all civil cauſes above the value of 50 Roman crowns (rather more than 100l.) This tribunal is compoſed o twelve judges, appointed by the different Roman Catholic countries, an are ſelected from among prelates of diſtinction, whoſe deciſions are laws The revenues of the pope are very great; the military force ordinaril conſiſts of 6000 troops; but according to circumſtances are eaſily increaſe or diminiſhed. His body guard is compoſed of 400 Swiſs and 70 cuiraſſiers. Four gallies and two frigates at Civita Vecchia, conſtitute his naval force. Rome is the capital.

STAVEREN, one of the moſt ancient towns of Frieſland, ſuppoſed ha have been built a year before Chriſt, and to have taken its name from an ancient idol, worſhipped by the inhabitants, called Stavon. Great part of the ancient town having been deſtroyed by the ſea, the inhabitants rebuilt it in the place where it now ſtands, as being leſs expoſed. It was anciently a very rich, powerful, and populous city, with the beſt harbour in that country. The ancient kings of Frieſland made it their ordinary reſidence, in a palace built by Richolde, the firſt king, about the year 400. Radbode VI. after he had conquered all the country as far as Utrecht, called his conqueſts the Kingdom of Staveren, which ſhews the flouriſhing ſtate of the town at that time, and was the occaſion of its being included in the league of the German Hanſe towns. It was ſurrounded with walls and ditches about the year 339, by Obidalde VI. duke of Frieſland. It is ſince reduced very much from its ancient grandeur, the harbour being choked up; however, there remains ſtill enough of its former ſplendour to make it a conſiderable town; and they ſtill carry on ſome trade, eſpecially in fiſhing, and in paſſage-boats over the pools and lakes of the neighbourhood: 40 miles N. In the French army were the duke of Chartres, then in the 15th year of his age, Louis de Bourbonne, grand nephew of the great Condé, and Arnaud, prince of Conti, all princes of the blood, and rivals in reputation. The young princes, to whoſe bravery this victory was attributed, were received in France amidſt the acclamations of the people, who every where crowded the roads as they paſſed. The ladies of the court contrived new faſhions of dreſs, which they called Steenkirks; and the men, ever ready to copy the follies of the fair ſex, wore cravats of the ſame appellation. In this action the allies were computed to loſe 7000 men, in which were included the earl of Angus, general Mackay, ſir John Launier, ſir Robert Douglas, with many other officers of rank and merit; and the French purchaſed the advantage dear, as, beſides 3000 private men, the prince of Turenne, the marquis de Bellefonds, Fermaçon, Tilladet, and many other gallant officers loſt their lives: 2½ miles NW. In the year 1522, the comte de Meurs beſieged it for the duke of Gueldres, but was compelled to retire. In 1581, the count de Rennebourg beſieged it for the king of Spain; but, after five months, the Engliſh troops, under the command of general Norris, obliged him to raiſe the ſiege. The year following, the duke of Parma took it by a ſtratagem of Verdugo, the governor of Frieſland, who employed a lad to underſtand by his means, the depth of the water in the ditch. The lad let his hat fall into the water, pointing out the moſt ſhallow place, the Spaniards immediately ſcaled the walls, took the town, and made ſlaughter of the inhabitants, becauſe they had profaned the Catholic religion, by inſulting the images, and ſpoiling the eccleſiaſtical ornaments at Haſſelt, a few days before. It was retaken by prince Maurice, the 4th of July, 1592, after a ſiege of ſix weeks, and has, ſince that time, remained under the dominion of the States-General: 55 miles SW. Embden, and 41 N. STEIN AM REIM, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Zurich, ſituated on he north ſide of the Rhine, at the weſt extremity of Lake Zell, with a bridge over the river. This town was ſurrounded with walls, in the year 966, by Burcard, the ſecond duke of Swabia, who endowed it with ſeveral privileges. In the year 1005, a Benedictine convent, founded by his conſort at Hohentweil, was removed to Stein, but continued under the government of an abbot, till the time of the reformation. In 1267, the town itſelf changed maſters, and devolved to the barons of Hohenklingen, who had long before built the ſeat of that name, which is yet ſtanding above the town. In 1443, both the ſeat and town were ſold, with all appurtenances, to the Klingenberg family, but in 1457, the burghers redeemed themſelves, and ſoon after entered into an alliance with Zurich, and Schafhauſen. In the year 1484, with an entire reſerve of their liberties and privileges, they put themſelves under the protection of Zurich, in ſuch a manner as they continue to this day. At the time of the reformation, Stein, in conjunction with moſt of its conventualiſts, embracing Proteſtantiſm; the convent was ſequeſtrated, and in 1524, Zurich appointed a bailiff to ſuperintend and collect its revenues. The high and low juriſdiction is lodged in the town, the magiſtracy of which is compoſed of burghermaſters, and a council, who are all natives, and of its own nomination, excepting the judge and his weibel or ſerjeant, who are appointed by the city of Zurich, though even theſe muſt be burghers of Stein. The above-mentioned ſeat of Hohenklingen has been converted into a hochwacht, or watch tower, and the caſtellan or klingen vogt, as he is called, reſides in it. On the other ſide of the Rhine, in a place called Burg, oppoſite to the town, is a church, ſeated on an eminence, and belonging to the town of Stein. STIRI, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Livadia: 9 miles S. Livadia.

STIRIA, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Auſtria, bounded on the north by the archduchy of Auſtria, on the eaſt by Hungary, on the ſouth by Carniola, and on the weſt by Carinthia. It is divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Stiria is bounded on the north by Auſtria, on the eaſt by Hungary, on the ſouth by Lower Stiria and Carinthia, and on the weſt by the archbiſhopric of Salzburg; and is about 110 miles in length, from eaſt to weſt, and from 25 to 45 in breadth, from north to ſouth. Lower Stiria is bounded on the north by Upper Stiria, on the eaſt by Hungary and Croatia, on the ſouth by Carniola, and on the weſt by Carinthia: its extent from north to ſouth is about 80 miles, and about 48 from eaſt to weſt. Upper Stiria contains many lofty mountains, but, by the induſtry of the inhabitants, the whole country is pretty well cultivated; inſomuch that, in many places, the very higheſt tops of the mountains are inhabited. The people who dwell in theſe parts in winter, when large quantities of ſnow fall, are, for ſeveral months, kept as it were priſoners; and even in general ſeldom come down from their heights. By continual cuſtom too they are habituated to the cold. It is very aſtoniſhing that, amidſt theſe mountains and ſteep heights, they are able to ſucceed with the plough, and that the eminences themſelves are likewiſe fertile. They cultivate a fine ſort of wheat, which is ſufficient not only for the ſupplies of their own neceſſities, but, in ſome meaſure, alſo for ſale. They have, in particular, large breeds of cattle, wild-fowl, game, and chamois; the brooks and lakes, of which there are many ſituated between the high rocks, are rich in fiſh. In ſome places, too, are ſmall vales; and the inhabitants endeavour to avail themſelves of every ſpot of earth. The mountains contain ſilver, lead, copper, and, in particular, iron. The iron mines have been already worked above 1000 years, and ſtill continue rich. The Stirian ſteel is highly valued.

The foreſts with which the ridges of the mountains here are covered, yield in ſufficient quantity, the wood neceſſary for the ſmelting huts. Silver was formerly dug; but ever ſince the year 1658, the mines have been filled with water. In the mountains, likewiſe, are hot-baths and medicinal ſprings. At Auſſee are ſome good ſalt-works. The principal rivers which run through this country, are the Muehr and Ens. Judenburg is the capital. Lower Stiria contains fewer mountains, and more campaign; the ſoil is generally fertile, and on the hills is produced ſome good wine. In it are hot-baths and medicinal ſprings. This part of the country is watered not only by the Muehr, but alſo by the Drave and Save. Gratz is the capital. In the whole duchy are near 120 towns, and about 500 citadels: many of the laſt ſtand on the higheſt ſummits of the rocks. The highways are good, notwithſtanding the country is mountainous. The language is very rough. The inhabitants of the quarter of Cilley are Winds, or Wends, and ſpeak the Wendiſh language, which is in uſe even among the common people for ſome miles from Gratz. Thoſe who are but a ſmall degree removed from the common rank, ſpeak Wendiſh, German, and Italian, and the principal inhabitants alſo French. No other doctrine, or worſhip, is permitted in all this country, excepting that of the Roman Catholic. At Seckau is a biſhop who bears the title of a prince of the holy Roman empire; he is ſubject to the archbiſhop of Salzburg, whoſe general vicar he alſo is through the greateſt part of Stiria. The moſt important manufactures in the country are the iron and ſteel-works, the produce of which is exported in great quantities. Stiria was formerly a part of Carinthia, but in the 11th century was ſeparated from it, and made a peculiar mark. Some affirm, that the emperor Conrad II. undertook this change in the year 1030, conferring that mark on count Ottocar I. of Steyr; but others aſcribe it to the emperor Henry IV. who, about the year 1722, created Ottocar II. count of Steyr, firſt marggrave over this county. The emperor Frederic I. in the year 1165, conferred the ducal dignity on the marggrave Ottocar, whom ſome call the fourth, but others the ſixth of that name; and this new duke, having no children, ceded his duchy, with the conſent of the ſtates, to his father-in-law, duke Leopold of Auſtria.

STIRLING, a town of Scotland, and capital of a county, to which it gives name, ſituated on the right bank of the Forth, on an eminence which terminates in a rock: ſuppoſed to be of conſiderable antiquity, and incorporated as early as the 12th century, about the middle of which it became a royal reſidence, when David I. kept his court here, that he might be near the abby of Cambuſkenneth, which he then founded. It is a royal burgh, and probably was made ſo in the 9th century. The town-council conſiſts of a provoſt, four bailies, a dean of guild, treaſurer, ſeven merchant counſellors, and ſeven deacons of trade. A bye law of this corporation, made in the year 1695, redounds to their credit; it obliges the members of council annually to take an oath, by which they bind themſelves to take no leaſe of any part of the public property under their management, nor to purchaſe any part of it; neither to receive any gratification out of the public funds, under pretence of a reward for their trouble, in going about the affairs of the borough, or of the hoſpitals founded in it. As far back as the end of the ſixteenth century, ſhalloons, manufactured in Stirling to a conſiderable extent, were ſent over to the Low Countries. Bruges was then the ſtaple port for Scotch commodities. The manufacturers miſtaking their own intereſt, and debaſing the quality of their ſhalloons, ſoon loſt, however, the advantages of that gainful branch of trade, and the town became miſerably poor: though the manufacture was greatly hurt by ſuch conduct, yet it was never entirely dropped. Coarſe ſhalloons continue to be manufactured in Stirling, and its neighbourhood. Towards the beginning of this century, and during the decay of the ſhalloon manufacture, that of the Tartan ſtarted up in its place: it continued to flouriſh till about the year 1760, but is now almoſt dwindled away. At preſent the carpet manufacture flouriſhes, and the cotton manufacture alſo begins to take place here. The river Forth runs ſo level in the neighbourhood of Stirling, that mills cannot be erected for the purpoſe of manufactures: in every other reſpect, Stirling is favourable for them, and coals are plentiful. The Salmon-fiſhery belonging to the town, which but a few years ago brought a revenue of 30l. now brings 405l. It is let to a company, who ſend the fiſh chiefly to the London and Edinburgh markets. Stirling caſtle is by ſome ſuppoſed to owe its firſt foundation to Agricola: it was often the reſidence of the kings of Scotland. Almoſt the whole minority of James VI. was ſpent here, under his tutor Buchanan. The outſide of the palace, which is now converted into barracks, is richly and curiouſly adorned with groteſque figures. Stirling is one of the ſeats of the circuit court, and the county meetings are uſually held here, though there is no public room, or hall, for the purpoſe. Only ſmall veſſels can come up to the town; the navigation is difficult, and the river winds ſo much, that the diſtance from Stirling to Alloa, which by land is only four miles, is twenty by water: 19 miles NE. Glaſgow, and 28 NW. Edinburgh.

STIRLINGSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the north by Perthſhire and Clackmananſhire, on the eaſt by the Forth and the county of Linlithgow, on the ſouth by the county of Dunbarton, and on the weſt by Loch Lomond; 36 miles long, and 8 or 9 in its general breadth. The ſouth parts of this county are mountainous, but that part which is near the Forth is fertile, and abounds with coal. This county produces corn, paſture, black cattle, ſheep, and horſes, beſides ſalmon and other fiſh, from the rivers. The Forth, which is the moſt famous, though not the largeſt, river in Scotland, runs from weſt to eaſt, into the Frith of Forth, receiving a great number of ſmaller ſtreams: this country is likewiſe watered by the Carron and Avon, beſides the new canal from Glaſgow, which runs thro' it to the Carron mouth. Its principal towns are Stirling and Falkirk.

STOCKHOLM, a city and capital of Sweden, ſituated on 7 iſlands, between the Baltic and the Malar Lake, from one of which the city receive its name. The harbour is of ſufficient depth to receive the largeſt veſſels u to the quay. It is generally ſuppoſed to have been founded in the year 12 or 1260, by Birger Jarl, regent of the kingdom, though others date th foundation a century before; but the court was not removed from Upſ before the laſt century. At the extremity of the harbour ſeveral ſtreet riſe one above another, in the form of an amphitheatre, with the palace, magnificent building, at the ſummit. Except in the ſuburbs, where ar ſome houſes of wood, the buildings for the moſt part are of ſtone, or o bricks ſtuccoed white, and moſt of them built on piles. A communication is formed between the ſeveral parts of Stockholm by means of twelv bridges. The royal academy of ſciences at Stockholm owes its inſtitution to Linnæus and a few other learned men, and was incorporated in the yea 1741: the royal academy of painting and ſculpture contains a fine collection of caſts, from the antique ſtatues at Rome, ſent by Louis XIV. t Charles XI. and preſented by the late king Adolphus Frederic to the academy. The arſenal contains an immenſe number of ſtandards and trophies, taken from the Imperialiſts, Poles, Ruſſians, and Danes. A nationa bank was eſtabliſhed at Stockholm towards the cloſe of the laſt centur In Stockholm, are manufactures of glaſs, china, woollen, ſilk, linen, &c The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 60,000. Long. 17. 55. STORNAWAY, a ſea-port town of Scotland, and capital of the iſland of Lewis, ſituated on a bay, with a harbour ſafe, ſpacious, and eaſy of acceſs, with excellent anchorage. Several of the merchants are engaged in the fiſhing trade, and employ one, two, or more veſſels, in the proper ſeaſon, conſtantly on the look-out for herrings. Their ſituation is very happy for fiſhing, being near to the weſt ſide of Lewis, and thoſe lochs and weſtern coaſts, which are reſorted to by the deep ſea-herrings, much more than the eaſtern ſhores, either of the main land of Scotland, or of the neighbouring iſlands. The gains are communibus annis, conſiderable on the trade; and they draw a large portion of the royal bounty for the encouragement of the fiſhery. They alſo ſend great quantities of oil, ſeal-ſkins, and other ſkins, annually to the markets. The Stornaway fiſhers, ſtill farther, have become famous for the vaſt herds of porpoiſes, which they kill in their lochs, ſometimes by hundreds at a time. Trade, but chiefly the fiſhing trade, gives birth to a lively and general induſtry, not only in Stornaway, but in other parts of Lewis; where the natural activity of the inhabitants is farther encouraged by the wiſe and liberal policy of the lord of the ſoil, in conſtructing roads, and by juſt regulations, leaving to the induſtrious the reward of their toil. Stornaway is a market, and is daily becoming a greater market for the produce of the ſoil, and the fruits of the fold and field. In the town of Stornaway there is a growing demand for houſes; the building of which gives employment to many hands; as maſons, carpenters, ſmiths, day labourers, &c. and people to cut, dry, and bring home peats, of which the conſumption is daily increaſing. How happy a change has been brought about in the iſland of Lewis, ſince the reign of James VI. of Scotland, and firſt of England, a period of leſs than two centuries? That prince, who was a great encourager of all the arts of peace, ſent a colony of induſtrious fiſhermen from the ſhire of Fife, in Scotland, with ſeveral Danes and Dutchmen, to teach and to exhibit an example of uſeful induſtry to the natives, with the encouragement of large allotments of bays and lands, indiſputably in the gift of the crown. The heir to Macleod, the chieftain of Lewis, together with his neighbours, fell upon the unfortunate ſtrangers from the low lands, and maſſacred them to the number of many hundreds in one night. Long. 3. 3. It is very ſtron being ſo ſurrounded by the ſea, that it is acceſſible only over bridges, a has beſides very good fortifications. It is the reſidence of the king's g vernor general, of the regency, the war-office, and the place where t ſtates of Swediſh Pomerania hold their meetings. Charles XII. king Sweden, ennobled its magiſtracy in 1714; and in 1720, king Frederick extended the like honour even to the members of the council. In the ye 1238, the Lubeckers landing in the night, took this town by ſurpriſe, a after pillaging every part of it, carried off the moſt wealthy of the inh bitants. Prince Witzlaf, in 1240, again put it in a thriving way, by t grant of very conſiderable privileges, which were afterwards augmented but, in 1277, it was a ſecond time plundered and laid in aſhes by the L beckers. It was formerly one of the principal Hanſe-towns. In 162 it held out a ſiege againſt the Imperialiſts, under general Wallenſtein, b in 1678, was ſo furiouſly bombarded by Frederick William, elector Brandenburg, that it ſurrendered on the third day of the ſiege, after t deſtruction of about 1800 houſes; and in 1715, was taken by a combin army of Ruſſians, Danes, Saxons, and Brandenburghers: 113 miles Berlin. Long. 31. 12. STRASBURG, a city of France, and capital of the department of the Lower Rhine, ſituated at the conflux of the Ill and the Bruſch, about a mile from the left bank of the Rhine. Before the revolution it was the capital of Alſace, and the ſee of a biſhop, who was a prince of the empire, the reſidence of a governor, an intendant, king's lieutenant, &c. The name of Straſburg it received about the ſixth century, which ſignifies the town of the ſtreet, becauſe it was ſituated on the high road from France to Germany. It occupies a ſpace of 2200 toiſes in length, and 1200 in breadth, and is well fortified with a citadel, by Vauban, the outwork of which reach almoſt to the Rhine. It has ſix gates, and 200 ſtreets, but for the moſt part very narrow; 4000 houſes of more ſtrength than beauty, and about 60,000 inhabitants. There are eight bridges acroſs the Ill, and one of wood, 3900 feet in length, over the Rhine, which in the middle is ſupported by an iſland, on which is a ſtrong caſtle. A canal is made from the Bruſch to the Rhine, and by means of a ſluice the country round may be laid under water, to the diſtance of 1500 toiſes. The cathedral is a beautiful Gothic ſtructure, founded in the year 1015, and finiſhed in the year 1275; the ſteeple was built 164 years after, and is 115 feet in height, in the form of a pyramid, wrought with a delicacy which ſtrikes the eye with aſtoniſhment, becauſe joined to ſolidity. The clock is an admirable piece of mechaniſm, and was conſtructed on the plan of Daſypodius, a celebrated mathematician : beſides the hour of the day it deſcribes very correctly the motions of the planets ; but it ſeems as if ſome of the movements were decayed. This city was formerly Imperial, but in the year 1682, it was taken by Louis XIV. and yielded to him by the peace of Ryſwick, who, however, granted to the inhabitants all their privileges and immunities ; among which one was, that they were to pay nothing to the king, but all the imports were to be expended in the ſupport of the city. Straſburg has an univerſity governed by twenty profeſſors, who are Lutherans, and another of Roman Catholics. The public magazines are filled every year, and the poor are carefully ſupplied by the magiſtrates. The military hoſpital is a handſome building, and the city infirmary will receive 800 patients of both ſexes, without diſtinction of religious opinions, beſides which there are two houſes of orphans, a foundling hoſpital, and an hoſpital for venereal complaints, a lazaretto for epidemical diſeaſes, a houſe of charity for mendicants, an anatomical hall and cabinet, a botanical garden, a public library, a military ſchool, &c. Before its union with France, the Lutherans only exerciſed public employments ; after that the catholics were admitted to a ſhare. From its ſituation Straſburg is a place of conſiderable commerce ; here are manufactures of tobacco, china, ſteel, lace, carpets, cloth, leather, &c. The revenus are ſaid to amount annually to the ſum of a million of livres, and in the year 1767, a plan was formed to embelliſh the city, correct the irregularities of the ſtreets, and build the houſes in a ſtate of uniformity. The Lutherans have ſeven churches, in one of which a moſt beautiful mauſoleum of white marble was erected, to the memory of the great marſhal Saxe, in the year 1777. The chapter of the cathedral was founded in the year 1019, to be compoſed of twenty-four nobles of the rank of counts : 75 poſts E. Paris. Long. 25. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 35. N.

STRONSA, one of the Orkney Iſlands, about ſix miles in length fro north to ſouth, and almoſt as broad from eaſt to weſt, ſo indented with bays that there is no part of the iſland above one mile from the ſea. This, wit the ſmall iſland of Papa, the extent of which round the ſhores is abou three miles ; and with the Holms or paſture iſlands, comprehends what i now termed the pariſh of Stronſa. The iſland of Stronſa has ſix principa neſſes, viz. Huipſneſs, Griceneſs, Odneſs, Lamneſs, Torneſs, and Linkſneſs. There are two promontories, Borrowhead on the ſouth-eaſt, an Rotheſholm (Ronſumhead) on the ſouth-weſt ; this was of old called Rodneip or Rodniemhead. The other parts of the ſea-coaſt or ſhores abou this iſland, conſiſt partly of three ſandy bays, one on the eaſt, the Milnbay ; one on the ſouth, the bay of Holland ; and one on the weſt, the bay of Erigarth or Weſt Wick. The ſandy beaches of the two firſt mentioned, extend each a mile in length ; that of the laſt not ſo much, excep at low-water of ſpring-tides, and conſiſt partly of ſkerries, (flat rock over which the ſea flows and ebbs); which, with the ſhores of the neſſe and ſouth-weſt promontory above-mentioned, produces great quantities o tang or ſea-weed, fit for the kelp manufacture. On the eaſt ſide of th iſland, little kelp can be made, as few ſkerries lie there to produce tang The water is deep nigh the ſhore, and the rocks abrupt, owing perhaps t their having no ſhelter from the German Ocean. The ridge or riſin ground, which runs almoſt the length of the iſland from north to ſouth hath its ſurface covered with a ſhort heath, where it has not been cut u lately for turf or fuel ; the ſoil is a dry, friable, blackiſh earth ; the bottom clay, mixed with ſmall ſtones, and in many places gravelly and ſhallow. The expences of cultivating ſuch a ſubject, might perhaps nearl equal its value when improved. It is the common paſture or out-freedo of all the farms and houſes adjacent to it. The ſmall iſland of Papa Stronſ lying flat with corn-fields, which have been ſtimulated by plenty o ware, to raiſe luxuriant crops of grain, lies on the north-eaſt ſide of Stronſ ſeparated from it by a narrow ſound, over which two men can row a ſma boat in five minutes, and adds a variegated beauty to the proſpect on th ſide. There are two commodious harbours or roadſteads in the iſland o Stronſa, ſafe for ſhipping at all ſeaſons, and in all weathers ; viz. Ling, ſound on the weſt ſide, and Papa Sound on the north-eaſt ſide of Stronſ ſheltered by the ſmall iſland of Papa Stronſa. There are bays alſo on t eaſt, ſouth-weſt, and north-weſt ſides, in which veſſels may drop ancho and ride ſafely, if the wind do not blow ſtrong on ſhore. The vicinity o all the cultivated lands in this diſtrict to the ſea ſhore, induced of old an ſtill induces the inhabitants to uſe ſea weed as their chief, and almoſt on manure. The number of ſouls is about 887. Long. 2. 43. E. Edinburg Lat. 58. 59. N.

STUHL WEISSENBURG, or Szekes Fejervar, a town of Hungary. It is a royal free town, ſituated in a marſhy ground, occaſioned by the river Sarwitz. This town is not only ſtrong by its ſituation, but had alſo formerly conſiderable works, which were diſmantled in 1702. From the town run three very large cauſeways or moles, among which are churches, houſes, gardens, and meadows; inſomuch, that the inhabitants of theſe ſuburbs, as they may be called, are more in number than thoſe of the town itſelf. This was formerly the place for the coronation of the kings, and generally alſo of their interment; but at preſent its beſt houſes are gone to ruin, and the town is extremely decayed. In the year 1490, it was taken and plundered by king Maximilian. In 1540, the Imperialiſts made themſelves maſters of it, and three years afterwards the Turks. In 1583, 1598, and 1599, the Imperialiſts attempted it in vain; but, in 1601, carried it, though the Turks in the following year regained it. In the year 1688, it fell again into the hands of the Imperialiſts: 84 miles SE. Vienna, and 24 W. Buda. Long. 35. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 17. N.

STUTTGART, a city of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, capital of the duchy of Wurtemberg, and reſidence of the duke, ſituated in a delightful country, on the Naſenbach, about two miles from the Neckar. The town is not large, but contains two well-built fauxbourgs. It is the ſee of a biſhop, which was removed from Beutelſpach, in the year 1321. The ſtreets are large and ſtraight, and the houſes handſome. The ducal palace is a magnificent building, and was begun in the year 1746. Stuttgart contains an academy of painting, ſculpture, and architecture, eſtabliſhed in the year 1701, and manufactures of ſtuffs, ſilk ſtockings, and ribbons. The origin of this town is uncertain; in the year 1285, it was beſieged, without ſucceſs, by the emperor Rodolphus I.; but, in 1287, he reduced count Eberhard to ſuch ſtreights, that he was compelled to promiſe the demolition of the walls of the city. In the years 1520 and 1567, the whole city was ſurrounded with walls; in 1546 and 1547, it ſuffered greatly by the Spaniards; in 1634, and the following years, by the Imperialiſts; and in 1688, 1693, and 1707, by the French: 40 miles NW. This province appears to have been one of the firſt that was inhabited and cultivated in this kingdom. The ſoil is fertile, and no labour is ſpared for the improvement of it. It abounds in fine arable land, paſtures, woods, iron mines, and forges; and its lakes are well ſtocked with fiſh. Its advantageous ſituation between the main ſea and the Malar Lake, is alſo the cauſe of a conſiderable trade. There are ſeveral conſiderable lakes beſides the Malar, as the Hielmar and Bawen. The inhabitants of this country chiefly ſubſiſt by agriculture, hunting, fiſhing, and working in the mines, and carry on a conſiderable trade in corn, iron, and wooden-ware. On account of the pleaſantneſs and fertility of the country, the dowager-queens uſed to have their dowery, and the dukes their duchies, in this province. Nykioping is the capital.

SUDEROE, one of the Faroer Iſlands, in the North Atlantic Ocean. It is remarkable for a dangerous whirlpool near it, which is occaſioned by a crater, 61 fathoms deep in the centre, and between 50 and 55 at the ſides. The danger at moſt times is great, but particularly ſo in ſtorms; for ſhips are irreſiſtibly drawn into it, the rudder loſes its power, and the waves beat as high as the maſts, ſo that an eſcape from it may be deemed miraculous. Notwithſtanding this hazard, the inhabitants, at the reflux, and in very ſtill weather, will venture in boats, for the ſake of fiſhing.

SUESANY, a town of Hungary: 8 miles WNW. Roſenberg.

SUEZ, a ſeaport of Egypt, ſituated on a point of land, in the form of a peninſula, on the weſtern coaſt of the Red Sea. It is not ſurrounded with walls; but the houſes are built ſo cloſely together, that there are only two paſſages into the city, of which that neareſt the ſea is open, the other ſhut by a very inſufficient gate. The houſes are very indifferent ſtructures; the khans being the only ſolid buildings in the city. Hardly any part now remains of the caſtle which the Turks built upon the ruins o the ancient Kolſum. It is very thinly inhabited. Among its inhabitan are ſome Greeks, and a few families of Copts. But, about the time of th departure of the fleet, it is crowded with ſtrangers. The ground lying around it is all one bed of rock, ſlightly covered with ſand. Scarcely a plant is to be ſeen any where in the neighbourhood. Trees, gardens, meadows, and fields, are entirely unknown at Suez. Fiſh is the only article of proviſions plentiful here. All other neceſſaries of life, for both men and the domeſtic animals, are brought from afar: from Cairo, which is three days' journey diſtant from Suez; Mount Sinai, at the diſtance of ſix days' journey; or Ghaſſo, at the diſtance of ſeven. The only water fit for drinking that is to be had here, comes from the wells of Naba, upon the other ſide of the gulf, and more than two leagues diſtant from Suez. The Arabs are the carriers; and they ſell this water at the rate of nine French ſous a ſkin; but though reputed the beſt, it is ſtill very bad. Several veſſels are annually employed in the navigation between this port and Jidda: four or five are freighted by the ſultan with corn for Mecca and Medina, which they convey to Jidda and Jambo; 14 others ſerve to carry paſſengers between Jidda and Suez. The commerce of Cairo with Suez is carried on only by means of caravans, which wait the arrival, and ſet out on the departure of the veſſels, that is, towards the end of April, or the beginning of May, and in the courſe of the months of July and Auguſt. That which M. Volney accompanied, in 1783, conſiſted of about 3000 camels, and 5000 or 6000 men. The merchandize conſiſted in wood, ſails, and cordage, for the ſhips at Suez; in ſome anchors, carried each of them by four camels, iron bars, carded wool, and lead; it likewiſe carried bales of cloth, and barrels of cochineal, corn, barley, and beans, Turkiſh piaſtres, Venetian ſequins, and Imperial dollars. All theſe commodities were deſtined for Jidda, Mecca, and Mocha, where they were to be bartered for Indian goods, and the coffee of Arabia, which forms the principal article of the returns: 60 miles ESE. Cairo. Long. 50. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 45. N.

SUFFOLK, a county of England, bounded on the north by Norfolk, on the eaſt by the German Sea, on the ſouth by Eſſex, and on the weſt by Cambridgeſhire; about 47 miles in length, and 27 in its mean breadth; in ſhape inclining to a creſcent, and ſuppoſed to contain about 800,000 acres. It is divided into 23 hundreds, in which are found 31 towns, and 575 pariſhes. The ſurface is, in general, level, with few eminences. In the centre of the county the ſoil is principally a ſtrong loam; on the north-weſt extremity is ſome fenn-land, and between the two ſome ſand: it is chiefly a ſandy ſoil on the ſea coaſt; towards the ſouth-eaſt, between the Orwel and the Stour, to the ſouth of Ipſwich, is a tract of rich loam. The cows of this county are in much repute for the quantity of milk they give; they are not of a large ſize, and univerſally without horns: and their draught-horſes are excellent: the number of ſheep is eſtimated at 240,000. Butter forms one of the moſt conſiderable exports of the country, with a conſiderable quantity of grain: hemp is cultivated in the northern part towards Eungay, and there are ſome plantations of hops on the borders of Eſſex, in the neighbourhood of Sudbury. The principal rivers are the Little Ouſe, Waveney, Stour, Orwel, Deben, Blyth, Alde, and Larke. The manufactures of Suffolk are inconſiderable. This county returns two members to the Britiſh parliament, as likewiſe do the towns of Ipſwich, Aldborough, Bury St. Edmund's, Dunwich, Eye, Orford, and Sudbury. Other towns are Beccles, Bilſton, Blythborough, Brandon, Botteſdale, Bungay, Clare, Debenham, Framlingham, Hadley, Haleſworth, Haveril (in part) Ixworth, Lavenham, Loweſtoff, Mendleſham, Mildenhall, Needham, Neyland, Southwold, Stow Market, Saxmundham, Woodbridge, and Woolpit. Ipſwich is the county town.

SUNDERLAND, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Du ham, at the mouth of the Wear, where it runs into the German Sea. Th harbour is too ſhallow for large veſſels, ſo that they are obliged to take i their loadings in the open road, tho' many attempts have been made to r medy the evil. Sunderland has been greatly enriched by the coal-trade, a its ſalt pans, which with the number of ſhips employed in carrying n only coals and ſalt, but glaſs and other merchandiſe, to divers parts of t kingdom, as well as abroad, makes it a fine nurſery of ſeamen. T veſſels of Sunderland are generally ſmaller than thoſe of Newcaſtle; b then they have this advantage of the Newcaſtle-men, that, in caſe of contrary wind, particularly at north-eaſt, which though fair when at ſe yet ſuffers not the ſhips at Newcaſtle to get out of the Tyne, the ſhips Sunderland, riding in the open ſea, are ready to ſail as ſoon as they ha got their lading; ſo that they have been known to go away and deli their coals at London, and get back again, before the ſhips at Shield which were laden when they departed, were able to get over the bar. The are abundance of able ſeamen here, who are reckoned among the colli the beſt ſeamen in the country. As to the Sunderland coal, it is obſerv to burn ſlowly, to have much pyrites with it, and that it turns to a hea reddiſh cinder, which appears by the loadſtone to be iron ore: 13 mi NE. SUNK ISLAND, an iſland on the river Humber, about 2 miles in length, and 1½ in breadth, 10 miles NW. Spurn Head.

SUNNING, a village of England, ſituated on both ſides of the river Thames, partly in the county of Berks, and partly in the county of Oxford. It was anciently the ſee of a biſhop, removed to Saliſbury: 5 miles E. Reading, and 35 W. London.

SUNHARETE, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Pyrennées, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Mauleon: 2½ leagues S. Mauleon.

SU-NIM, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li: 27 miles SE. Pao-ting.

SUNNAPEE, a lake of the United States of America, in Vermont: 14 miles NW. Concord.

SUNNING HILL, a village of England, in the county of Berks, celebrated for a chalybeate ſpring: 8 miles E. Wokingham, and 24 W. London.

SVOPA, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Sem, near Lgov, in the government of Kurſk.

SUPERGA, or Supergue, a religious foundation of Piedmont, ſituated on a high hill, from which the king Victor Amadeus, and prince Eugene, in 1706, reconnoitred the French trenches, and camp before Turin, and concerted meaſures for the relief of the city: 4 miles WNW. Chieri, and 3 NNE. Turin.

SUPERIOUR LAKE, or Upper Lake, the largeſt lake known on the continent of North America, and ſuppoſed to be the largeſt body of freſh water in the world, being computed 1500 miles in circumference. The ſurrounding coaſt is rocky and uneven. There are in it many iſlands; two of them very conſiderable, one not leſs than a hundred miles in length, and in ſome places forty broad. The lake abounds with fiſh, particularly trout and ſturgeon. Long. 84. 40. to 91. 55. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 4. to 48. 45. N.

SUPINO, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and county of Moliſe, formerly the ſee of a biſhop removed to Boiano: 13 miles SSE. Moliſe.

SUPLITZBACH, a river of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, which runs into the Elbe, near Torgau, in the marggraviate of Meiſſen.

SUR, or Sour, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the pachalic of Saida, or Acre, the remains of the ancient and celebrated Tyre. It is now no more than a village, ſituated on a peninſula which projects from the ſhore into the ſea, in the form of a mallet with an oval head. This head is a ſolid rock, covered with a brown cultivable earth, which forms a ſmall plain of about 800 paces long by 400 broad. The iſthmus, which joins this plain to the continent, is of pure ſand; this difference of ſoil renders the ancient inſular ſtate of the plain, before Alexander joined it to the ſhore by a mole, very viſible. The ſea, by covering the mole with ſand, has enlarged it by ſucceſſive accumulations, and formed the preſent iſthmus. The village of Sour is ſituated at the junction of this iſthmus with the ancient iſland, of which it does not cover above one-third. The point to the north, is occupied by a baſon, which was a port evidently formed by art, but is at preſent ſo choked up, that children paſs it without being wet above the middle. The opening at the point is defended by two towers, correſponding with each other, between which formerly paſſed a chain fifty or ſixty feet long, to ſhut the harbour. From theſe towers began a line of walls, which, after ſurrounding the baſon, incloſed the whole iſland; but, to preſent, we can only follow its traces by the foundations which run along the ſhore, except in the vicinity of the port, where ſome repairs were made about thirty years ago, but theſe are again fallen to decay. Farther on in the ſea, to the north-weſt of the point, at the diſtance of about 300 paces, is a ridge of rocks on a level with the water; the ſpace which ſeparates them from the main land in front, forms a ſort of road, where veſſels may anchor with more ſafety than at Saide; they are not, however, free from danger, for they are expoſed to the north-weſt winds, and the bottom injures the cables. That part of the iſland which lies between the village and the ſea, that is, the weſtern ſide, is open; and this ground the inhabitants have laid out in gardens. The whole village contains only fifty or ſixty poor families, which live obſcurely on the produce of their little grounds, and a trifling fiſhery. Formerly they were defenceleſs towards the land, but the Motoualis, who took poſſeſſion of it in 1766, incloſed it with a wall of twenty feet high, which ſtill ſubſiſts. The moſt remarkable building is a ruin at the ſouth-eaſt corner. This was a Chriſtian church, built, probably, by the Cruſaders; a part of the choir only is remaining; cloſe to which, amid heaps of ſtones, lie two beautiful columns, with ſhafts of red granite, of a kind unknown in Syria. Djezzar, who has ſtripped all this country to ornament his moſque at Acre, wiſhed to carry them away, but his engineers were not even able to move them: 18 miles SSW. Saida, and 80 N. Jeruſalem.

SURA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland: 15 miles N. Stroemſholm.

SURA, a river of Norway, in the province of Drontheim, which runs into the North Sea, oppoſite Chriſtianſand.

SURA, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Volga, near Vaſil, in the government of Nizegorod.

SURADSIE, a town of Arabia, in the province of Yemen: 16 miles ESE. Doran.

SURAN, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Viatka, 32 miles NE. Slobodſkoi, in the government of Viatka.

SURAN, a town of Hungary, formerly celebrated for its ſtrength, now defenceleſs: 4 miles NE. Neuheuſel.

SURAT, a city of Hindooſtan, in the country of Guzerat, ſituated in a large and fertile plain, on the ſouth bank of the Taptee. On the land ſide it is encompaſſed with two brick walls, which divide it into the Inner and the Outer Town. The citadel ſtands within the inner, on the ſhore of the Taptee, and is divided by trenches from the town. One may walk round the outer walls in two hours and a half; the ſpace which it incloſes is chiefly occupied by gardens, having but a very few houſes. The larger houſes are flat-roofed here, as through the reſt of the eaſt, with courts before them. The houſes of the common people are high-roofed. Although Surat has been long under the dominion of the Mahometan Moguls, yet here is no handſome moſque with towers, as among the Turks and Arabians. The ſquares of this city are large, and the ſtreets ſpacious, but not paved, ſo that the duſt is very troubleſome. Each ſtreet has gates of its own, with which it is ſhut up in times of turbulence. At Surat proviſions are plenteous and cheap; the air, too, is wholeſome, notwithſtanding the warmth of the climate. Fahrenheit's thermometer ſtood at 98 in the month of March, while the wind blew from the north. In the month of May, the thermometer ſtood at 93 degrees at Bombay, which lies two degrees farther to the ſouth. One thing unfavourable for Surat is, that ſhips cannot enter the harbour, becauſe the Taptee is full of ſand-banks. This river is too low in the dry ſeaſon; and in the rains ſwells too ſuddenly, to ſuch a height, as to overflow all the neighbourhood. Were the river confined by dikes, the ſtream which, during the rains, often riſes 28 feet above its ordinary level, would carry away all the ſand, and thus clearing the channel, would afford ſhips acceſs to the very walls; but the deſpotic governments of Aſia neglect every thing that might contribute to the general good of their ſubjects. General toleration and entire liberty are enjoyed in this city by all religious profeſſions; and its inhabitants are accordingly very numerous. The Europeans reſiding here eſtimate the population of the city at a million of ſouls; but M. Niebuhr thinks this calculation is evidently above the truth, by two-thirds. One thing ſingular in Surat is, that here is no hoſpital for human beings, but an extenſive eſtabliſhment of this nature for ſick or maimed animals. When the Europeans turn out an old horſe, or any other domeſtic animal, to periſh as uſeleſs, the Indians voluntarily aſſume the care of it, and place it in this houſe, which is full of infirm, decrepid cows, ſheep, rabbits, hens, pigeons, &c. The charitable Indians keep a phyſician to look after theſe animals. The environs of Surat are not without gardens, which are the property either of Europeans, or of the natives of the country. The fineſt of thoſe belonging to Europeans, is the property of the Dutch Eaſt-India company. Its aſpect is rich and charming. The principal inhabitants of Surat are Mahometans, and moſtly ſtrangers, although employed in the ſervice of the government. They are equally zealous in the obſervance of their law, as the Turks and Arabians. Although of the ſect of the Sunnites, they tolerate the Shiites, and even permit them to celebrate the feſtival of Haſſein. They make no ſcruple of drinking wine publicly, or of lending money upon intereſt. All people of diſtinction in Surat, and through the reſt of India, ſpeak and write the Perſian language. Hence has this language been received at the courts, and the knowledge of it is very uſeful for the diſpatch of buſineſs. In trade, corrupt Portugueſe is the language uſed; and this is in India, what the Lingua Franca is in the Levant. The Hindoos, the aboriginal inhabitants of the country, compoſe the moſt conſiderable part of the population of Surat. They are almoſt all of the caſt of the Banians; and hence their ſkill and dexterity in matters of calculation and œconomy often raiſe them to places of conſiderable truſt, in the collection of the taxes and cuſtoms for the Mahometans. Theſe Banians, being born to trade, have engroſſed the commerce of India to ſuch a degree, that all foreign nations are obliged to employ them as brokers; in which employment they give better ſatisfaction than the Jews in Turkey. Europeans have never found reaſon to repent the entruſting even of their whole fortune to the Banians, who continue to give aſtoniſhing proofs of their probity and fidelity.

lity. Some of them are very rich, but they live all in a ſtyle of moderate ſimplicity, wearing for dreſs only a plain robe of white cotton. At Surat are numbers of Perſees, or Perſians, who are ſkilful merchants, induſtrious artiſans, and good ſervants. In the ſame city are alſo Armenians, Georgians, and Jews; but of none of theſe any conſiderable number. The Indian Catholics, commonly called Portugueſe, from their ſpeaking the India dialect of the Portugueſe language, are numerous. At Surat, the day is reckoned from ſunſet to ſunſet, and is divided, not into twenty-four hours, but into ſixty garris. Here are no clocks; the progreſs of the day is meaſured by different means. In a conſpicuous ſituation, a man ſtands to put a cup of copper, pierced with a hole in the bottom, from time to time under water; every time the cup ſinks, a garri is counted, and the man announces its lapſe, by ſtriking the number which it makes, upon a plate of metal that ſounds like a clock. Each garri conſiſts of 24 of our minutes. In the houſes of the great too, where clocks and watches are not wanting, this old faſhion of meaſuring time is ſtill kept up. Surat, and the great diſtrict of which it is the capital, belonged, for a long time, to the Great Mogul, who, to keep ſo diſtant a province the more effectually in obedience, put it under the government of two nabobs, independent on one another. The one reſided in the city, and was properly the governor of the province; the other had the command of the citadel, and enjoyed the title of admiral, with a ſmall revenue, appropriate to the maintenance of a ſmall fleet, for the defence of the coaſt againſt pirates. After Shah Nadir's expedition into Hindooſtan, the diſtant nabobs, of this vaſt empire, aimed all at independence, and left the mogul nothing but a ſhadow of authority; aſking him, only for form's ſake, to confirm them in their places. Teg Beg Khan, nabob of Surat, a rich and powerful man, followed this example, and procured his brother to be declared nabob of the citadel. The two brothers then looked upon the whole province as their patrimony, and acquired immenſe wealth. Teg Beg Khan dying in 1746, without children, left his fortune to his relations, by which ſeveral of them were raiſed to a condition, which enabled them to aſpire to the government of the city. His brother died in the following year; and his widow, a woman extremely rich and ambitious, ſtrove to make her ſon-in-law nabob at once of the town and citadel. The conteſt of the different competitors for the ſupreme authority, produced a civil war in the town of Surat. Each of the rivals raiſed as many troops as he poſſibly could; with theſe he cantoned and intrenched himſelf in his houſes and gardens; and, from time to time, endeavoured to ſurpriſe or drive away his opponents. During theſe hoſtile operations, which were not attended with great ſlaughter, the inhabitants were content with ſhutting the gates, neareſt to the ſcene of action, and continued to go about their ordinary affairs, without fear of being pillaged. Nay, they were ſure of receiving compenſation whenever any caſual injury was done to any perſon, through means of the diſturbances. Hence trade ſuffered no interruption. Some of the rival candidates, imprudently called in the Mahrattas; and they, without doing any thing for any party, made the victors pay for their aſſiſtance, although they had apparently favoured the vanquiſhed. Since that time, the Mahrattas have enjoyed a third part of the amount of the cuſtoms of Surat; and one of their officers conſtantly attends to receive this tribute. The Engliſh and Dutch had always kept their factories in a ſtate of defence, and on the occaſion of the diſturbances, they increaſed their military preparations. The nobles of the country then had recourſe to thoſe powerful traders. Each of the two European nations took part with one of the competitors, furniſhed him with ammunition, intrenched themſelves in their factories, and fought againſt each other, although not openly at war. The nabob protected by the Engliſh, was at laſt expelled from the city. But, in 1758, he returned, and his mother-in-law, the rich widow, above-mentioned, made ſo good an uſe of her treaſures, that the nabob for whom he had been expelled, was obliged to yield to him the government of the city. When the Engliſh ſaw the city in the hands of their creature, they began to think ſeriouſly of gaining poſſeſſion of the citadel. The council of Bombay, in 1759, ſent Mr. Spencer, one of their members, a man of ability, and beloved by the Indians, to Surat, with a conſiderable force. The nabob opened the gates of the city to the Engliſh, and allowed them to lay ſiege to the citadel undiſturbed. It was taken in a few days. To avoid giving offence to the Indians, the Engliſh declared, that they made the conqueſt in the name of the great mogul, and waved his flag from the walls of the citadel. This expedition thus accompliſhed, Mr. Spencer ſent a long repreſentation to the court of Delhi, in which he ſtated the reaſons which had induced the merchants of Surat, to put themſelves under the protection of the Engliſh, and to expel the uſurping nabob from the citadel. He aſſerted, that thoſe petty tyrants had ſuffered the fleet neceſſary for the protection of trade to fall into a ſtate of decay, and that none but the Engliſh could reſtore it. He offered, at the ſame time, that if the mogul would grant to the company the poſt of admiral, with the revenues annexed to it, they would maintain a fleet which ſhould give full ſecurity to trade. Theſe facts were atteſted, and the propoſals ſeconded by the principal inhabitants of Surat, who ſigned the memorial. The great mogul, who in his preſent weakneſs, durſt not ſend a governor to the province, but conſidered it as loſt, readily granted the company's requeſt: and a member of the council of Bombay now diſcharges the office of nabob, and admiral at Surat. Upon this title, the company enjoy a third of the revenue from the cuſtoms of this city, with other funds of income, ſtill more conſiderable, which enables them to keep on foot a body of troops, with ſome ſhips of war. The Engliſh are the actual ſovereign of Surat. They keep the nabob of the city in a ſtate of abſolute dependence, allowing him only an income on which he may live ſuitable to his dignity. The Indians are in part content with their new maſters. The merchants are no longer in danger of the avaricious extortions of the nabobs, yet they complain of the ſelfiſh ſpirit of their maſters. The Indians dare not ſail without a paſſport from the admiral. The great trade carried on at Surat, renders this city the ſtore-houſe of the moſt precious productions of Hindooſtan. Hither is brought from the interior parts of the empire, an immenſe quantity of goods, which the merchants carry in their ſhips to the Arabic Gulf, the Perſian Gulf, the coaſt of Malabar, the coaſt of Coromandel, and even to China. The provinces near this city are full of manufactures of all ſorts. Of foreign nations, the Dutch have next after the Engliſh, the moſt conſiderable eſtabliſhment at Surat. They have here a director, ſeveral merchants, a number of writers and ſervants, and a few ſoldiers. Their trade has, however, declined, till it has become trifling. The affairs of the French are yet in a worſe ſtate. This nation are here in no eſtimation, but what is paid to their capuchin friars, who are generally beloved and reſpected at Surat. Theſe good regular clergy have done eſſential ſervice to the public, by keeping a regiſter of all events that have happened in Hindooſtan, from 1676 to the preſent time. Such, nearly, is alſo the condition of the Portugueſe in India. In all appearance, the Engliſh muſt ſhortly engroſs the whole trade of this city. Being at once ſovereigns and rich merchants, they have every means in their power, by which foreign nations can be excluded, or the Indians reſtrained from this ſource of opulence: 112 miles S. Amadabad, and 200 WNW. Aurungabad. Long. 72. 49. E. Greenwich. Lat. 21. 12. N.

SURAZ, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Polotzk: 80 miles E. Polotzk. Long. 43. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 55. 18. N.

SURAZSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Novgorod Sieverſkoi: 72 miles NNW. Novgorod Sieverſkoi. Long. 50. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 54. N.

SURCO, a town of South America, in the archbiſhopric and juriſdiction of Lima.

SUREN, a river of Swiſſerland, which riſes in the lake of Sempach, and runs into the Aar, 2 miles NE. Arau.

Surgères, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Charente, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Rochefort: 4 leagues NE. Rochefort, and 7 N. Saintes.

SURGOOJA, a town of Hindooſtan, and capital of a province of the ſame name, in the country of Oriſſa: 180 miles SSW. Patna, and 276 W. Calcutta.

SURGOOJA, a province of Hindooſtan, in the country of Allahabad, ſituated to the weſt of Bahar.

SURGUT, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Tobolſk, on the Oby, built in the year 1593. It is ſurrounded with palliſadoes; and the Oſtiaks, who live in this country, pay tribute here. The adjacent country abounds with ſables; black, white, and red foxes, and fine grey furs; and has plenty of excellent fiſh, but produces no corn. The inhabitants of this city have the nick-name of Griwiie, becauſe moſt of them are obſerved to ſquint: 284 miles NNE. Tobolſk. Long. 91. E. Ferro. Lat. 61. 22. N.

SURGY, a town of France, in the department of Nyevre: 1 league N. Clamecy.

SURINAM, a ſettlement of South America, and part of the country of Guiana, bounded on the north by the Atlantic, on the eaſt by the river Marawina, on the ſouth by a country of Indians, and on the weſt by the river Corentyn; about 150 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 60 from north to ſouth. The principal rivers that belong to this ſettlement, are the river Surinam, from which the colony takes its name, the Corentyn, the Copename, the Seramica, and the Marawina. Of thoſe rivers, the firſt only is navigable, the reſt, not excepting the Marawina, being, though very long and broad, ſo ſhallow, and ſo extremely crowded with rocks and ſmall iſlands, that they are of little conſequence to Europeans; nor a their banks inhabited, except by ſome of the Indians, or natives of th country. Into all theſe rivers, the courſes of which are not ſtraight, but ſerpentine, are diſcharged a number of very large creeks or rivulets, the banks of which are inhabited by Europeans, and cultivated with ſugar, cocoa, cotton, and indigo plantations, which form the moſt delightful proſpects that can be imagined, to thoſe who travel by water, the univerſ mode of journeying in this country, as the ſoil is in general ill adapte for the conſtruction of roads; and in ſome places, the woods, &c. a abſolutely impenetrable. In the river Marawina, is frequently found a cu rious ſtone or pebble, which is known by the name of the Marawina dia mond, and which being poliſhed, bears a very near reſemblance to th moſt valuable gem, and is conſequently often ſet in rings, &c. &c. Though ſituated like Guinea, under the torrid zone, the heats in Guiana, are much more ſupportable than thoſe on that part of the African coaſt. The ſcorching rays of the ſun are, in Guiana, daily tempered by cooling breezes from the ſea, while in Guinea, the intenſe heat is increaſed by the wind blowing continually over the land, and in its paſſage traverſing numerous ſandy deſerts. The rainy and dry ſeaſons which divide the year, as cold and warm weather divide it in Europe, may be termed the winter and ſummer of this country. There is, however, one remarkable difference, between the European ſeaſons and thoſe in Guiana, which is, that Guiana has annually two winters and two ſummers, which are diſtinguiſhed from each other by the appellation of the greater and the ſmaller, not becauſe the rains are leſs violent in the two latter ſeaſons, or the heat leſs intenſe, but from an opinion which has prevailed, that their period of duration is about half as long as that of the former. This diſtinction however, appears to be more imaginary than real, as far as reſpects the rainy ſeaſon. The continuance of the rains, during the time when the ſun is vertical in this climate, is neceſſary to the exiſtence of animal and vegetable life, which without theſe ſeaſonable refreſhments, muſt languiſh and expire under the fervid influence of its rays. In general, the ſoil is abundantly fruitful; the earth during the whole of the year is adorned with continual verdure, the trees loaded at the ſame time with bloſſoms and ripe fruit, and the whole preſenting to the view the delightful union of ſpring and ſummer. This general appearance of fertility, may be aſcribed not only to the rains and warmth in this climate, but alſo to its low and marſhy ſituation, which prevents the intenſe heats from deſtroying vegetation, and from the extreme richneſs of the ſoil, particularly in thoſe parts which are cultivated by European induſtry. It muſt indeed, be confeſſed, that ſuch ſituations are far from being favourable to health; but the ſpirit of gain is a very powerful principle, and the certainty of preſent profit will generally be conſidered as a weighty counterpoiſe to thoſe evils, which, if ever encountered, appear at a conſiderable diſtance; and as they are ſometimes eſcaped, may be always eſteemed as uncertain. The uncultivated parts are covered with immenſe foreſts, rocks, and mountains; ſome of the latter enriched with a great variety of mineral ſubſtances; and the whole country is interſected by very deep marſhes or ſwamps, and by extenſive heaths or ſavannas. The ſtream along the coaſt flows continually towards the north-weſt, and the whole ſhore is rendered almoſt inacceſſible from its being covered with dangerous banks, quickſands, bogs, and rocks, with prodigious buſhes, and a large quantity of bruſh-wood, which are ſo cloſely interwoven as to be impenetrable. That part of Terra Firma which is called Guiana, or The Wild Coaſt, and in which lies the colony of Surinam, is ſaid by ſome to have been firſt found out by the juſtly celebrated Chriſtopher Columbus, in the year 1498, when he was ſent home in chains; though others contend, that it was not diſcovered till the year 1504, by Vaſco Unes, a Spaniard. In 1579, it was viſited by Sir Walter Raleigh, under queen Elizabeth, who alſo ſailed up the river Oronoque above 600 miles, in ſearch of the ſuppoſed El Dorado, and in hopes of diſcovering the gold mines, of which he had the moſt lively expectations, from ſamples of a marcaſite, which the Spaniards call madre de oro. In the year 1634, a captain Marſhal, and about ſixty Engliſh, were diſcovered in Surinam, employed in planting tobacco, according to the relation of David Piterſe de Vries, a Dutchman, who converſed with them upon the ſpot. In 1640, Surinam was inhabited by the French, who were obliged to leave it ſoon after, on account of the frequent invaſions which they juſtly ſuffered from the Carribbean Indians, for having, like their neighbours the Spaniards, treated them with the moſt barbarous cruelties. In the year 1650, this colony being vacant, Francis lord Willoughby of Parham, by king Charles the Second's permiſſion, ſent thither one veſſel, equipped by himſelf, to take poſſeſſion of it, in the name of his royal maſter; a little after which he diſpatched three veſſels more, one of them carrying twenty guns. All theſe were well received by the Indians or inhabitants of the country, with whom they entered into friendly treaties, and a kind of negociation. In the year 1662, the colony of Surinam was granted by charter of Charles II. to Francis lord Willoughby, and at that lord's deſire, to be divided with Lawrence Hide, ſecond ſon of Edward earl of Clarendon, for them and their deſcendants for ever. In the year 1665, Surinam was ſucceſsfully cultivated, moſtly by planting tobacco. They had alſo raiſed above forty fine ſugar-plantations, and erected a ſtrong fortreſs of hewn-ſtone for their defence. It is proper however to remark, that ſome ſuppoſe theſe improvements were effected by the Portugueſe, though at what period is uncertain; while the French ſtrenuouſly diſpute the point, and inſiſt that they were the work of monſieur Ponſert de Bretigny, when France had poſſeſſion of that country. However this may be, the fortreſs is ſituated about ſixteen or eighteen miles from the mouth of the river Surinam; and theſe induſtrious ſettlers found themſelves perfectly happy, in a ſmall town which they had built under the walls. Their felicity was not of long duration; for in the wars between Charles II. and the United Provinces, the Dutch having been driven, in 1661, from the Brazils by the Portugueſe, took the colony of Surinam from the Engliſh, in the year 1667, under the command of a captain Abraham Criuvon, who was diſpatched for that purpoſe, with three ſhips of war and 300 marines. The Engliſh commander, William Biam, loſt the ſettlement of Surinam by ſurprize, when above 600 of the beſt men in the colony were at work on the ſugar plantations. This neglect appears from the trifling loſs of the Dutch, who in ſtorming the citadel, had but one man killed. They immediately planted the prince of Orange's flag on the ramparts, and gave now to this fortreſs, the name of Zelandia, and that of Middleburgh to the town of Paramaribo, after making the inhabitants, amongſt other contributions, pay 100,000 pounds weight of ſugar, and ſending a number of them to the iſland of Tobago. This event took place in February, and in July following the peace was concluded at Breda; but moſt unluckily for the new poſſeſſors of Surinam, it was concluded unknown to the Engliſh commodore, ſir John Harman, who in October that ſame year, having firſt taken Cayenne from the French, entered the river with a ſtrong fleet of ſeven ſhips of war, two bomb-ketches, &c. and retook the colony from the Dutch, killing on this occaſion above fifty of their men, and deſtroying nine pieces of cannon in fort Zelandia. The new inhabitants were now in their turn laid under contribution, and the Dutch garriſon were tranſported to the iſland of Barbadoes. At the diſcovery in Surinam, that the peace had been concluded between the contending powers, before commodore Harman retook the colony from the Dutch, conſiderable tumult and diſorder took place among the inhabitants, who knew not whom they ought to acknowledge as their lawful ſovereign. At length, by an order of king Charles, the ſettlement was ceded to the Dutch, in 1669, when 1200 of the old inhabitants, Engliſh and negroes together, left it, and went to ſettle on the iſland of Jamaica. At the cloſe of the ſucceeding war, it was agreed by the treaty of Weſtminſter, that Surinam ſhould be the property of the Dutch for ever, in exchange for the province of New York, which accordingly took place in the year 1674. The principal animals of prey are tigers; apes are abundant, as likewiſe parrots, ſcorpions; a great variety of inſects and ſerpents of an amazing ſize. The rivers abound with alligators, and in the Surinam is found that wonderful fiſh the electrical eel: Paramaribo is the chief town. Long. 53. 40. to 56. 25. W. Greenwich. Lat. 4. 45. to 6. N.

SURINAM, a river of South America, which riſes in a ridge of mountains, in the government of Terra Firma, and after a winding courſe of about 150 miles, from ſouth to north, falls into the Atlantic Ocean, in Lat. 6. 25. N.; Long. 55. 40. W. Greenwich. It has ſand banks at its mouth, over which there is about three fathoms water in high tides. But above theſe banks the water is much deeper, and the river navigable for large veſſels, above 30 leagues up the country.

SURRY, a county of England, bounded on the north by the river Thames, which divides it from Middleſex; on the eaſt by Kent, on the ſouth by Suſſex; on the weſt by Hampſhire, and on the north-weſt by Berkſhire; about 39 miles in length, from eaſt to weſt, and 26 from north to ſouth. It is divided into thirteen hundreds, which contain eleven towns, and 140 pariſhes. It is computed, that the whole is nearly equal to 482,000 acres, of which upwards of 90,000 acres are uninclosed commons or heaths. The ſoil is various, ſandy, gravel, chalk, loam, and mould of different depths, principally with chalk and gravel underneath. In the interior parts the air is mild, and the crops abundant; to the ſouth-weſt the air is cold. The manufactures of this country are conſiderable, ſtarch, ſnuff, tobacco, leather, gun-powder, hats, pottery, paper, vinegar, &c. In the neighbourhood of the metropolis are large diſtillers, callicoe-printers, wax-bleachers, &c. The principal rivers are the Wandle, Wey, and Mole. The towns are Southwark, Guildford, Reigate, Haſlemere, Chertſey, Croydon, Darking, Egham, Ewel, Farnham, Godalmin, and Kingſton: the four firſt with the county ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament; as likewiſe do Blechingley and Gatton, though they are only ſmall places. The villages are numerous and rich, ſuch as Richmond, Putney, Batterſea, Wandſworth, Clapham, Peckham, Camberwell, Dulwich, and many others. Near Egham is Runnymead, where king John ſigned the celebrated Magna Charta, in the year 1216. Southwark is the moſt conſiderable place in Surry, but Guildford is the county town, though the aſſizes are held alſo at Croydon and at Kingſton.

SURRY, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Virginia.

SUS, a river of Africa, which riſes from Mont Atlas, in the empire of Morocco, and runs into the Atlantic, near Santa Cruz. It gives name to the province which it bounds on the ſouth.

SUS, or Sous, or Suz, a country of Africa, ſituated to the ſouth of Morocco, of which it is a province, and from which it is ſeparated by a part of the Atlas. It is bounded on the eaſt by Darah, on the ſouth by Nun, and on the weſt by the Atlantic. The ſoil is in general good; and it was formerly a province of great trade, from its connection with the ſouthern diſtricts; but the emperor of Morocco having deſtroyed Santa Cruz, it has no longer the ſame reſources, or conveniencies of commerce. The inhabitants of this country are generally eſteemed more induſtrious, and more brave, than the reſt of Morocco: and many of them, eſpecially in the mountainous diſtricts, acknowledge no obedience to the emperor, but are governed by their own ſcheiks. Their principal riches are cattle, camels; the vegetable productions of the country, indigo, alum, calamine, and red copper. The principal towns are Tarudant, Aguadir, Toma, Teceut, and Meſſa.

SUSA, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Tunis, near the eaſt coaſt, near which are conſiderable remains of ancient buildings; the chief mart of this kingdom is for oil and linen, and may be reckoned one of the moſt conſiderable and wealthy towns of the Tuniſeens. Alexander found immenſe riches here. At preſent here are ſome manufactures of ſilk, ſtuffs, and rich cloth: 50 leagues W. Iſpahan, and 33 N. Baſſora.

SUSCHANABAD, a town of Perſia, in the province of Mezanderan: 20 leagues S. Ferabad.

SUSELL, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein: 8 miles ESE. Eutyn.

SUSQUEHANA, a river of the United States of America, which riſes, by two branches, in the northern part of Pennſylvania; theſe branches unite at Sundbury, after which it runs ſoutherly, paſſes by Harriſburg, croſſes the Blue Mountains, enters the ſtate of Maryland, and, being joined by ſeveral large rivers, forms the Cheſapeak.

SUSSAC, a town of France, in the department of the Upper Vienne: 5 leagues SE. Limoges.

SUSSEX, a county of England, bounded on the north by Surry and Kent, on the north-eaſt by Kent, on the ſouth-eaſt and ſouth by the Engliſh Channel, and on the weſt by Hampſhire; about 75 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 20 in its mean breadth, from north to ſouth. In the time of the Saxon heptarchy, this country was a kingdom. It is divided into ſix parts, called Rapes, and theſe into 61 hundreds, in which are one city, Chicheſter, 20 towns, and 312 pariſhes. The ſoil, towards the north, is generally a clay, with ſome ſand running through the county from eaſt to weſt. This is bounded by a ſtiff rich loam, and afterwards by chalk, on a range of hills, called the South Downs, which extend from the county of Hants to eaſt Bourne in an unbroken chain, at leaſt fifty miles, though ſeldom five miles in breadth. To the north of Chicheſter is a narrow ſtrip of gravel; and to the ſouth, bordering on the ſea, ſome rich loam. Suſſex has long been remarkable for timber, eſpecially oak; and the ſheep, ſed on the South Downs, have been particularly celebrated for the excellency of the mutton. The principal rivers are the Arun, Adur, Ouſe, and Rother. The towns are Arundel, Bramber, Eaſt Grinſtead, Haſtings, Horſham, Lewes, Midhurſt, Rye, Seaford, Shoreham, Steyning, and Winchelſea; all which, with the county and city of Chicheſter, return each two members to the Britiſh parliament. Thoſe in Italics are Cinque Ports. Other towns are Battel, Brighthelmſtone, Cuckfield, Eaſtbourne, Haylſham, Newhaven, Petworth, and Tarring.

SUTERRA, a town of Sicily, in the vally of Mazara: 16 miles NNE. Girgenti.

SUTHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Oſnabruck: 2 miles SSW. Oſnabruck.

SUTHERLAND POINT, the ſouth point of entrance into Botany Bay, ſo called from Forby Sutherland, one of captain Cook's ſeamen, who was buried there in the year 1770.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE, a county of Scotland, bounded on the weſt and north by the ſea, on the eaſt by the county of Caithneſs, and on the ſouth-eaſt by the Frith of Dornoch, and on the ſouth and the ſouth-weſt by the county of Roſs. It is uſually divided into Strathnavern and Sutherland Proper, the former containing the northern, the latter the ſouthern part. In length about fifty miles, from north to ſouth, and forty-ſix where broadeſt, from eaſt to weſt. It is mountainous, with fertile vallies between, which abound with cattle and game. In the mountains are quarries of marble, free-ſtone, ſlate, and other ſtone fit for building, limeſtone, &c. The coaſt contains a great number of bays and lochs which abound in fiſh, eſpecially ſalmon, ſwans, and other water fowl. Dornoch is the chief town.

SUZA, a town of Italy, and capital of a marquiſate, now a diſtrict, or province of Piedmont, on the river Dora Riparia, in a vally to which it gives name, at the foot of the Alps, anciently called Secuſium, or Seguſium, or Seguſſina. It was the capital of the kingdom of Cottius, and the place of his ordinary reſidence. It has frequently been ſacked by armies, which have paſſed and repaſſed from France into Italy: being ſituated on the frontiers of France and Savoy: as by the Gauls under Brennus, by the Carthaginians under Hannibal: ſo likewiſe Flavius Valens, the friend of Vitellius againſt Otho, deſtroyed Suza and ſeveral other neighbouring towns: the Vandals when they paſſed the Alps, laid the whole country waſte. It was plundered and deſtroyed by the ſoldiers of Conſtantine, after he had defeated Maxentius. The Goths, the Lombards, the Saracens all ſeverally plundered this place. Nevertheleſs, all theſe misfortunes were not to be compared to what it ſuffered under the emperor Frederic Barbaroſſa, when he paſſed from Germany into Italy; who deſtroyed it to its foundation, and reduced it to aſhes. It anciently gave the title of marquis to the deſcendants of Charlemagne, and came to the dukes of Savoy, by a marriage with Adelige o Adelaide the only daughter of the laſt marquis. It was taken by the French, in the year 1690, and reſtored in 1696. It is at preſent ſmall and poor, with ſingle walls, but defended by a citadel with a ſtrong garriſon. It contains three pariſh churches, and ſeveral religious houſes. Near it i a triumphal arch, erected to the honour of Auguſtus. Suza is governe by two ſyndics, ten counſellors, choſen from the Bourgeois, and a ſecretary. Four other neighbouring towns are united to ſupport the publi charges. In the election of a judge, the council return three of the inhabitants to the prince, who makes choice of one of the three. He judges i the firſt inſtance, from whence an appeal may be made to the governor o the province, or the ſenate of Piedmont. The inhabitants ſpeak Frenc and Italian: 23 miles WNW. Turin, and 19 NE. Briancon. Long. 2 43. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 8. N.—By an article of the peace between the ki of Sardinia and the French republic, the fortifications of this town were to be deſtroyed.

SUZA, a marquiſate of Italy, in the principality of Piedmont, about 30 miles long, and 10 broad, watered by the Dora and the Ciniſella. The principal towns are Suſa, Giavenna, Avigliana, and Novaleſe.

SWABIA, a circle of Germany, bounded on the north by the palatinate of the Rhine and Franconia, on the eaſt by Bavaria, on the ſouth by Swiſſerland, the Lake of Conſtance, and the Tyroleſe, and on the weſt by France, from which it is ſeparated by the Rhine; about 120 miles from eaſt to weſt, and eighty from north to ſouth. The ancient country of Swabia was rather more extenſive. The name is ſuppoſed to be derived from the Suevi, who firſt inhabited the country between the Weſer and the Oder, but afterwards croſſed the Elbe to the Mayne and Danube, and in the time of Julius Cæſar to the Neckar and the Rhine. In the 5th century, this country was conquered by the king of the Franks, who erected it into a dukedom, which Charles the Great aboliſhed : but was reſtored by Conrad I. The title became hereditary about the year 1094; the dukes of Swabia being at the ſame time dukes of Franconia; but with very limited prerogatives : of theſe dukes many of them became kings of Germany : the dukes became extinct about the middle of the 13th century. In the middle ages, Swabia was divided into a great number of gaus, in Latin pagi, the names of ſome of which are ſtill in uſe. The greateſt part of Swabia belongs at preſent to the circle of that name, a conſiderable part alſo to that of Auſtria, and a leſſer part to the upper circle of the Rhine. The ſtates of Swabia, at the diet, are divided into five branches, viz. 1. The eccleſiaſtical princes and abbots. 2. Temporal princes and abbots. 3. Prelates. 4. Counts and barons, and, 5. Free imperial towns. The eccleſiaſtical princes and abbots are Conſtance, Augſburg, Ellwangen, and Kempten. The temporal princes and abbots are Wurtemberg, Baaden-Baaden, Baaden-Durlach, Baaden-Hochberg, Zollern-Hechingen and Haigerloch, Zollern Sigmaringen : the abbies of Lindau and Buchau, Averſberg, on account of Thengen, Furſtenberg-Heiligenberg, Oetingen, Schwarzenberg, on account of Sulz Lichtenſtein, and Furſtenberg-Stuhlingen. The prelates are Salmanſweiler, Weingarten, Ochſenhauſen, Elchingen, Yiſee, Urſperg, Kayſerſheim, Roggenburg, Roth, Weiſſenau, Schuſſenried, Marchthal, Peterſhauſen, Wettenhauſen, Zwiefalten, and Gengenbach; with the abbeſſes of Heggbach, Gutenzell, Rothmunſter, and Baindt. Counts and barons, as the Commanderies, Alſchhauſen, the three lines of the houſe of Oettingen Wallerſtein, which enjoy only one vote; Furſtenberg-Meſkirch, the elector of Bavaria, on account of Wieſenſteig; Furſtenberg for Baar : Furſtenberg for Hauſen, in the Kinzingerthal, Montfort, Truchſeſz-zeil, and Wurzach, together with Truchſeſz Wolfegg and Walſee, Truchſeſz-Scheer, Durmetingen and Trauchburg, Konigſegg-Rothenfels, Konigſegg-Aulendorf; the elector of Bavaria for Mindelheim, Furſtenberg for Gundelfingen, Baaden-Baaden for Eberſtein, the lines of Marx Fugger and Hans-Fugger, as alſo of Jacob-Fugger-Hohenems, Wurtemberg for Juſtingen, St. Blaſii for Bondorf, Traun for Egloff, Stadion for Thanhauſen, Hohen-Gerolzeg and Taxis for Eglingen. The free imperial towns, namely, Augſburg, Ulm, Eſzlingen, Reutlingen, Nordlingen, Hall, Neberlingen, Rothweil, Heilbronn, Gmund, Memmingen, Lindau, Dinkelſbuhl, Biberach, Ravenſburg, Kempten, Kaufbeuren, Weil, Wangen, Iſnr, Leutkirch, Wimpfen, Giengen, Pfullendorf, Buchhorn, Aalen, Bopfingen, Buchau, Offenburg, Gengenbach, Zell in Hammerſbach. The three laſt of theſe ſtyle themſelves the united towns; as Eſzlingen, Nordlingen, Hall, Heilbronn, Memmingen, and Lindau, are called the ſix correſponding towns. The princes ſummoned to the diet of the circle are, the biſhop of Conſtance and the duke of Wurtemberg, but the latter is ſole director. He previouſly, however, communicates to the former the deliberations which are to come before the circle. The diets of the circle are commonly held at Ulm, and in time of peace twice a year. Each of the five benches has its director, but without any peculiar privilege above the reſt of his order. The directors of the five benches ſet their ſeals to all the receſſus, or acts of the circle, and other diſpatches. The biſhop of Conſtance is the perpetual director of the bench of eccleſiaſtical princes, as the duke of Wurtemburg is that of the temporal princes. The directors of the benches of prelates and counts are choſen only for life. Ulm indeed, is perpetual director of the bench of the Imperial towns; but Augſburg always votes firſt. The chancery and record office belonging to the circle are Stutgardt, the reſidence of the directory of Wurtemberg. In the year 1681, the military force of the empire, by a decree of the diet, was ſettled in time of peace, at 40,000 men, and the quota of the circle of Swabia alone, came to 1321 horſe, and 2707 foot; and in the year 1707, at the diviſion of the 300,000 florins, which was the ſum granted for that purpoſe, its proportion was rated at 31,271 florins, fifty-eight kruitzers, five deniers. The number of troops in this circle, conſtantly kept on foot, conſiſts of four regiments of infantry, each compoſed of twelve companies, one regiment of dragoons, and one of cuiraſſiers, each conſiſting of eight ſquadrons. The commander of the circle is ſtyled general field-marſhal. With reſpect to religion, this circle is reckoned among the mixed ones. At preſent it nominates to the Imperial chamber two aſſeſſors, one of whom is Catholic, the other Lutheran. Under the emperor Frederick III. the circle of Swabia was, for the ſake of the peace of Germany, divided into four quarters, which diviſion ſtill continues, and on many occaſions has been found to be beneficial. The head of the firſt is the duke of Wurtemberg, of the ſecond the marggrave of Baaden, of the third the biſhop of Conſtance and the abbot of Kepten, and of the fourth the biſhop of Augſburg.

SWADLINBAR, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cavan. About half a mile from it is a celebrated ſpa : 74 miles from Dublin.

SWABIA (Auſtrian), is compoſed of the ancient hereditary eſtates of the houſe of Habſburg, and the remains which have fallen to Auſtria, ſince it has been elected to the empire. Maximilian I. was the firſt prince of this houſe, which took the name of the prince of Swabia. It pays annually more than 400,000 livres to the military cheſt of Auſtria. Theſe eſtates are compoſed of Burgau, Nellenburg, the prefectorate of Swabia, Hohenberg, the Ortenau, Briſgau, and ſome towns and convents.

SWATKA, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Chrudim: 8 miles W. Politzka.

SWEDEN, a country of Europe, known to the Romans by the name of Scandinavia, is bounded on the north by Norwegian Lapland, on the eaſt by Ruſſia, on the ſouth by the Baltic, and on the weſt by the Scaggerac and Norway. The whole kingdom is divided into five general parts, viz. Sweden Proper, Gothland, Nordland, Lapland, and Finland: each of which is again ſubdivided into provinces. The Swedes likewiſe added to their dominions Livonia, Eſtonia, Ingria, Pomerania, the iſles Oeſel and Rugen, Wiſmar and its territories, Bremen and Werden; but of all theſe, none now are left them but Farther Pomerania; even Finland itſelf has been diſmembered. The five parts of which Sweden is eſſentially compoſed, yet form the largeſt ſtate in Europe, next to Ruſſia. Geographers are not agreed reſpecting its ſuperficial content. Buſchin fixes it at 13,500 ſquare German miles, and his account ſeems to approach neareſt to truth. The kingdom of Sweden is ſituated between the 28th and the 48th degree of longitude from Ferro, and the 55th and 70th of northern latitude. The winter here is long, dry, and exceedingly cold; the ſummer ſhort and hot. The Swedes experience a rapid change from the former of theſe ſeaſons to the latter; ſpring and autumn being almoſt unknown; during the long nights of winter, the moon, the aurora borealis, and the reflection of the ſnow, produce a mild and agreeable light. In ſummer, the ſun remains ſo long above the horizon, that the night conſiſts only of a ſlight twilight; vegetation then acquires its full vigour, and nature ſeems to regain that time which ſhe has loſt during the froſty ſeaſon. Though Sweden is ſituated under a rigorous climate, it enjoys a much milder temperature than thoſe countries of Aſia and America, which have the ſame latitude. Thunder is ſeldom heard in this country; it produces no venomous reptiles; and earthquakes never ſpread terror and conſternation. Some of its learned men pretend, that the traces of extinguiſhed volcanoes are to be ſeen in it, but the proofs which they bring are far from being convincing. The pure and ſharp air, which the Swedes breathe, renders them vigorous, and preſerves them from epidemical diſeaſes. They often attain to a very great age: Linnæus reckons that there are in Sweden 1300 ſpecies of plants, 200 of which are uſed in medicine, and 1400 ſpecies of animals. Wolves, foxes, hares, birds of prey, moor-fowl, cocks of the wood, together with freſh and ſalt-water fiſh, are found here in great abundance; bears, elks, does, roebucks, ſables, beavers, and polecats, are more uncommon. It has been remarked, that no beeches grow beyond Eaſt Gothland, and no oaks beyond Upland; the birch grows in all the provinces. The pine and the fir, however, are the principal foreſt trees. With regard to mineral productions, Sweden is very rich, eſpecially in iron and copper, with abundance of lead, marble, alum, limeſtone, coal, vitriol, curious petrifactions, porphyry, amethyſts, load-ſtone, ſlate, talk, quickſilver,, ſulphur, mother of pearl, &c. and in ſome places ſilver. The moſt remarkable mountain is the Sevebergſrygn, which, in Weſt Gothland, begins to riſe above the level of the ſea; it extends towards the north, between Norway and Nordland, and ſeparates theſe two countries by ſummits, covered with eternal ſnow. According to Mr. Bergman, it ſtretches as far as the northern part of Aſia. All the mountains of Sweden are compoſed of gravel, freeſtone, calcareous ſtone, ſlate, different kinds of petrifactions and granite: the baſis of the greater part of the mountains is granite. The ſoil of the plains and vallies which lie between the hills and mountains, is very proper for cultivation; and commerce and navigation are greatly aſſiſted by numerous rivers, bays, and lakes. A Swediſh author, who has written on the mineral ſprings of Sweden, reckons up 360; they abound in every province of the kingdom. Sweden contains, altogether, 105 cities, or large towns, the principal of which is Stockholm. About half a century before the Chriſtian æra, Gylfe, of the race of Forniother, reigned in Sweden; at the ſame period Sigge, afterwards ſurnamed Oden the Divine, fell upon the northern part of Europe, and conquered thoſe vaſt countries, at the head of a ſwarm of barbarians, whom he had collected between the Tanais and the Boriſthenes. The conqueror divided his conqueſts among his ſons. Ynge obtained Sweden, and became the founder of the family of the Ynglingars; Ingiald Ilrode, the laſt prince of that family, reigned in the ſeventh century: he had the title of king of Upſal, which was the place of his nativity. Ivar Widfame, or the Conqueror, extended the boundaries of the kingdom, and his family continued on the throne for ſeveral centuries. Olof Schætkonung, or the Infant, cauſed himſelf to be baptized, and found means to introduce Chriſtianity into the kingdom, about the beginning of the 11th century. The crown, before hereditary, became elective, under the race of Stenkil Magnus, ſurnamed Smeek, or the Fooliſh, elected in the year 1318, obtained by inheritance the kingdom of Norway, and loſt, by h ſimplicity, ſeveral of the provinces of Sweden. His ſon Hokan, or Hak became king of Norway, refuſed the crown of Sweden; but he afterward obtained that of Denmark, by his marriage with Margaret, daughter o Waldemar. The Swedes, diſcontented with Magnus Smeek, depoſed him and choſe in his room Albert of Mecklenburg; but this foreign prin wielded the ſceptre with ſo much ſeverity, that his ſubjects, haraſſed b the yoke of oppreſſion, called in Margaret, the widow of Hako, who ſoo after propoſed to make only one ſtate of the three northern kingdoms, an to unite them under the ſame ſceptre. This union was concluded at Cal mar, in the year 1397; and the deputies of the three kingdoms ſtipulated that each of them ſhould be governed according to its own laws. Eri XIII. whom ſhe choſe for her ſucceſſor, openly purſued a ſyſtem of oppre ſion: he treated Sweden like a conquered country, and entruſted the ad miniſtration of the kingdom to Danes, who committed the moſt horri barbarities. Incenſed at this treatment, the Dalecarlians revolted. En gelbrecht, who was born amongſt them, and well known by his emine qualities, put himſelf at their head, attacked the tyrant's guards, an avenged the nation. Eric now promiſed to govern according to the Swe diſh laws; but as there is no depending on the word of a perfidious deſpo Engelbrecht was aſſaſſinated by a rival, jealous of his influence, and op preſſion once more reſumed its courſe. The Dalecarlians again revolte and engaged the inhabitants of the other provinces to join them. Th tyrant, therefore, appeared in Sweden at the head of his troops; but w obliged to ſeek ſhelter in Denmark. The Danes equally oppreſſed by tyranny, did not long afford him an aſylum; he was baniſhed from th country, and Chriſtopher of Bavaria aſcended the throne. On the dea of this prince, which happened in the year 1448, the Swedes and No wegians gave the ſceptre to Charles Knutſon, of an ancient and illuſtrio family, and allied to that of the old Swediſh kings: but the Danes decre it to Chriſtian I. of the family of Oldenburg. The archbiſhop of Upſ a powerful and ambitious prelate, by forming intrigues againſt Charle put Sweden into the hands of Chriſtian, who not being able to govern people proud of their privileges, was ſoon ſtripped of his authority. B this revolution, Charles again obtained the diadem; but being dethron a ſecond time, he was re-eſtabliſhed in the year 1461, and reigned i peace till his death, which happened in 1470. Chriſtian II. or Chriſti the Nero of the North, was crowned king, in the year 1519; and he ſoo ſignaliſed his power, by horrid cruelties, which incenſed the whole natio againſt him; Guſtavus Ericſon Vaſa, a fugitive in his own country, forme a deſign of delivering it; and under him, Sweden recovered its indepen dence. He cauſed the ſceptre to be declared hereditary in his family, i the year 1544, and died in 1560. Guſtavus was ſucceeded by his ſo Eric XIV. who did not poſſeſs the ſame qualities as his father. He wa depoſed, and being thrown into priſon, was there poiſoned by the orde of his brother John. John had married Catherine Jagellon, whom he love and conſulted. That princeſs had great influence in the council; an being a zealous ſupporter of the Catholic religion, which ſhe profeſſe ſhe prevailed upon her huſband to render Sweden dependent on the ho See. Lutheraniſm, however, had taken too deep root; and the effor which the king made to deſtroy it, tended only to eſtabliſh it more. Jo died in 1572, very little regretted, becauſe he was unworthy of the eſtee of his ſubjects. His ſon Sigiſmund, already king of Poland, ought have ſucceeded him; but Charles, duke of Sudermania, the youngeſt Guſtavus's ſons, taking advantage of the diſpoſition in which the peop then were, cauſed himſelf to be elected regent of the kingdom. Sigiſmu undertook to conquer Sweden; but the duke defeated his army, and afte wards mounted the throne. Guſtavus II. was as great in peace as in war he ſucceeded his father in 1611, and ſhowed himſelf a model for hero and kings. Chriſtina, the daughter of Guſtavus, and Mary Eleonora Brandenburg, was very young, at the time of her father's death. T peace of Bromſebro was concluded in the year 1645; that of Weſtphal in 1648; and both theſe added to the glory, the territories, and the po tical influence of Sweden. When Chriſtina came of age, ſhe ſhow herſelf worthy of the throne which ſhe occupied as long as the wiſe Oxe ſtierna was her miniſter and confident; but when ſhe neglected the coun of that reſpectable veteran, ſhe no longer met with the eſteem and affecti of her ſubjects: and Chriſtina, fatigued with the cares of governme quitted her throne, her country, and her religion, and retired in 16

Charles, however, laid ſiege to Copenhagen; but being repulſed, de ſoon after put an end to his career. The peace of Oliva, concluded 1660, immediately after the death of Charles X. reſtored tranquillity the north. Charles XI. was mediator at the peace of Ryſwick, in 16 in which year he died; and Charles XII. aſſumed the reins of gove ment. The duke of Holſtein, who had married his eldeſt ſiſter, Ed

Soph

Sophia, being attacked by Denmark, Charles marched to his aſſiſtance, ſtruck a terror into the Danes, and concluded, in 1700, the peace of Travendal. More formidable enemies, Auguſtus II. and Peter I. czar of Ruſſia, threatened Sweden. Charles therefore entered Livonia, and with 8000 Swedes attacked and defeated 80,000 Ruſſians, near Narva, on the 30th of November, 1700. From Livonia he haſtened to Poland, where he gained ſeveral victories, dethroned Auguſtus, and cauſed Staniſlaus Letzinſki to be elected in his ſtead. Soon after he marched into Saxony, made the dethroned king ſign a peace, and obtained for the Proteſtants of Sileſia, the free exerciſe of their religion. The Swediſh hero repaired next to Poland, with a deſign of depriving Peter I. of his crown. But the fortune of Charles began to change, and on the 27th of June, 1709, was fought the battle of Poltava: repulſed and wounded, he paſſed the Dnieper, and ſought for an aſylum in the territories of the Turks; his enemies ſoon took advantage of his misfortunes. Auguſtus recovered Poland; Peter ſeized upon Livonia, Eſtonia, Ingria, and a part of Finland; and the king of Denmark, Frederic IV. landed an army in Scandinavia. To reſiſt ſo many enemies was difficult. The Swedes, however, made efforts, and the danger in which they beheld their country inſpired them with courage. Count de Stenback, having in haſte collected a body of peaſants, oppoſed them to the Danes, who were beat at Helſingborg, in 1710. Charles, in the mean time, was carrying on an unſucceſsful negociation at the Porte. Being ſolicited to quit the Turkiſh dominions, he obſtinately refuſed; maintained a ſiege againſt an army ſent to attack him; was taken priſoner, and conducted by force to Demotica. At length, finding that it was impoſſible for him to accompliſh his end, he ſet out with one of his generals, and arrived at the gates of Stralſund, ſo haraſſed by fatigue, that his ſubjects did not know him. Two other powers, England and Pruſſia, having declared againſt Sweden, George I. and Frederic William I. united themſelves with the enemies of Charles. This monarch, however, always firm and undaunted, ſhut himſelf up in the city of Stralſund, which he defended for ſome time. Being at length forced to abandon it, he went on board a ſmall bark, and ſet out for Sweden; but inſtead of going to Stockholm, he undertook an expedition to Norway, and afterwards returned to Scandinavia. A ſecond expedition into Norway became fatal to him; he laid ſiege to Frederickſhall, and going to reconnoitre one of the trenches, was killed by a muſket bullet, on the 30th of November, 1718. When the States aſſembled, they decreed the crown to Ulrica Eleonora, his youngeſt ſiſter, on condition that ſhe renounced ſovereignty. The duke of Holſtein, a young prince, endowed with many engaging qualities, and who married Charles' eldeſt ſiſter, had a legal right to the throne, and found many partiſans. But the efforts which they made in his favour were not attended with ſucceſs. Peace was at length concluded, but on very diſadvantageous terms. Sweden loſt Bremen, Verden, part of Pomerania, and a right to the duties of the Sound; and by way of indemnification, received ſome millions of crowns. In the mean time, the diet having aſſembled at Stockholm, on the 24th of January, 1720, Ulrica Eleonora propoſed to abdicate the throne, and reſign it to Frederic of Heſſe Caſſel, her huſband, who indeed became king, by renouncing ſome more of the royal prerogatives, and ceding Livonia, Eſtonia, Ingria, part of Carelia, and Finland, to Ruſſia. An alliance entered into with France, in 1738, inveterate national hatred, and ſeveral other cauſes of diſcontent, produced a freſh rupture with Ruſſia. At a peace which was concluded at Abo, in the year 1743, Sweden ceded part of Finland, and Adolphus Frederic, of the family of Holſtein-Gottorp, and deſcended by the female line from the family of Vaſa, was declared ſucceſſor to the throne. In the year 1772, Guſtavus III. contrived to make his government deſpotic. In the year 1792, he was aſſaſſinated at a ball, by a nobleman, of the name of Ankerſtrom, a captain of the guards, who confeſſed himſelf the perſon who had endeavoured to deliver the country from a monſter and a tyrant. The productions of Sweden will be ſeen in the account of each province. The doctrine of Luther was early introduced into Sweden, and is the national religion. Sweden is covered with foreſts, which abound, above all, in Nordland and Finland. There are few kinds of fiſh, which are not found in the waters by which Sweden is ſurrounded or interſected. That ſpecies named ſtrœmming, in the language of the country, and known no where elſe, is ſo abundant in ſeveral parts of the Baltic, that it forms the principal part of the food of the inhabitants. The herrings, which for ſome centuries had deſerted the coaſts of Sweden, again made their appearance there about fifty years ago. The principal fiſheries are in the province of Bahus: they produce annually about 300,000 tons, each of which contains 1000 herrings. The Swediſh herrings, however, are never ſo good as thoſe of Holland: when they arrive on the northern coaſts they are old, and worn out with the fatigues of their voyage; beſides this, the Swedes are not ſo well acquainted with the art of ſalting and packing them as the Dutch. A natural ſource of wealth ſtill more important to Sweden, is its mines. The richeſt iron-mine in the kingdom, that of Danmora, is ſituated in the province of Upland, which in every reſpect is one of the beſt in Sweden. This mine, the greateſt depth of which is 80 fathoms, occupies a conſiderable extent of territory, and the ore is conveyed to the ſurface of the earth, through ſeveral pits or openings made for that purpoſe, by means of caſks fixed to large cables, which are put in motion by horſes. The workmen, ſtanding upon the edges of theſe caſks, and having their arms claſped round the cable, deſcend and aſcend with the utmoſt compoſure: they remain in the mine no longer than the time required for their daily labour. The water is drawn from the bottom of it by a wheel 22 yards in diameter, and is afterwards conveyed along an aqueduct 2500 yards in length. At certain diſtances from Danmora, are ſeveral furnaces with villages, well built and extremely populous. There are iron mines in the greater part of the provinces of this vaſt kingdom, but they cannot be opened without hurting other branches of national induſtry; beſides, ſome of them are ſituated in ſuch a manner, that the expences of working them would be too conſiderable. Thoſe wrought at preſent produce annually upwards of 57,000 tons of iron. Theſe mines employ in the whole kingdom about 25,600 perſons, and it has been calculated that the furnaces and forges of the kingdom, which give iron that degree of perfection which is neceſſary before it can be uſed, conſume annually 2,400,000 loads of charcoal. In the province of Dalecarlia, at a ſmall diſtance from the town of Fahlun, are ſituated thoſe gloomy and obſcure caverns, which contain the beſt copper in Europe. Hemp, flax, and tobacco are much cultivated; rearing of cattle is well underſtood, and agriculture owes much to the Royal Academy, at Stockholm. Manufactures were long unknown, at preſent the troops are clothed with cloth made in the country: the making of hats was introduced at a vaſt expence, but was not attended with ſucceſs: the manufacture of ſilk is in a languiſhing ſtate, thoſe of cotton ſucceed better, as likewiſe that of Morocco leather: but the art of preparing timber and metals is a buſineſs the Swedes beſt underſtand, and moſt approve. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at near 3,000,000.

SWISSERLAND, or Switzerland. Under this name modern geographers include all the country occupied not only by the Swiſs, or Thirteen Cantons of the league, but by other eſtates in alliance with or ſubject to them; in which ſenſe the greateſt extent from eaſt to weſt will be about 180 miles, and from north to ſouth 140. On the north it is bounded by Swabia, on the eaſt by the Tyroleſe and Auſtrian Swabia, on the ſouth by Savoy and Italy, and on the weſt by France. Swiſſerland may juſtly be conſidered as ſome of the elevated land in Europe, as many principal rivers take their riſe here, and run in different directions to the extremity. The greater part is compoſed of mountains, with narrow vallies between: theſe mountains are compoſed of ſtupendous rocks, two, four, or ſix maſſes, piled on each other, and from four to ten thouſand feet in perpendicular height. One peak, on a mountain called the St. Gothard, is, by Du Cret, computed at 16,500 French feet. The lower part of theſe high mountains are covered with woods and paſtures, the herbage in which is of a remarkable length and richneſs. The middle conſiſts of Alps, or Alpinges, abounding in a great variety of odoriferous herbs, thickets, and buſhes, with excellent ſprings, in ſummer reſorted to by herdſmen, with their cattle. The third part of theſe mountains conſiſts almoſt entirely of craggy and inacceſſible rocks, ſome of which are quite bare, without herbage growing upon them, or even ſo much as graſs, whilſt others are continually covered with ſnow and ice. The vallies between theſe icy and ſnowy mountains, form an appearance like ſo many ſmooth frozen lakes, and from them vaſt fragments of ice, called glaciers or firns, often fall down into the intervals of the more fruitful eminences. It is from theſe maſſes and the thawing of the ice in general, that the greateſt part of the ſtreams and rivers in Swiſſerland are derived. The ice hills begin in the canton of Glarus, and after paſſing through the territory of the Griſons, and thence into the canton of Uri, terminate in the diſtrict of Bern. The higheſt of theſe mountains are thoſe in the canton of Uri, namely, St. Gothard, Firka, Criſpalt, and Luckmanier, which ſend forth rivers towards all parts of Europe. This is the moſt dreary part of all Swiſſerland, and on the ſummits of the mountains one eternal cold almoſt prevails, with hard gales of wind and very damp fogs, whereas the vallies, excepting ſome towns and villages, with a few fields, and ſtill fewer vineyards, thick woods, and rich paſtures, are overrun with lakes and other waters, and the ſummer heats there are frequently ſo inſupportable, that the inhabitants betake themſelves up to the mountains: though in winter the houſes again are almoſt buried with ſnow. In many places, within a ſmall compaſs, the four ſeaſons are ſeen at once, and ſometimes ſummer and winter are ſo near each other, that one hand may take up ſnow, and the other gather growing flowers. During the greateſt part of the year, the clouds lie beneath the peaks of the higheſt mountains, inſomuch, that from thence they appear like a ſea, the peaks projecting among them like iſlands. Sometimes, too, they break, and thus diſplay a view of the country beneath. From the riſing and ſinking of theſe clouds, the inhabitants form pretty certain conjectures with reſpect to the weather. Not one of the above mountains is without a cataract or waterfall, and as the eye, by reaſon of the intervention of the clouds, is not always able to reach the beginning of them, they look as if poured down from heaven upon the rocks. Among theſe mountains, are many excellent ſprings, ſome of which are medicinal, others warm, and others again cold baths, celebrated for their extraordinary virtues. Of theſe ſummits, too, ſome form a part of the Alps, ſo frequently mentioned in the Greek and Roman writers, the Appennine (or Alpes Summæ, now St. Gothard and Criſpalt) with the Alpes Lepontiæ, the Alpes Rhetiæ, &c. Very different from this is the remaining and ſmaller part of Swiſſerland, including the county of Thurgau, which is a part of the cantons of Zurich, Schafhauſen, Berne, Bâle, Soleure, and Friburg, for though this diſtrict is not without mountains, ſome of which are even 2000 or 2500 feet high, yet it is much more level than the above-mentioned part, and the lower parts of the mountains, and ſometimes alſo the very ſummits are covered with vineyards, corn-fields, meadows, and paſture-grounds. Here are, likewiſe, no Alps, nor rocky precipices, no cataracts, few trees, and in ſummer neither ſnow or ice. The mountains, inſtead of being interrupted by vaſt chaſms or abyſſes, are generally entire, and compoſed of a few ſmall eminences, the ſummits of which, far from ſhooting out into peaks, are flat or round, to the extent of many miles, without any conſiderable inequality, and frequently afford not only paſturage, but alſo arable ground. It is only during long rains, that in theſe parts the clouds ſink below the eminences. Great numbers of petrifactions, more particularly of marine ſhells and plants, are found among them. The fields too, though generally ſtony, are fertile, and the meadows in moſt places are planted with fruit-trees. This more level part of Swiſſerland is watered only by a few rivers, but thoſe large. Slate, black and variegated marble, porphyry, gypſum, alabaſter, cryſtal, ſaltpetre, ſalt, coal, &c. abound here, with ſilver, copper, lead, and iron ores. Gold-duſt is found in the ſands of ſeveral rivers. The levels and vallies produce grain, but that not in a ſufficiency to anſwer all their demands of home conſumption. Barley is ſowed on the very ice-mountains, the oats in a warmer ſoil, rye in a warmer ſtill, and the warmeſt of all is aſſigned to ſpelt. In moſt parts a threefold produce is accounted a tolerable harveſt. Flax, hemp, and tobacco, are much cultivated and worked, though not in ſufficient quantity. The Vaudois, the cantons of Bern and Schafhauſen, the Valtelinæ, and the Valais, produce the beſt wines in Swiſſerland, and of various ſorts. Apples, pears, nuts, cherries, plumbs, and cheſtnuts, are plentiful; and the part towards Italy abound in peaches, morelles, almonds, figs, citrons, pomegranates, and others of the more delicate fruits: ſaffron is cultivated in the Valais. The inhabitants derive their principal ſubſiſtence from their cattle; both the vallies and Alps, or middle parts of their enormous mountains, yielding excellent fodder. In the beginning of the ſummer, the cattle are driven up among the Alps, and there committed to the care of certain perſons ſtyled Sennes, who are either accountable to the owners for the milk, butter, and cheeſe, or agree to pay the a certain ſum for the temporary profit thereof. The Sennes on all the Alps, likewiſe, keep hogs, which are fed with the whey after making the butter and cheeſe. The Swiſs cheeſe is much eſteemed in other parts of Europe, but the beſt is that of Bern, and Griers in the canton of Friburg. Great numbers of horſes are brought up here for the French cavalry. Of wild animals, the chamois and the marmozet are the moſt remarkable. Among the Alps, is found a ſpecies of hares, which in ſummer perfectly reſemble other hares, but in winter become all over white inſomuch, that they are ſcarce diſtinguiſhable among the ſnow. Here are alſo, yellow and white foxes in great numbers, which in winter come down to the vallies. The lammergeyer, which delights in the higheſt peaks, i a large bird of the eagle kind, and its wings are fourteen feet in breadth This bird preys alike on wild and tame animals. There are beſides ſeveral edible fowls here, ſuch as the morecock, the rail, the ſnipe, the partridge and ſome others. The principal rivers are the Rhine, the Rhône, th Reuſs, the Aar, the Adda, and the Teſino, with many others that joi them. The principal lakes are thoſe of Geneva, Neufchâtel, Biel Zurich, the Waldſtatter, Thun, and Brien, with many more. Tha part of the Lake of Conſtance which waters the borders of Thurga and the abby of St. Gall, belongs alſo to Swiſſerland. Swiſſerland i better cultivated and more populous than foreigners uſually imagine though, in proportion to its extent, the number of towns, villages and people, here falls much ſhort of that in many other Europea countries. In ſeveral provinces there is not ſo much as one ſingl town, and in the whole country very little more than a hundred. Th Proteſtant cantons are ſaid to be better inhabited, and more wealth than the Roman Catholic. The total number of the inhabitants is com puted at two millions; which are divided into three claſſes, the peaſant nobles, and burghers. The inhabitants in general ſpeak German, and th is likewiſe the language in which all their ſtate and public affairs are tran ſacted, as alſo thoſe in the republic of the Griſons and the Valais. In part of the town of Friburg and its dependencies, with thoſe of Bern an the city of Geneva, as alſo in part of the Upper and all the Lower Valai and the principality of Neufchâtel, the French is uſed, but that generall the Patois, or a corrupted language. In ſeveral diſtricts of the Griſon they ſpeak the Romaniſh. In the Upper Griſons, and ſeveral diſtricts, a alſo in the Valteline, Chiavenna, and Bormio, the Italian language prevails with different degrees of purity. The ſciences are cultivated in Swiſſer land, with an application equal to that of any other nation, and the man eminent ſcholars it has produced are illuſtrious proofs of genius. The ma nufacture of Swiſſerland are various, and conſiderable in linen, ſilk, cotto and woollen, leather, hats, gloves, paper, pottery, clocks, watches, hard ware, toys, and many others; beſides which the principal exports ar cheeſe, butter, cattle, ſheep, horſes, and ſome wine, conveyed from plac to place by means of pack-horſes, the roads often being impracticable fo carriages. The imports are principally grain, hemp, flax, wine, ſalt, an ſome manufactures. The ancient Helvetians were a Gauliſh or Celtic peo ple, and Helvetia, which received its name from them, was divide into four cantons or territories. Julius Cæſar was the firſt who re duced the inhabitants under the dominion of the Romans, and the founded colonies here under the names of Julia Equeſtris, Augu Rauracorum, and Aventicum. Their dominion continued till the 5 century, when the country was over-run by the Burgundians and Ge mans; but ſoon after the Franks made themſelves entire maſters of i On the deceaſe of Louis I. king of the Franks, and emperor of the R mans, the ſouth or Burgundian part of Helvetia devolved to the emper Lotharius, and the northern, or that of Allemain, to king Louis the Ge man. Lotharius II. ſon to the former, and king of Auſtraſia, retained t ſouth part of Helvetia, which, together with Burgundy or Franche Comt was ſtyled the Leſſer Burgundy. After his demiſe, this ſouthern part a devolved to Louis the German, who thus became poſſed of all Swiſſerlan and from him it deſcended to his ſon, Charles the Fat. In 888, Rud phus, duke of the Leſſer Burgundy, took on him the title of king, b the north part of Swiſſerland continued under the dominion of the e peror Arnolphus. Rodolphus II. ſon to the former, obtained a grant the Argau from the emperor Henry I. This prince was ſucceeded by ſon, Conrad, as the latter again was by his ſon, Rodolphus III. who, 1032, by a formal will, bequeathed his kingdom of the Leſſer Burgu to the emperor, Conrad II. whereby all Swiſſerland once more bec united to the German empire. In the 13th century, it became a th time a nominal province of the German empire, which, however, was p ſeſſed of little real authority here. A great part of the country was in hands of the clergy, and the remainder in general or particular nob The inhabitants of Uri, Schweitz, Unterwald, and the territory of H were, from time immemorial, poſſeſſed of the right of being governed their own magiſtrates, with other important privileges, and, in the century, the three firſt entered into an alliance, which they ſolemnly renewed every tenth year. They had always declared themſelves averſe to the authority of the emperor's ſtadtholder in Swiſſerland, till, in 1209, Otho IV. compelled them to receive Rodolphus III. count of Habſburg, as his repreſentative, though he was to take an oath that he would govern according to law and equity, and make no encroachments upon their rights and liberties. This nobleman ſeems to have been little obſervant of that engagement; for, in 1231, we find them unanimouſly addreſſing the emperor, Henry VII. to recal him, which he accordingly did, farther confirming to them all their privileges. In 1249, the like was done by his ſucceſſor, Frederick. In 1257, during the interregnum, in conſideration of his great power, they choſe for their protector Rodolphus V. count of Habſburg, who, in 1273, became emperor of Germany. At the ſolicitation of his ſon, Albert, duke of Auſtria, he intended to have erected a particular dukedom in Swiſſerland, which deſign did not tranſpire till ſeveral years after, when it appeared that he had purchaſed of the abbot of Murbach the town of Lucern, with his revenues and prerogatives in ſeveral villages in the territory of Schweiz. Theſe three diſtricts, on the death of Rodolphus, faithfully adhered to his ſucceſſor, the emperor Adolphus, which gave ſo much offence to his ſon, duke Albert, that on his acceſſion to the crown of Germany, on the death of the latter, he diſplayed his reſentment in more than one inſtance, not only refuſing peremptorily to confirm their privileges, without vouchſafing to alledge any reaſon for his refuſal, but likewiſe ſetting over them two noblemen of the moſt infamous character for avarice and arrogance, whoſe adminiſtration became quite inſupportable. On this, ſeeing that nothing leſs was in agitation than the total deprivation of their liberties, and the bringing them under the yoke of Auſtria, they united in a firm reſolution to defend themſelves to the laſt extremity. They accordingly choſe for commanders three gentlemen of approved courage and abilities; namely, Werner (or Gerhard) Stauffach, of Schweiz, Walter Furſt, of Uri, and Arnold Melchthal, of Unterwald; who ſecretly agreed together, that on the firſt day of the year 1308, they ſhould ſurpriſe and demoliſh the caſtles in which the Imperial governors reſided. This reſolution being effected, theſe three places joined again in a league for ten years, which gave birth to the Helvetian confederacy. Schweiz being the moſt powerful of the three confederate places, and the firſt meeting of the confederates held at Brunnen, in its territories, as alſo the firſt league concluded there, and after that the firſt battle, by the ſucceſs of which the liberty of the confederates was retrieved, being fought within its juriſdiction, its name was given to the general confederacy. The emperor Albert thinking this was the ſeaſon for totally reducing theſe three places by force of arms, haſtened to Baden, to begin the preparations, but being, on his return, murdered by his brother's ſon, John of Habſburg, the deſign was dropped; till, not long after, the houſe of Auſtria invented another pretence for falling on the United Cantons. For theſe and other parts of Swiſſerland, adhering to the emperor Louis of Bavaria, his competitor Frederic of Auſtria, was ſo extremely irritated at it, that the Schweitzers having, during their conteſts with the abby of Einſidlen, made ſome of its monks priſoners, put them under the ban, to which the biſhop of Conſtance added excommunications. The former was taken off again by the emperor Louis, and the latter by the archbiſhop of Mentz. Leopold, duke of Auſtria, by virtue alſo of a commiſſion from his brother Frederic above-mentioned, in 1315, attacked the confederates with a powerful army, but was defeated by them at Morgarten. Hereupon, on the 8th of December of the ſame year, they entered into a perpetual alliance, which proved the origin of the preſent Helvetian confederacy. In the year 1332, Lucern acceded to it; in 1351, Zurich and Glarus; and in 1352, their number was increaſed by the coalition of Zug and Bern. For the ſpace of 125 years, this confederacy was compoſed only of theſe eight territories or cantons, on which account, they are to this day called the Old Cantons. In the year 1481, Friburg and Soleure; and in 1501, Bale and Schafhauſen, were admitted into the confederacy; and, in 1513, Appenzell alſo acceded to it. Theſe thirteen towns and countries, which properly conſtitute the Helvetian republic, are united by a reciprocal convention, which, though not in all places the ſame, and the unions of the eight old and five later cantons differing in certain reſpects, yet in the principal points nearly agree: the firſt and chief article, relating to the ſuccours, aſſiſtance and protection to be given to any one of them in caſe of any unjuſt violence, and determining in what manner, and by whom the reaſons for any military enterprize ſhall be diſcuſſed, as alſo how and where ſuch ſuccour ſhall be given, and ſtating both the expences of the war, and the diſtribution of any acquiſitions. The ſecond article regulates their procedure in accommodating any differences which may ariſe between two or more towns or cantons, &c. In ſome leagues, and particularly in thoſe of the old towns, it is permitted to enter into any other connections at pleaſure, provided ſuch connections do not affect the original confederacy; but in the conventions with the later towns and cantons, it is expreſsly ſtipulated that they ſhall not contract any engagements without the privity, advice, and conſent of the old ones. The federal union, however, extends no farther than to the ſuccours ſtipulated in the leagues, and other caſes ſet forth in the ſame; in all other incidental affairs relative to the confederacy, the majority of votes is not obligatory to the whole body; particularly with reſpect to the making of alliances with foreign powers, wherein every town and canton is at liberty to act as a contracting party or not, and that even though ſuch alliance ſhould have been approved of by all the other towns and cantons. Thus the whole Helvetian body conſiſts properly of thirteen diſtinct republics or free ſtates, united by oath for their mutual ſecurity and maintenance. It has now for ſome centuries ſupported itſelf in an abſolute freedom and independency, enjoyed all the privileges of majeſty, made wars, concluded treaties, received and ſent envoys from and to the ſeveral European powers, entered into alliances with them, given what form they thought proper to their conſtitution, enacted laws and ordinances both in temporal and ſpiritual affairs, and exerciſed all the various prerogatives of ſovereignty. Accordingly, at the peace of Weſtphalia, in 1648, it was acknowledged to be a free ſtate, even by the emperor and empire. The form of government in the ſeveral ſtates of the Helvetian republic. is in ſome monarchical, in others ariſtocratical, and in others again democratical. Their ſovereigns are the princes of the empire, ſuch as the biſhop of Bâle, and the abbot of St, Gall. The ariſtocratical governments are, the cantons of Zurich, Bâle, and Schafhauſen, with ſome incorporate places, for example, the towns of St. Gall, Muhlhauſen and Biel, the cantons of Bern, Lucern, Friburg and Soleure, over which are appointed Schultherſzen or juſticiaries, and Neufchatel and Geneva. The democratical form of government prevails in the ſix cantons of Uri, Schweitz, Underwalden, Zug, Glarus, and Appenzell, which are under the direction of Landammans; as alſo, though with ſome variation in the Griſons and the Valais, but in all, every male of the age of ſixteen has a vote; with reſpect to their military eſtabliſhment, the only regular forces here, are thoſe of the garriſons of Zurich, Bern, Bâle, Geneva, and Aarburg; but every burgher, peaſant, and ſubject is diligently to exerciſe himſelf in the uſe of arms, to appear on the ſtated days for ſhooting at a mark, to furniſh himſelf with proper clothing, accoutrements, powder and ball, to be always ready for the defence of his country, and punctually to comply with every article of war. Swiſſerland is well provided with arſenals, particularly at Bern, but the only fortified places in it are Geneva, Soleure, Zurich, Bern, Bâle, and Aarburg. The Switſers engage in the ſervice of foreign princes and ſtates, either merely as guards, or as marching regiments: in the latter caſe the government permits the enliſting volunteers, though only for ſuch ſtates as they are in alliance, or have entered into a previous agreement with; and no ſubject is to be forced into foreign ſervice, nor even to be enliſted, without the concurrence of the magiſtracy. All the advantages ariſing to the regencies from theſe levies, are uſually only an annual ſubſidy paid by the ſtate in whoſe favour the levies are thus granted; and perhaps a promiſe of reciprocal aid when neceſſary. A public benefit, however, attending this cuſtom, is that theſe men returning home after a long ſervice abroad, are a great improvement to the ſtanding militia of their country. The Proteſtant cantons are Zurich, Bern, Bâle, and Schaffhauſen. The Roman Catholic cantons are Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, Underwalden, Zug, Friburg and Soleure. The mixed are Glarus and Appenzel. The confederates are the abbot of St. Gall and the Valas, Roman Catholic. The Griſons, towns of Geneva, St. Gall, Bienne, Mulhauſen, and Neuchâtel, Proteſtants; and biſhopric of Bâle, mixed. The independent ſtates under the protection of the ſtates or the allies are Geriſau, Engelberg, and Kapperſchwiel, Roman Catholics; and Haldenſtein, Proteſtants. The ſubjects are Baden, Morat, Granſon, Echalen, Orbe, Schwartzenburg, Werdenberg, and Bienne, Proteſtants. The free bailiwicks, Utznach, Gaſter, the Italian bailiwicks, Roman Catholics; and the Thurgau, Rheinthal, Sargans, and Tockenburg, mixed.

SYENE, a city of Egypt, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Nile. This town is celebrated for the firſt attempt, to aſcertain the meaſure of the circumference of the earth, by Eratoſthenes, a native of Cyrene, who about the year 276 before Chriſt, was invited from Athens to Alexandria by Ptolemy Euergetes: near it, on a ſmall iſland on the Nile, anciently called Elephantina, is a temple of Cnuphis ſtill ſtanding, very little injured; here was likewiſe a Nilometer, but this is not now to be diſcovered. In this town, which was ſituated under the tropic, according to the report of Strabo, a well was ſunk which marked the ſummer ſolſtice, and the day was known when the ſtile of the ſun-dial caſt no ſhadow at noon: at that inſtant the vertical ſun darted his rays to the bottom of the well, and his image was reflected on the water. Syene is at preſent a miſerable place, with a ſmall fort, commanded by an aga of the Janiſſaries: the remains of the ancient town are on an eminence to the ſouth. Columns and pillars of granite ſcattered here and there denote its ſituation. Here is an ancient building, perhaps the obſervatory of the ancient Egyptians: 375 miles S. from Cairo. Long. 49. 48. SYR, or Zur, a town of Arabia, in the province of Hadramaut: 184 miles E. Amanzirifdin.

SYRA, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago. It is mountainous, but produces plenty of barley, wine, figs, cotton, and olives; as alſo good wheat. The air is moiſt and cooler than in the neighbouring iſlands. The inhabitants, a few Greek families excepted, are Roman Catholics. The town of Syra is built round a little ſteep mountain; between it and the harbour may be ſeen the remains of grand buildings, which made a part of the ancient city of Syros: 12 miles S. Andros. Long. 42. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 27. N.

SYRACUSA, a ſea-port town of Sicily, in the vally of Noto, and formerly a ſuperb city, and flouriſhing republic; but war, tyranny, and earthquakes have nearly deſtroyed it. Of four grand quarters of which the city was compoſed, only one, Ortygia, which was the ſmalleſt, now remains: the other parts are covered with ruins, intermixed with vineyards, fields, and gardens. It is however the ſee of a biſhop, and has a good harbour. In the year 1735, it was taken by the Spaniards: 71 miles S. Meſſina, and 115 SE. Palermo. Long. 39. 56. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 5. N.

SYRE, a river of Norway, which runs into the North Sea: 20 miles SW. Syre.

SYRIA, a province of Aſiatic Turkey; this name is given to the whole ſpace contained between two lines drawn, the one from Alexandretta to the Euphrates, and the other from Gaza, in the deſert of Arabia; bounded on the eaſt by this deſert, and on the weſt by the Mediterranean: the Arabians call it Barr el Sham. This country is, in ſome meaſure, onl a chain of mountains, which diſtribute themſelves, in various direction from one leading branch; and ſuch, in fact, is the appearance it preſent whether we approach it from the ſide of the ſea, or by the immenſe plai of the deſert. Theſe mountains, as they vary their levels and ſituation are alſo greatly changed in their form and appearance. Between Alexandretta and the Orontes, the firs, larches, oaks, box-trees, laurels, yew and myrtles, with which they abound, give them an air of livelineſs whic delights the traveller. On ſome declivities, he even meets with cottage environed with fig-trees and vineyards; and the ſight of theſe repays th fatigue he has endured on a road which, by rugged paths, leads him fro the bottom of vallies to the tops of hills, and from the tops of hills to th bottoms of vallies. The inferior branches, which extend to the northward of Aleppo, on the contrary, preſent nothing but bare rocks, without verdure or earth. To the ſouth of Antioch, and on the ſea-coaſt, th hill ſides are proper for the cultivation of tobacco, olives, and vines; but on the ſide of the deſert, the ſummits and declivities of this chain are almoſt one continued ſeries of white rocks. Towards Lebanon, the mountains are lofty, but are covered, in many places, with as much earth as fi them for cultivation, by induſtry and labour. There, amid the crags o the rocks, may be ſeen, the no very magnificent remains of the boaſte cedars; but a much greater number of firs, oaks, brambles, mulberry trees, figs, and vines. As we leave the country of the Druſes, the mountains are no longer ſo high, nor ſo rugged, but become fitter for tillage they riſe again to the ſouth eaſt of Mount Carmel, are covered with wood and afford very pleaſant proſpects: but, as we advance towards Judea, the loſe their verdure, their vallies grow narrower, they become dry and ſtony and terminate at the Dead Sea in a pile of deſolate rocks, full of precipice and caverns, while to the weſt of Jordan, and the lake, another chain o rocks, ſtill higher, and more rugged, preſents a ſtill more gloomy proſpect and announces, afar off, the entrance of the deſert, and the end of th habitable lands. It is an opinion pretty generally received, that Syria i a very hot country; but it will be neceſſary to make ſeveral diſtinctions firſt, on account of the difference of latitude, which, from one extremit to the other, is not leſs than ſix degrees: ſecondly, from the natural diviſion of the country into low and flat, and high and mountainous, whic diviſion occaſions a ſtill more ſenſible difference; for, while Reaumur' thermometer ſtands at 25 and 26 degrees upon the coaſt, it hardly riſes t 20 or 21 among the mountains. Syria unites different climates under th ſame ſky, and collects, within a narrow compaſs, pleaſures and production which nature has elſewhere diſperſed at great diſtances of times and place In France, for inſtance, ſeaſons are ſeparated by months, there, we ma ſay, they are only ſeparated by hours. If Saide or Tripoli are incommoded by the heats of July, at the diſtance of ſix hours the neighbourin mountains are in the temperature of March; or, on the other hand, i chilled by the froſts of December at Beſharrai, a day's journey brings th traveller back to the coaſt, amid the flowers of May. In ſpite of the barbariſm of a government which is an enemy to all induſtry and improvement, we are aſtoniſhed at the variety this province affords: beſides wheat rye, barley, beans, and the cotton-plant, which is cultivated every where we find a multitude of uſeful and agreeable productions, appropriated t different ſituations. Paleſtine abounds in ſeſamum, from which oil is procured, and doura as good as that of Egypt. Maize thrives in the light ſoi of Balbek, and even rice is cultivated with ſucceſs. They have lately begun to plant ſugar-canes in the gardens of Saide and of Bairout, and they find them equal to thoſe of the Delta. Indigo grows, without cultivating on the banks of the Jordan, and only requires care to make it of an excellent quality. The hill ſides of Latakia produce tobacco, which is th principal article of its commerce with Damietta and Cairo: this is no cultivated throughout all the mountains. As for the trees, the olive-tre of Provence grows at Antioch and Ramla to the height of the beech; th white mulberry-tree conſtitutes the wealth of the whole country of th Druſes, by the beautiful ſilks which are produced on it, while the vine ſupported on poles, or winding round the oaks, ſupplies grapes which afford red and white wines, that might rival thoſe of Bourdeaux. Gaza produces dates and pomegranates; Tripoli affords oranges; Bairout figs an bananas, not inferior to thoſe of St. Domingo; Aleppo enjoys the excluſive advantage of producing piſtachios; and Damaſcus of poſſeſſing a the fruits known in the milder climates of Europe. On the mountain and in all elevated plains which ſtretch to the eaſtward, the air is light pure, and dry; while on the coaſt, and eſpecially from Alexandretta t Jaffa, it is moiſt and heavy, and exceedingly unwholeſome. In the cour of a whole ſummer, few clouds are ſeen, and ſtill leſs rain, which only begins about the end of October, and then is neither long nor plentiful: th huſbandmen wiſh for it to ſow what they call their winter-crop, that i their wheat and barley. In December and January the rain becomes mor frequent and heavier, and ſnow often falls in the higher country: it ſometimes rains alſo in March and April; and the huſbandman avails himſe of it for his ſummer crop of ſeſamum, doura, tobacco, cotton, beans, an water-melons. The remainder of the year is uniform, and drought

more frequently complained of than too much wet. Within 2500 years we may reckon ten invaſions which have introduced into that country a ſucceſſion of foreign nations: firſt, the Aſſyrians of Nineveh, who paſſing the Euphrates about the year 750 before the Chriſtian æra, within ſixty years, obtained poſſeſſion of almoſt the whole country lying to the north of Judea; next the Chaldeæans of Babylon, who having deſtroyed the power on which they were dependant, ſucceeded, as by hereditary right, to its poſſeſſions, and completed the conqueſt of Spria, except only the Iſle of Tyre. The Chaldæans were followed by the Perſians under Cyrus, and the Perſians by the Macedonians, under Alexander. It then ſeemed as if Syria was about to ceaſe being a vaſſal to foreign powers, and to obtain a diſtinct and independent government, according to the natural right of every country; but the people, who found in the Seleucidæ only cruel deſpots and oppreſſors, ſeeing themſelves reduced to the neceſſity of bearing ſome yoke, preferred the lighteſt; and Syria, yielding to the arms of Pompey, became a province of the Roman empire. Five centuries after, when the ſons of Theodoſius divided their immenſe patrimony, this country changed the capital to which it was to appertain, without changing its maſters, and was annexed to the empire of Conſtantinople: ſuch was its ſituation, when, in the year 622, the Arabian tribes, collected under the banners of Mahomet, ſeized, or rather laid it waſte. Since that period, torn to pieces by the civil wars of the Fatemites and the Ommiades, wreſted from the califs by their rebellious governors, taken from them by the Turkmen ſoldiery, invaded by the European cruſaders, retaken by the Mamlukes of Egypt, and ravaged by Tamerlane and his Tartars, it has, at length, fallen into the hands of the Ottoman Turks, who have been its maſters near three centuries. The inhabitants may be divided into three principal claſſes: the poſterity of the people conquered by the Arabs, that is, the Greeks of the Lower Empire; the poſterity of the Arabian conquerors; the preſent ruling people, the Ottoman Turks; of theſe three claſſes the former muſt be again ſubdivided, in conſequence of ſeveral diſtinctions which have taken place among them. The Greeks, then, muſt be divided into Greeks Proper, vulgarly called Schiſmatics, or ſeparated from the Romiſh communion. Latin Greeks reunited to that communion. Maronites or Greeks of the ſect of the monk Maron, formerly independent of the two communions, but at preſent united to the latter. The Arabs muſt be divided into the proper deſcendants of the conquerors, who have greatly intermixed their blood, and are conſiderably the moſt numerous; Motoualis, diſtinguiſhed from theſe by their religion; the Druſes, diſtinct likewiſe from the ſame reaſon; the Anſarians, who are alſo deſcended from the Arabs. To theſe people, who are the cultivators and ſettled inhabitants of Syria, muſt ſtill be added three other wandering tribes, or paſtors, viz. the Turkmen, the Curds, and the Bedouin Arabs: ſuch are the different races diſperſed over the country, between the ſea and the deſert, from Gaza to Alexandretta. In this enumeration, it is remarkable that the ancient inhabitants have no remaining repreſentative; their diſtinguiſhing character is loſt and confounded in that of the Greeks; who, in fact, by a continued reſidence from the days of Alexander, have had a ſufficient time entirely to take place of the ancient people; the country alone, and a few traits of manners and cuſtoms, preſerve the veſtiges of diſtant ages. Syria is divided into five governments, or pachalics, viz. the pachalic of Aleppo, Tripoli, Damaſcus, Acre, and Paleſtine: the whole of which is, by a modern traveller, computed to bring into the Grand Signior's treaſury the ſum of 312,500l. ſterling. All the troops of the five pachalics united, amount to no more than 5700 men.

The anchorage extends 2000 feet up the cove, and has ſoundings in general of four fathom near the ſhore, and five, ſix, or ſeven near the middle of the channel. It is perfectly ſecure from all winds: and for a conſiderable way on both ſides, ſhips can lie cloſe to the ſhore; nor are there any rocks or ſhallows to render the navigation dangerous. Long. 159. 20. SYENE, a city of Egypt, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Nile. This town is celebrated for the firſt attempt, to aſcertain the meaſure of the circumference of the earth, by Eratoſthenes, a native of Cyrene, who about the year 276 before Chriſt, was invited from Athens to Alexandria by Ptolemy Euergetes: near it, on a ſmall iſland on the Nile, anciently called Elephantina, is a temple of Cnuphis ſtill ſtanding, very little injured; here was likewiſe a Nilometer, but this is not now to be diſcovered. In this town, which was ſituated under the tropic, according to the report of Strabo, a well was ſunk which marked the ſummer ſolſtice, and the day was known when the ſtile of the ſun-dial caſt no ſhadow at noon: at that inſtant the vertical ſun darted his rays to the bottom of the well, and his image was reflected on the water. Syene is at preſent a miſerable place, with a ſmall fort, commanded by an aga of the Janiſſaries: the remains of the ancient town are on an eminence to the ſouth. Columns and pillars of granite ſcattered here and there denote its ſituation. Here is an ancient building, perhaps the obſervatory of the ancient Egyptians: 375 miles S. from Cairo. Long. 49. 48. SYR, or Zur, a town of Arabia, in the province of Hadramaut: 184 miles E. Amanzirifdin.

SYRA, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago. It is mountainous, but produces plenty of barley, wine, figs, cotton, and olives; as alſo good wheat. The air is moiſt and cooler than in the neighbouring iſlands. The inhabitants, a few Greek families excepted, are Roman Catholics. The town of Syra is built round a little ſteep mountain; between it and the harbour may be ſeen the remains of grand buildings, which made a part of the ancient city of Syros: 12 miles S. Andros. Long. 42. 40. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 27. N.

SYRACUSA, a ſea-port town of Sicily, in the vally of Noto, and formerly a ſuperb city, and flouriſhing republic; but war, tyranny, and earthquakes have nearly deſtroyed it. Of four grand quarters of which the city was compoſed, only one, Ortygia, which was the ſmalleſt, now remains: the other parts are covered with ruins, intermixed with vineyards, fields, and gardens. It is however the ſee of a biſhop, and has a good harbour. In the year 1735, it was taken by the Spaniards: 71 miles S. Meſſina, and 115 SE. Palermo. Long. 39. 56. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 5. N.

SYRAU, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in the Vogtland: 4 miles NNW. Plauen.

SYRE, a lake of Norway, in the province of Chriſtianſand: 30 miles NNW. Chriſtianſand.

SYRE, a river of Norway, which runs into the North Sea: 20 miles SW. Syre.

SYRIA, a province of Aſiatic Turkey; this name is given to the whole ſpace contained between two lines drawn, the one from Alexandretta to the Euphrates, and the other from Gaza, in the deſert of Arabia; bounded on the eaſt by this deſert, and on the weſt by the Mediterranean: the Arabians call it Barr el Sham. This country is, in ſome meaſure, onl a chain of mountains, which diſtribute themſelves, in various direction from one leading branch; and ſuch, in fact, is the appearance it preſent whether we approach it from the ſide of the ſea, or by the immenſe plai of the deſert. Theſe mountains, as they vary their levels and ſituatio are alſo greatly changed in their form and appearance. Between Alexandretta and the Orontes, the firs, larches, oaks, box-trees, laurels, yew and myrtles, with which they abound, give them an air of livelineſs whic delights the traveller. On ſome declivities, he even meets with cottage environed with fig-trees and vineyards; and the ſight of theſe repays th fatigue he has endured on a road which, by rugged paths, leads him fro the bottom of vallies to the tops of hills, and from the tops of hills to th bottoms of vallies. The inferior branches, which extend to the northward of Aleppo, on the contrary, preſent nothing but bare rocks, without verdure or earth. To the ſouth of Antioch, and on the ſea-coaſt, th hill ſides are proper for the cultivation of tobacco, olives, and vines; bu on the ſide of the deſert, the ſummits and declivities of this chain are almoſt one continued ſeries of white rocks. Towards Lebanon, the mountains are lofty, but are covered, in many places, with as much earth as fi them for cultivation, by induſtry and labour. There, amid the crags o the rocks, may be ſeen, the no very magnificent remains of the boaſte cedars; but a much greater number of firs, oaks, brambles, mulberry trees, figs, and vines. As we leave the country of the Druſes, the mountains are no longer ſo high, nor ſo rugged, but become fitter for tillage they riſe again to the ſouth-eaſt of Mount Carmel, are covered with wood and afford very pleaſant proſpects: but, as we advance towards Judea, th loſe their verdure, their vallies grow narrower, they become dry and ſtony and terminate at the Dead Sea in a pile of deſolate rocks, full of precipic and caverns, while to the weſt of Jordan, and the lake, another chain o rocks, ſtill higher, and more rugged, preſents a ſtill more gloomy proſpect and announces, afar off, the entrance of the deſert, and the end of th habitable lands. It is an opinion pretty generally received, that Syria i a very hot country; but it will be neceſſary to make ſeveral diſtinctions firſt, on account of the difference of latitude, which, from one extremit to the other, is not leſs than ſix degrees: ſecondly, from the natural diviſion of the country into low and flat, and high and mountainous, whic diviſion occaſions a ſtill more ſenſible difference; for, while Reaumur' thermometer ſtands at 25 and 26 degrees upon the coaſt, it hardly riſes t 20 or 21 among the mountains. Syria unites different climates under th ſame ſky, and collects, within a narrow compaſs, pleaſures and productions which nature has elſewhere diſperſed at great diſtances of times and places In France, for inſtance, ſeaſons are ſeparated by months, there, we ma ſay, they are only ſeparated by hours. If Saide or Tripoli are incommoded by the heats of July, at the diſtance of ſix hours the neighbourin mountains are in the temperature of March; or, on the other hand, i chilled by the froſts of December at Beſharrai, a day's journey brings th traveller back to the coaſt, amid the flowers of May. In ſpite of the barbariſm of a government which is an enemy to all induſtry and improvement, we are aſtoniſhed at the variety this province affords: beſides wheat rye, barley, beans, and the cotton-plant, which is cultivated every where we find a multitude of uſeful and agreeable productions, appropriated t different ſituations. Paleſtine abounds in ſeſamum, from which oil is procured, and doura as good as that of Egypt. Maize thrives in the light ſoi of Balbek, and even rice is cultivated with ſucceſs. They have lately begun to plant ſugar-canes in the gardens of Saide and of Bairout, and they find them equal to thoſe of the Delta. Indigo grows, without cultivating on the banks of the Jordan, and only requires care to make it of an excellent quality. The hill ſides of Latakia produce tobacco, which is th principal article of its commerce with Damietta and Cairo: this is no cultivated throughout all the mountains. As for the trees, the olive-tre of Provence grows at Antioch and Ramla to the height of the beech; th white mulberry-tree conſtitutes the wealth of the whole country of th Druſes, by the beautiful ſilks which are produced on it, while the vine ſupported on poles, or winding round the oaks, ſupplies grapes which afford red and white wines, that might rival thoſe of Bourdeaux. Gaza produces dates and pomegranates; Tripoli affords oranges; Bairout figs an bananas, not inferior to thoſe of St. Domingo; Aleppo enjoys the excluſive advantage of producing piſtachios; and Damaſcus of poſſeſſing a the fruits known in the milder climates of Europe. On the mountain and in all elevated plains which ſtretch to the eaſtward, the air is light pure, and dry; while on the coaſt, and eſpecially from Alexandretta t Jaffa, it is moiſt and heavy, and exceedingly unwholeſome. In the cour of a whole ſummer, few clouds are ſeen, and ſtill leſs rain, which only begins about the end of October, and then is neither long nor plentiful: th huſbandmen wiſh for it to ſow what they call their winter-crop, that i their wheat and barley. In December and January the rain becomes mo frequent and heavier, and ſnow often falls in the higher country: it ſometimes rains alſo in March and April; and the huſbandman avails himſe of it for his ſummer crop of ſeſamum, doura, tobacco, cotton, beans, a water-melons. The remainder of the year is uniform, and drought

more frequently complained of than too much wet. Within 2500 years we may reckon ten invaſions which have introduced into that country a ſucceſſion of foreign nations: firſt, the Aſſyrians of Nineveh, who paſſing the Euphrates about the year 750 before the Chriſtian æra, within ſixty years, obtained poſſeſſion of almoſt the whole country lying to the north of Judea; next the Chaldeæans of Babylon, who having deſtroyed the power on which they were dependant, ſucceeded, as by hereditary right, to its poſſeſſions, and completed the conqueſt of Spria, except only the Iſle of Tyre. The Chaldæans were followed by the Perſians under Cyrus, and the Perſians by the Macedonians, under Alexander. It then ſeemed as if Syria was about to ceaſe being a vaſſal to foreign powers, and to obtain a diſtinct and independent government, according to the natural right of every country; but the people, who found in the Seleucidæ only cruel deſpots and oppreſſors, ſeeing themſelves reduced to the neceſſity of bearing ſome yoke, preferred the lighteſt; and Syria, yielding to the arms of Pompey, became a province of the Roman empire. Five centuries after, when the ſons of Theodoſius divided their immenſe patrimony, this country changed the capital to which it was to appertain, without changing its maſters, and was annexed to the empire of Conſtantinople: ſuch was its ſituation, when, in the year 622, the Arabian tribes, collected under the banners of Mahomet, ſeized, or rather laid it waſte. Since that period, torn to pieces by the civil wars of the Fatemites and the Ommiades, wreſted from the califs by their rebellious governors, taken from them by the Turkmen ſoldiery, invaded by the European cruſaders, retaken by the Mamlukes of Egypt, and ravaged by Tamerlane and his Tartars, it has, at length, fallen into the hands of the Ottoman Turks, who have been its maſters near three centuries. The inhabitants may be divided into three principal claſſes: the poſterity of the people conquered by the Arabs, that is, the Greeks of the Lower Empire; the poſterity of the Arabian conquerors; the preſent ruling people, the Ottoman Turks; of theſe three claſſes the former muſt be again ſubdivided, in conſequence of ſeveral diſtinctions which have taken place among them. The Greeks, then, muſt be divided into Greeks Proper, vulgarly called Schiſmatics, or ſeparated from the Romiſh communion. Latin Greeks reunited to that communion. Maronites or Greeks of the ſect of the monk Maron, formerly independent of the two communions, but at preſent united to the latter. The Arabs muſt be divided into the proper deſcendants of the conquerors, who have greatly intermixed their blood, and are conſiderably the moſt numerous; Motoualis, diſtinguiſhed from theſe by their religion; the Druſes, diſtinct likewiſe from the ſame reaſon; the Anſarians, who are alſo deſcended from the Arabs. To theſe people, who are the cultivators and ſettled inhabitants of Syria, muſt ſtill be added three other wandering tribes, or paſtors, viz. the Turkmen, the Curds, and the Bedouin Arabs: ſuch are the different races diſperſed over the country, between the ſea and the deſert, from Gaza to Alexandretta. In this enumeration, it is remarkable that the ancient inhabitants have no remaining repreſentative; their diſtinguiſhing character is loſt and confounded in that of the Greeks; who, in fact, by a continued reſidence from the days of Alexander, have had a ſufficient time entirely to take place of the ancient people; the country alone, and a few traits of manners and cuſtoms, preſerve the veſtiges of diſtant ages. Syria is divided into five governments, or pachalics, viz. the pachalic of Aleppo, Tripoli, Damaſcus, Acre, and Paleſtine: the whole of which is, by a modern traveller, computed to bring into the Grand Signior's treaſury the ſum of 312,500l. ſterling. All the troops of the five pachalics united, amount to no more than 5700 men.

TAAFINGE, an iſland of Denmark, about 16 miles in circumference, ſituated between the iſland of Funen and Langeland, with a town of the ſame name.

TAAIF, a town of Arabia, in the province of Hedjas, ſituated upon a lofty mountain, in ſo agreeable a country, that the Arabs compare its environs to thoſe of Damaſcus and Sana. This city ſupplies Jidda and Mecca with excellent fruits, particularly raiſins, and carries on a conſiderable trade in almonds, which grow in great plenty in its territories: 60 miles SE. Mecca.

TAAS, a city of Arabia, in the province of Yemen, which owes its foundation to the tomb of a ſaint, who, according to tradition, was king of the country. It ſtands at the foot of a fertile hill, called Sabber: it is encompaſſed with a wall between ſixteen and thirty feet thick, and flanked with ſeveral towers. The fortreſs of Kahhre ſtands in the circuit of the wall: its walls are faced with burnt bricks, but within conſiſt of bricks which, inſtead of being burnt, have been only dried in the ſun. This city has only two gates; and each of theſe is after the Arabic faſhion, fortified with three towers: only two of them are in a condition to bear cannons. When Mr. Niebuhr ſaw it, the garriſon, at this time, conſiſted of 600 men: 48 miles ENE. Mocha. Long. 44. 10. E Greenwich. Lat. 13. 35. N.

TAAWIRRY, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean. There are two ſituated within the reef of the iſland of Otaheite, and on the eaſt ſide of the main iſland. Within theſe iſlands there is anchorage within the reef that ſurrounds them. The French veſſels under the command of M. Bougainville lay here. The name of the other iſland is Boourou.

TAB, a river of Perſia, which ſeparates the province of Chuſiſtan from the province of Farſiſtan, and runs into the Perſian Gulf, near Chiniz.

TABA, a town of Africa, on the Grain Coaſt.

TABAGO, an iſland in the Pacific Ocean, near the coaſt of Mexico; about three miles long, and two broad. It is mountainous, and on the north ſide the high land declines with a gentle deſcent to the ſea. Near the ſtrand the ſoil is a black mould, and deep, but towards the top of the mountain ſtrong and dry. The north ſide of the iſland makes a very pleaſant appearance, and ſeems to be a garden of fruit-trees, incloſed within others of the foreſt kind. The principal products are plantains and bananas, which grow very well from the foot to the middle of the mountain; but thoſe near the top are ſmall, as wanting moiſture. There was formerly a ſmall town near the ſea, on the north ſide of the iſland; but it was ruined by the privateers that then frequented thoſe ſeas. Before it is a good road, about a mile from the ſhore, where ſhips may ride very ſafely in 16 or 18 fathom water: 6 leagues S. Panama. Long. 82. 9. W. Greenwich. Lat. 8. 40. N.

TABAGUILLA, a ſmall iſland in the Pacific Ocean, near Tabago.

Tabanié, a town of Egypt, on the eaſt branch of the Nile: 6 miles SW. Manſora.

TABARA, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon: 14 miles N. Zamora.

TABARCA, or Tabaquer, an iſland in the Mediterranean, near the coaſt of Africa, at the mouth of the river Zaine, which ſeparates Algiers from Tunis. The Lomellines, a noble Genoeſe family, have been in poſſeſſion of the little iſland that lies before Tabarca, at the mouth of the Zaine, ever ſince the time of the famous Andrea Doria, to whom the Tuniſeans gave it, with the ſolemn conſent of the grand ſignior, in ranſom for one of their princes, whom Andrea had taken captive. This place is defended by a ſmall caſtle, well armed, and in good order, and protected the coral-fiſhery, which was carried on in theſe ſeas. But, in the year 1740, that monſter of princes, Ally Baſhaw, the reigning king of Tunis, took it by treachery from the Genoeſe; and, contrary to all juſtice, and the right of nations, put ſome of them to the ſword; and the reſt, to the number of 300 or 400, he carried into captivity. Long. 9. 18. E. Greenwich. Lat. 36. 55. N.

TABARIA, or Taberayan, anciently Tiberias, a town of Paleſtine, ſituated on the weſt bank of a lake, called in the ſcriptures the Lake of Genneſareth, and the Sea of Tiberias, and at the foot of a high and ſharp mountain; ſurrounded with walls except towards the water: this town was built by Herod Antipas, to the honour of Tiberius, and was long the capital of Galilee, and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem for ſome time the reſidence of the high-prieſt. This city Herod was obliged to people moſtly with Galileans and ſtrangers, becauſe it being built on a ground which was full of ſepulchres, the going over which pollutes the Jews ſeven whole days, he could hardly get any of that nation to ſettle there, though he endowed it with conſiderable privileges, and gave its inhabitants the greateſt encouragement, viz. land to ſome, houſes to others, to take off their qualms of conſcience about treading on dead bodies. Near it are ſome warm baths. The Chriſtians have a church here, and the Jews a ſeminary: 50 miles NNE. Jeruſalem, and 70 SSW. Damaſcus.

TABAS, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, in the province of Natolia: 34 miles S. Degnizlu.

TABASCO, a province of North America, in the audience of Mexico, bounded on the north by the Gulf of Mexico, on the eaſt by the province of Yucatan, on the ſouth by Chiapa, and on the weſt by Guaxaca, about 100 miles in length, but narrow. The climate is not reckoned healthy, nor is the ſoil remarkable for its fertility. The inhabitants, however, have good farms well-ſtocked with cattle, which ſell to good advantage. They have alſo great plenty of Indian corn and cocoa-nuts, which they ſend to Vera Cruz. Moſt of the country is flat and moiſt, has many marſhes and lakes, well ſtocked with fiſh. It rains nine months out of the twelve, ſo that the air is exceſſively damp; and in February, March, and April, remarkably hot, when infinite ſtorms of gnats and other inſects are produced. The coaſt, from the beginning of September to the end of March, is ſubject to tempeſtuous northerly winds, which render ſailing dangerous during that ſeaſon. The Spaniards brought hither vines, lemon, orange, and fig-trees, which all thrive here very well. Here are large thickets of mangroves and bamboos, and woods of cedar, Braſil-wood, &c. frequented by lions, tigers, wild bears, and deer. They have great number of rabbits, apes, and ſquirrels, with the common fruits of America; and three or four harveſts of maize in a year; beſides rice, barley, and all ſorts of garden-herbs, different ſpecies of European fowls, and others to us unknown.

TABASCO, a river of North America, which runs into the Gulf of Mexico. Long. 75. 52. W. Ferro. Lat. 18. 15. N. on the banks of this river are ſome of the largeſt cabbage and cotton-trees ſuppoſed in the world.

TABASCO, a town of North America, and capital of the province to which it gives name, called alſo by the Spaniards Nueſtra Sennora de la Vittoria, from a great victory obtained here by Cortez, on his firſt arrival. It ſtands on an iſland at the mouth of the river Grijalva which divides itſelf, near the ſea, into two branches, of which the weſtern falls into the river Tabaſco, which riſes in the mountains of Chiapa; and the other continues its courſe till within four leagues of the ſea, where it ſubdivide and ſeparates the iſland above-mentioned from the continent. Near it a plains, which abound with cattle and other animals, particularly the moun tain-cow, ſo called from its reſembling that animal, and feeding on a ſo of moſs found on the trees near great rivers. The iſland of Tabaſco, o which the town of that name is built, is about 12 leagues long, and 2 broad. The town is not very large, but well built, and conſiderably en riched by conſtant reſort of merchants and tradeſmen at Chriſtmas. Long 76. W. Ferro. Lat. 17. 40. N.

TABOR, or Hradiſtie Hory Tabor, i. e. The Camp of Mount Tabor, town of Bohemia, in the circle of Bechin, founded by the Huſſites. Joh Ziſka having in the year 1420, fallen upon and plundered the town of Auſti attacked the citadel, which ſtood on a ſteep mountain near it, at that time calle Klokotſta Hora, which place he took, and there pitched his camp: after whic he cauſed the town of Auſti to be pulled down, and out of its ruins a cam of houſes to be erected, whence aroſe the town of Tabor, the very name o which denotes a camp: and from thence the Huſſites obtained the title o Taborzi, or Taborites. This by reaſon of its ſituation on a mountain and the river Luznice, is naturally ſtrong; being fortified in the ancien manner, with a ditch, walls, and bulwarks. The emperor Sigiſmun raiſed it to a royal borough. After his death, Albrecht of Auſtria at tempted in vain to take it. Rudolph II. made himſelf maſter of it b ſtratagem, in the year 1611; it was alſo taken in 1621, 1648, and 1744 10 miles NNE. Budweis, and 10 NNE. Bechin.

TABOR, a mountain of Paleſtine, mentioned in Scripture. This moun tain is of the figure of a broken cone, 800 or 1000 yards in height. Th ſummit is two-thirds of a league in circumference. Formerly it had a ci tadel, of which now only a few ſtones remain. From hence we diſcove to the ſouth, a ſeries of vallies and mountains, which extend as far as Je ruſalem; while, to the eaſt, the Vally of Jordan, and Lake Tabaria, appe as if under our feet; the lake ſeems as if incloſed in the crater of a volcan TACAMES, or Atacames, a government or juriſdiction of South America, in the government of Terra Firma, ſituated to the north of Guayaquil, and weſt of the Andes. The country of this juriſdiction lay a long time uncultivated; and if not wholly, at leaſt the greateſt part of it unknown; for, after its conqueſt by Sebaſtian de Belalcazar, the peopling of it was neglected, either becauſe the Spaniards were more intent in regulating their conqueſts, than in improving what they had got, or becauſe the country did not ſeem to them ſo proper for a ſettlement as the ſierra or mountainous parts; or, perhaps, they judged it barren and unhealthy. Though the country of Tacames lay thus neglected, for ſome years after the introduction of the Chriſtian religion, and its inhabitants had performed homage to the king of Spain; yet the importance of making ſettlements here, and cultivating the ground for facilitating the commerce betwixt the province of Quito and the kingdom of Terra Firma, was not unknown, as thereby an end would be put to the inconveniences of carrying it on by the way of Guayaquil; which being a great circuit, the trade ſuffered in many particulars. In the year 1741, Don Pedro Vicente Maldonado laid open a direct communication betwixt Quito and the Rio de Las Eſmaraldas: and having verified his proceeding before the audiences, and obtained their approbation, he returned to Spain, where he was confirmed governor of that country, which, in 1747, was formally erected into a government, by the commiſſion then given to the above gentleman, who, by his ſkill and reſolution, had ſo well deſerved it. This government contains 20 towns, five of which are on the ſea coaſt, the others are inland. The inhabitants of the five towns are Spaniards, meſtizos, negroes, and caſts, which ſprung from theſe three ſpecies. Thoſe of the other 15 are in general Indians, having few Spaniards, mulattos, or negroes, amongſt them. With the ſpiritual concerns are inveſted 11 prieſts, who continually reſide in the great towns, and occaſionally viſit the others, where are chapels of eaſe. The temperature of Tacames is like that of Guayaquil, and accordingly produces the ſame kinds of vegetables, grains, and fruits, though ſome of them to much greater perfection; for, lying higher, it is not ſubject to the inundations, proceeding from ſwellings of rivers: and thus the cacao in its plantations and foreſts, having all the moiſture that plant delights in, without being drowned, is much ſuperior to the other in ſize, oilineſs, and delicacy of flavour. It likewiſe produces, in great abundance, vanillas, achote, ſarſaparilla, indigo; alſo a great deal of wax is made here; and the foreſts are ſo thick ſet with trees of a ſurpriſing bulk and loftineſs, as to be impenetrable; and theſe trees, as in the foreſt of Guayaquil, are of an infinite variety; ſome fitter for land work, others for naval uſes, and ſome excellent for both.

TAFILET, a kingdom of Africa, of which no accurate account can be given, Europeans not being ſuffered to paſs through it. Tafilet extends along the eaſt ſide of Mount Atlas: its habitations conſiſt but of about 1500 ſcattered houſes, ſeveral of which have a tower for defence, and each ſtanding amidſt an incloſure of gardens, cultivated grounds, and palm-tree plantations; the whole forming a variegated and pleaſant country, interſected by many rivers and rivulets deſcending from the eaſt of Mount Atlas, and which ſerve to water their lands. Their dates, which are very ſmall, but very excellent, conſtitute the wealth of, and are food for, the people, who even give them to their horſes. By ancient cuſtom, perhaps, for it is contrary to the precepts of the Koran, brandy is made in Tafilet, of dates, which is exceedingly ſtrong, and drank ſo immoderately by the Sherifs, that wine produces no effect on them whatever. Tafilet is the abode of a race of the Sherifs, the moſt of which are poor; they employ themſelves in their grounds and gardens, and, being always divided among themſelves, the ſpirit of pillage inceſſantly arms the ſtrong againſt the weak. The town of Tafilet, after which the kingdom was named, under the Sherifs of the reigning houſe, is not an ancient city; the name comes from the word Fileli, for ſo the inhabitants of theſe countries are called, as are the ſtuffs and carpets which are there manufactured: 140 miles ESE. It was reckon one of the moſt ancient and flouriſhing captainſhips in Braſil; but Parayb and Fernambuco have ſince exceeded it. The iſland is parted from t main land by a very narrow channel. It is fertile and pleaſant enough producing large quantities of Braſil wood, cotton, cocoa-nuts, ſugar, me lons, citrons, &c.; beſides a good deal of timber for fuel and other pur poſes. It is about three leagues in length, and one in breadth, and abo ſeven or eight in circuit. It has a commocious haven on the ſouth ſid with ſome good ſprings and rivulets of freſh water. The entrance into th port is by a channel of between fifteen and ſixteen feet water, commande by a caſtle, built on an eminence, and formerly taken by the Dutch, wh alſo built Fort Orange at the mouth of the channel, which was inacceſſibl by reaſon of the marſhes ſurrounding it: ſo that the veſſels that ſailed dow from the iſland were expoſed to it, and they had, in ſome meaſure, ſtoppe all the avenues from the Portugueſe. This iſland, and the territory o the continent belonging to it, pay 3000 ducats to the governor of the cap tainſhip, and in it are reckoned to be about 22 ſugar-mills. The Frenc had formerly a canton or ſettlement on this coaſt, ſtill called from the Porto dos Franceſe; but the Portugueſe obliged them to evacuate it. Th capital, called Noſtra Segnora de Conceizao, or de Tamaraca, ſtands at th entrance of the river of the latter name; and near it is the ſmall caſtle, wit a redoubt, commanding the avenues; and about 1½ league north of th mouth of the river, is the famous point, denominated Punto Pedro.

TANGIERS, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Fez, ſituated at the weſt entrance of the Straits of Gibraltar. This place, which belonged firſt to the Romans, and afterwards to the Goths, was likewiſe given up to the Mahometans by count Julian. It was taken in 1471, by the Portugueſe, and given to Charles II. king of England, in 1662, as a marriage portion with the princeſs Catharine of Portugal. The Engliſh abandoned it in 1684, after having deſtroyed the Mole and the fortifications, almoſt in ruins ; at preſent it ſtill retains ſome batteries in tolerable condition facing the bay ; but theſe could with difficulty reſiſt any powerful attack. At the bottom of the bay, towards the eaſt, oppoſite the ruins of Old Tangiers, is the mouth of the river, where the Emperor formerly laid up his gallies during winter ; but the ſaid banks and bars, at preſent, render the river uſeleſs The ſituation of the bay of Tangiers is, and always will be favourable to Mooriſh piracy, who, from this, the narroweſt part of the ſtrait, may eaſily ſurpriſe merchant ſhips, that are incapable of defence. Tangiers cannot become a commercial town, having but few productions in its environs : the Spaniards thence obtained ſome fowls and vegetables formerly, and the Engliſh at preſent ſupplies for their garriſon at Gibraltar. The bay of Tangiers is not very ſafe, when the wind is in the weſt, having been encumbered by the ruins of the mole and fortification ; the cables are liable to be torn, and the ſhips to be driven on ſhore. The beſt anchorage for frigates, and the largeſt veſſels, is at the eaſtern point, whence they may eaſily ſet ſail whichever way the wind ſets ; the bay, however, is only dangerous during the winter : 108 miles NNW. TANLAY, a town of France, in the department of the Yonne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Tonnerre : 2 leagues E. Tonnerre, and 6¼ W. Châtillon-ſur-Seine.

TANNA, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, and one of thoſe called New Hebrides, diſcovered by captain Cook, in the year 1774, about 22 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. The inhabitants would not ſuffer captain Cook, or any of his company, to advance far into the iſland. The produce, as far as could be ſeen, is bread-fruit, plantains, cocoa-nuts, a fruit like a nectarine, yams, tarra, a ſort of potatoe, ſugar-cane, wild-figs, a fruit like an orange, which is not eatable, and ſome other fruits and nuts. Captain Cook doubts not but nutmegs likewiſe grow in this iſland. The bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, and plantains, are neither ſo plentiful nor ſo good as at Otaheite ; on the other hand, ſugar-canes and yams are not only in greater plenty, but of ſuperior quality, and much larger. One of the latter weighed fifty-ſix pounds, every ounce of which was good ; hogs did not ſeem to be ſcarce ; but they ſaw not many fowls. Theſe are the only domeſtic animals they have. Land-birds are not more numerous than at Otaheite, and the other iſlands; but they ſaw ſome ſmall birds, with a very beautiful plumage, which they had never ſeen before. There is a great variety of trees and plants. The people are of the middle ſize, rather ſlender than otherwiſe; many are little, but few tall or ſtout; the moſt of them have good features and agreeable countenances, are, like all the tropical race, active and nimble, and ſeem to excel in the uſe of arms, but not to be fond of labour. Both ſexes are of a very dark colour, but not black; nor have they the leaſt characteriſtic of the negro about them. They make themſelves blacker than they really are, by painting their faces with a pigment of the colour of black lead. They alſo uſe another ſort, which is red; and a third ſort, brown, or a colour between red and black. All theſe, but eſpecially the firſt, they lay on with a liberal hand, not only on the face, but on the neck, ſhoulders, and breaſt. The men wear nothing but a belt, and the wrapping leaf, as at Mallicollo. The women have a kind of petticoat, made of the filaments of the plantain-tree, flags, or ſome ſuch thing, which reaches below the knee. Both ſexes wear ornaments, ſuch as bracelets, ear-rings, necklaces, and amulets. The bracelets are chiefly worn by the men; ſome made of ſea-ſhells, and others of thoſe of the cocoa-nuts. The men alſo wear amulets; and thoſe of moſt value being made of a greeniſh ſtone, the green ſtone of New Zealand is valued by them for this purpoſe. Necklaces are chiefly uſed by the women, and made moſtly of ſhells; ear-rings are common to both ſexes, and thoſe valued moſt are made of tortoiſe-ſhell. Theſe people, beſides the cultivation of the ground, have few other arts worth mentioning. They know how to make a coarſe kind of matting, and a coarſe cloth of the bark of a tree, which is chiefly uſed for belts. The workmanſhip of their canoes is very rude; and their arms, with which they take the moſt pains in point of neatneſs, come far ſhort of ſome others. Their weapons are clubs, ſpears, or darts, bows and arrows, and ſtones. The clubs are of three or four kinds, and from three to five feet long. Captain Cook knew no more of their cookery, than that it conſiſts of roaſting and baking; for they have no veſſels in which water can be boiled. Nor did he know that they had any other liquor but water, and the juice of the cocoa-nut. They were utter ſtrangers to their religion, and but little acquainted with their government. They ſeem to have chiefs among them, at leaſt ſome were pointed out to him by that title; but they appeared to have very little authority over the reſt of the people. The iſland contains a very conſiderable volcano, and ſome hot ſprings were diſcovered, which raiſed the thermometer from 80 to 170, and in one place to 202. Captain Cook named the harbour where he lay, Port Reſolution, from the name of the ſhip, which was the firſt that had ever entered it: which is ſituated in Long. 169. 44. E. TARENTO, a city of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Otranto, the ſee of an archbiſhop, ſituated on a ſmall peninſula, which projects into a bay of the Mediterranean to which it gives name. Tarentum was anciently the capital of a celebrated republic, at one time powerful enough to offend the Romans, by plundering their ſhips, and killing the commander, and inſulting the ambaſſadors who were ſent to complain of the violence: the Tarentines called in Pyrrhus to their aſſiſtance; and afterwards the Carthaginians. In the ſecond Carthaginian war, the city was taken by Fabius. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 18,000. It had once an excellent harbour, but it is now ſo ſhallow as only to admit fiſhing boats. The fort for its defence is of ſome ſtrength. The bay of Tarento is remarkable for ſprings of freſh water at the bottom, which it is ſaid may in a calm be taken up from the ſurface: 60 miles WNW. Otranto, and 147 E. Naples. Long. 35. E. TARRAGONA, a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia, ſituated on a riſing ground on the coaſt of the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the river Francoli; and one of the moſt ancient cities of Spain, ſaid to have been founded by the Phenicians. Under the Romans it was the capital of a province called Tarraconenſis, end was fortified by Scipio as a defence againſt the Carthaginians. Tarragona has but few remains of its ancient grandeur; inſcriptions almoſt deſtroyed by time, ſome coins, and a few ruins give but an imperfect idea of what it formerly was. It is now depopulated, and of little importance. The harbour is dangerous, and not much frequented; there are a few baſtions in bad repair, which were formerly built for its defence. Tarragona is, however, the ſee of an archbiſhop, the metropolis of Catalonia, and diſputes with Toledo the primacy of Spain. The eſtabliſhment of the ſee is ſaid to have been in the firſt ages of the church: the ſucceſſion of archbiſhops was interrupted by the Moors, and remained ſuſpended until the 11th century. The cathedral is worthy of attention for its vaſt dimenſions, the elegance of its Gothic architecture, and a magnificent chapel built with rich marble and jaſper, in honour of St. Thecla, tutelar ſaint of the church: 98 miles ESE. TARTARY. This word in its moſt extenſive ſenſe, contains all that vaſt country of Aſia, which lies between the Frozen Sea, to the north, and Perſia, Hindooſtan, and China to the ſouth, and includes a great variety of nations, to which is applied the general name of Tartars or Tatars, with a particular one often applied from their local ſituation. Mr. Strahlenburg, a Swediſh officer, who reſided ſome years in Siberia, places them in ſi claſſes: the firſt, containing ſeven different nations, all in the dominions of Ruſſia, viz. the Mordvines, who dwell in the government of Nizegorod; the Tſcheremiſſes, or Czeremiſſes, in the government of Kaſan; the Permians, in the government of Perm; the Votiaks, in the government of Viatka; the Vogouls, who dwell on both ſides of the mountains, which formed a ſeparation between Ruſſia and Siberia; the Oſtiacks, who dwell on the coaſts of the river Oby; and the Barabintzi, who inhabit the country between Tara and Tomſk. The ſecond claſs of people, called Tartars, includes the Budziacks, which dwell on the coaſts of the Black Sea; the Crim Tartars, who inhabit the province of Taurida; the Kuban Tartars, on the borders of the Kuban River; and the Tartars of Dagheſtan. The Nogois, or Tartars of Aſtrachan, of Kazan, and Upha. The Baſkirs and the Tartars about the towns of Tiumen, Tara, Tobolſk, and Tomſk. The Uſbek Tartars, the Turcomans, the Kurquis, the Karakalpas, the Sayantzi, who dwell near the head of the Eniſei; the Kirgis, who occupy the mountains ſouth of Lake Biakal; the Burats; the Arintzi, who alſo inhabit near the ſame mountain, and the Yaktzi, more to the north, on the ſides of the Lena. The third claſs includes the Samoiedes, on the coaſt of the Frozen Sea, from Archangel to the Lena. The fourth claſs includes the Calmucks and Monguls, who were formerly but one people. The fifth claſs includes the Mantcheux and the Tunguſes. The ſixth claſs contains the ſavage nations on the north-eaſt coaſt of Aſia, as the Tſchutki, &c. with the inhabitants of Kamtchatka, and the Kurile Iſlands. Of theſe, the firſt, third, and ſixth claſs are ſubject to Ruſſia, except that a ſmall part of the ſecond is independent. The fourth is partly independent and partly ſubject to China. The fifth claſs is wholly ſubject to China. All the Tartars pretend to be deſcended from Turk, the eldeſt ſon of Japheth. Although from the time that Jenghis Khan ſubdued all Tartary, and a great part of Aſia, and made irruptions into Europe, they have been known by the name of Tartars, to which that of Monguls or Moguls, of whom he was formerly the prince, appeared inferior; nevertheleſs, the Tartars preſerve among themſelves the name of Turks. Thoſe who are Mahometans bordering on Ruſſia, but independent of that crown, take every opportunity of robbing their neighbours: the Calmucks and Monguls are very different in their behaviour, living quietly on the produce of their ſoil, without doing injury to others. The Tartars of Aſiatic Ruſſia, are likewiſe repreſented as a quiet, inoffenſive people, living chiefly by the chaſe and fiſhing. Tartary may be divided into three parts, viz. Chineſe Tartary, Independent Tartary, and Ruſſian Tartary. Chineſe Tartary is bounded on the north by Siberia, on the eaſt by the Gulf of Kamtchatka and the Eaſtern Sea, on the ſouth by China, and on the weſt by the country of the Kalmuks, who are eſtabliſhed between the Caſpian Sea and Caſhgar. The different tribes which at preſent inhabit it, were formerly comprehended under the general name of Mongul or Mogul Tartars, a warlike and formidable nation, who on the one hand, conquered Hindooſton, under the famous Jenghis Khan, and on the other, ſubdued China. It was in the 13th century that the Monguls took poſſeſſion of the latter empire; but after having reigned there for 100 years, they were expelled by the Chineſe, in the year 1368. The fugitives took different routs; ſome went towards the Eaſtern Sea, and eſtabliſhed themſelves between China and the river Saghalien; the re returned weſtward to their former country, where, intermixing with the Moguls that remained, they ſoon reſumed their ancient manner of living; thoſe who ſettled towards the eaſt, having found the country almoſt a deſert, and without inhabitants, retained the ſame cuſtoms which they had brought from China: hence theſe two Mogul nations differ at preſent in language, government, religion, and cuſtoms. Thoſe of the eaſt retain their ancient name of Mongul, or Mogul Tartars; the reſt are known by the name of Mantchew or Eaſtern Tartars. Chineſe Tartary is therefore divided into two parts, the Eaſtern and Weſtern. Eaſtern Chineſe Tartary extends, north and ſouth, from the 41ſt to the 55th degree of north latitude; and eaſt and weſt, from about the 137th degree of longitude, as far as the Eaſtern Sea. It is bounded on the north by Siberia, on the ſouth by the Gulf of Leao-tong and Corea, on the eaſt by the Eaſte Eaſtern Sea, and on the weſt by the country of the Monguls. The Tartars who retired hither, after their expulſion from China, in the year 1368, immediately began to build cities, towns, and villages, and to cultivate the earth, after the manner of the Chineſe, among whom they had lived: hence the greater part of them have remained fixed, and are much more civiliſed than the reſt of the Mongul nation. They were at firſt governed by particular khans, each independent of the other; but ſince that of Ningouta (who was the moſt powerful among them) took poſſeſſion of China, about the middle of the laſt century: the emperor, who is ſtill one of his deſcendants, has reduced under his dominion all the other khans of this part of Tartary: this prince governs it immediately by himſelf, and ſends thither governors and officers, as into all the other provinces of the empire. The country of the Mantchew Tartars is divided into three grand departments: Chen-yang, Kirin and Tcitcicar. Weſtern Chineſe Tartary, or Mongul Tartary, is bounded on the north by Siberia, on the eaſt by Eaſtern Chineſe Tartary, on the ſouth by the great wall and Leao-tung, and on the weſt by Independent Tartary. It was partly from the boſom of theſe dry deſerts, that thoſe celebrated conquerors iſſued, who made all Aſia tremble. The Mongul nation is ſubdivided into a multitude of others, who all ſpeak the ſame language, generally called the Mongul language; they have, it is true, ſeveral different dialects, which however does not prevent them from underſtanding one another. Theſe Tartars have neither towns, villages, nor houſes; they form themſelves only into wandering hords, and live under plain tents, which they tranſport from one place to another, according as the temperature of the different ſeaſons, or the wants of their flocks require: they paſs the ſummer on the banks of their rivers, and the winter at the bottom of ſome mountain or little hill, which ſhelters them from the ſharp and cutting north-wind. Each of theſe tribes has its reſpective limits, and it would be an act of hoſtility towards their neighbours to go beyond them; but they are at full liberty to encamp wherever they chooſe within the circumference aſſigned them. They are naturally clowniſh, and dirty in their dreſs, as well as in their tents, where they live amidſt the dung of their flocks, which when dried, they burn on their hearths inſtead of wood; enemies to labour, they chooſe rather to be ſatisfied with the food which their flocks ſupply them, than take the trouble of cultivating the earth: it even appears that they neglect agriculture from pride. When the miſſionaries aſked them why they did not at leaſt cultivate ſome gardens, they replied, that the graſs was for beaſts, and beaſts for man. During the ſummer they live only on milk, which they get from their flocks, uſing without diſtinction that of the cow, mare, ewe, goat, and camel. Their ordinary drink is warm water, in which a little coarſe tea has been infuſed: with this drink they mix cream, milk, or butter, according to their circumſtances. They have alſo a method of making a kind of ſpirituous liquor of ſour milk, eſpecially of that of the mare, which they diſtil after having allowed it to ferment. Tartars of better condition, before they diſtil this ſour milk, mix it with ſome of the fleſh of their ſheep, which has been alſo left to ferment. This liquor is ſtrong and nouriſhing: their moſt voluptuous orgies conſiſt in getting drunk with it. The Moguls are free, open and ſincere. They pride themſelves chiefly on their dexterity in handling the bow and arrow, mounting on horſeback, and hunting wild beaſts. Polygamy is permitted among them; but they generally have only one wife. They burn the bodies of their dead, and tranſport the aſhes to eminences where they inter them, and cover the grave with a heap of ſtones, over which they plant a great number of ſmall ſtandards. They are unacquainted with the uſe of money, and trade only by barter. Although the Moguls might appropriate to themſelves the ſpoils of a great number of animals, the ſkins which they uſe for clothing are generally thoſe of their ſheep. They wear the wool inmoſt, and the ſkin on the out-ſide. They are very well acquainted with the art of preparing and whitening theſe ſkins. Some of the better ſort among them ſometimes uſe the ſkins of ſtags, dogs, or wild goats, of which they make dreſſes for ſpring; but whatever care theſe people take to prepare theſe ſkins, they always exhale a ſtrong and diſagreeable ſmell, on which account they are called by the Chineſe, Tſaofatſe—Stinking Tartars. Their tents almoſt always ſmell of their ſheep, and can ſcarcely be endured even by thoſe who have been long accuſtomed to them. The religion of the Mogul Tartars is confined to the worſhip of Fo. They have the moſt ſuperſtitious veneration for their lamas. All the Moguls are governed by kans, or particular princes, independent one of the other, but all ſubjected to the authority of the emperor of China, whom they conſider as the grand kan of the Tartars. When the Mantchews ſubdued China, they conferred on the moſt powerful of the Mogul princes the title of vang, peilé, peiré and cong, which anſwer to our titles of king, duke, count, and marquis; each of them had a revenue aſſigned him, but far inferior to the appointments of the Mantchew lords at Peking: the emperor ſettled the limits of their reſpective territories, and appointed them laws, according to which they are at preſent governed: theſe tributary kans have not the power of condemning their ſubjects to death, nor of depriving them of their poſſeſſions: theſe two caſes of death and confiſcation are reſerved for the ſupreme tribunal eſtabliſhed at Peking for the affairs of the Moguls, to which every individual may appeal from the ſentence of his prince, who is obliged to appear in perſon whenever he is cited. All the Mogul nation under the Chineſe government, may be divided into four principal tribes, which are the Moguls, properly ſo called, the Kalkas, Ortous, and the Tartars of Kokonor. According to the map of Chineſe Tartary, the country of the Moguls extends more than 300 leagues from eaſt to weſt, and 200 from north to ſouth: it is encloſed between the country of the Ortous, the great wall, Eaſtern Tartary, and the country of the Kalkas; theſe people compoſe 49 ki, or ſtandards; every ſtandard comprehends an indeterminate number of companies, each of which conſiſts of 150 heads of families; and, as theſe Tartar families are generally numerous, each company may be reckoned to contain 1000 individuals: beſides theſe 49 ſtandards, there are five others, under the immediate government of the emperor of China, and commanded by officers whom he ſends thither. The Kalkas (who formerly compoſed a numerous tribe, conſiſting of more than 600,000 families) inhabit to the north of the Mogul Tartars, whom we have juſt mentioned. Their country, which ſtretches as far as the kingdom of the Eluths, is near 300 leagues in extent, from eaſt to weſt. In this region was formerly ſituated, towards the 45th degree of north latitude, the city of Karakun, the ſeat of the empire of Jenghiz-khan, and that of his ſucceſſors. The Kalkas live under tents, on the banks of the rivers which water their country; that of Kalka-pira (though one of the ſmalleſt, and at preſent one of the leaſt frequented) has given its name to the whole nation. The moſt conſiderable of theſe rivers are the Kenlon, Toula, Touy, and the Selengué. The vaſt deſert, which the Chineſe call Chamo, and the Tartars Cobi, occupies almoſt all the ſouthern part of the country of the Kalkas. A war which the king of the Eluths carried on in the year 1688, againſt the Kalkas, almoſt deſtroyed the whole nation. To avoid the purſuit of a ſuperior enemy, they begged the aſſiſtance of the Chineſe arms, and offered to ſubmit to the empire. Kang-hi undertook their defence, conquered the king of the Eluths, and kept the Kalka Tartars under his dominion, after having conferred upon their princes different titles of honour. Theſe people have among them one of thoſe grand lamas called hou-touctou, whom they conſider as ſo many living Fos: he is lodged under a large tent, and ſhows himſelf to the public, lying on a kind of altar, where he receives the adoration of all the Tartars. The hou-touctou is, however, but a lama of the ſecond order; for the lama who reſides in Thibet is acknowledged his ſuperior; the latter is generally conſidered as the high-prieſt, and ſupreme chief of the Tartar religion. The country of the Ortous (who inhabit to the north of the great wall, and to the Moguls, properly ſo called) is 110 leagues in extent, from eaſt to weſt, and 70 from ſouth to north. Theſe people are divided into ſix ſtandards, which comprehend 166 companies, each compoſed of 150 heads of families. The Ortous are of a free diſpoſition, extremely lively, and never ſubject to melancholy; they may be juſtly called the French of Tartary. The Tartars of Kokonor (who are Eluths or Kalmucks by nation, and who are at preſent ſubjects of the emperor) occupy an extenſive country to the weſt of China and the province of Chen-ſi, from whence they are ſeparated by lofty mountains. They take their name from a lake in this country, called in their language Kokonol or Kokonor, and which is one of the largeſt of Tartary. They are ſubject to eight princes, who are each independent of the other, and who are all of the race of the kan of the Eluth Tartars. Theſe people derive their principal riches from the gold which is found mixed with the ſand of their rivers, and above all, with that of Altangkol, or the Golden River. The gold-duſt which it furniſhes, is the principal revenue of the princes of Kokonor, who employ their vaſſals during ſummer in collecting it. One of the principal articles of the trade of Kokonor, is a kind of napped woollen ſtuff, called pou-lou: it is manufactured by theſe Tartars, who have the art of dying it different colours. The Chineſe empire has been lately extended in Tartary, by the celebrated conqueſt of the kingdom of the Eluths, made in the year 1759, by the arms of the emperor Kien-long. The whole nation of the Eluths, who are known in Europe and Ruſſia, by the name of Kalmucks, may be divided into three branches, which have all proceeded from the ſame ſtem. The moſt weſterly (who at preſent are the moſt powerful and numerous) occupy the country contained between the Caſpian Sea, Ruſſia, Samarcand, and Kaſhgar. The ſecond diviſion of the Eluths inhabit to the eaſt. The country is bounded on the north by Ruſſia, and on the ſouth by the territories of the Uſbeck Tartars. Theſe are the people whom Kien-long has lately obliged to ſubmit to the Chineſe government. The third branch of the Eluths inhabit to the weſt of China, ſpoken of under the name of the Tartars of Kokonor, who, for a long time, have been ſubjects of the empire. Independent Tartary includes all the country between Chineſe Tartary and the Caſpian Sea, and contains Turkeſtan, Great and Little Bukharia, Turcomania, Charaſm, Thibet, and ſome other countries and provinces, inhabited by the Uſbecks and Calmucks. Ruſſian Tartary includes the remainder.

TAUNTON, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet. This town in point of ſize, buildings, and reſpectability of inhabitants, may vie with many cities. Its extent from eaſt to weſt is nearly a mile, and it conſiſts of four principal ſtreets, which are wide, and very well built, and contains 2 pariſh churches. There is a noble ſpacious market-place, in which is a handſome commodious market-houſe, with a town-hall over it, the building whereof was completed in the year 1773. The markets are large, and kept on Wedneſday and Saturday. The woollen manufacture has flouriſhed in this town almoſt ever ſince its firſt introduction into England by the emigrants from Flanders; the firſt manufacture being eſtabliſhed here about the year 1336. Of late years it has decayed, and its ſucceſs has been, in a great meaſure, tranſlated to the neighbouring town of Wellington. A ſilk manufacture was introduced here in 1780. Taunton is an ancient borough by preſcription, and has returned members to parliament from the year 1294. It was incorporated by king Charles I. and again by king Charles II. and put under the government of a mayor. The corporation conſiſts of a mayor, recorder, aldermen, &c. The corporation have neither lands, houſes, nor joint ſtock, the laſt charter precluding them from any ſuch poſſeſſions. The caſtle ſtands on the weſt ſide of the town, and is part of a ſtately edifice, erected by William Gifford, biſhop of Wincheſter, and lord of the town, in the time of Henry I. In the year 1642, this caſtle fell into the hands of the parliament army, who placed a garriſon therein, and intended to have made it their chief hold in all this country; it was, however, quickly reſcued from them by the royaliſts, under the marquis of Hertford, and as quickly retaken by colonel Blake, for the parliament, who, in 1645, defended it againſt an army of 10,000 men, that was brought againſt it by lord Goring. After the reſtoration, king Charles II. ordered it to be diſmantled, in which ruinous ſtate it has continued to this day. It ſtood nearly upon the ſite of a fortreſs, erected about the year 700, by Ina, king of the Weſt Saxons, for the purpoſe of better ſecuring the conqueſts which he had made in this part of Britain, and awing thoſe diſaffected nobles who fixed a jealous eye on his dominions. On the 18th of June, 1685, the duke of Monmouth arrived at Taunton, which he made his head quarters; and, having won many perſons of conſiderable eſteem to his cauſe, he procured himſelf to be proclaimed king, on the Cornhill, the 21ſt following, by the title of James II. and then publiſhed three ſeveral proclamations, againſt the king, the parliament, and the duke of Albemarle. After his defeat, the aſſizes were held here by judge Jefferies, for the trial of the rebels, which have been emphatically called the bloody aſſize: 31 miles NE. Exeter, and 140 W. London.

TAURICHESKAIA (The Province of Tauris), a province of Ruſſia, being part of the government of Ekaterinoſlav; bounded on the north by the rivers Dnieper and the Konſkija, on the weſt and ſouth by the Black Sea, and on the eaſt by the Sea of Azoph, including what was before called Crimea, anciently Cherſoneſus Taurica. The inland country was anciently poſſeſſed by the Scythians, who extended themſelves northwards beyond Perekop, weſtward to the Dnieper, and eaſtward as far as the river Don. The weſtern and ſouthern coaſts of the Crimea were inhabited by ſome Greek colonies, of which the town of Cherſoneſus was the moſt powerful. The eaſt ſide of the Crimea, as the Don and the oppoſite country, or the tract from the Don along the ſea of Azoph to the Black Sea, and mount Caucaſus, was under the kings of the Boſphori-Greeks, who were ſo called from the Strait of Boſphorous. The Scythians proving troubleſome neighbours to the Greeks, they ſolicited the aſſiſtance of Mithridates, king of Pontus, who at laſt drove the Scythians out of the peninſula, forming the kingdom of Boſphorus, which comprehended the whole peninſula, and the country facing it eaſtward to mount Caucaſus. In the time of the emperor Diocleſian, the Sarmatæ were in ſole poſſeſſion of this kingdom, excepting that the Goths had ſeated themſelves on the weſt ſide of the peninſula, and the whole tract of land lying northward from it along the Don. The peninſula afterwards came under the dominion of the emperors of the eaſt, though partly ſhared by the Hunns, who were ſucceeded by the Chazars or Cozars, as theſe were by the Polawzers. About the end of the 12th century, the Genoeſe having made themſelves maſters of the Black Sea, and all its harbours, ſettled alſo in the Crimea. In the 13th century the Tartars diſpoſſeſſed the Polawzers of their country, particularly of the Crim, but the Genoeſe ports and caſtles baffled their undiſciplined fury, and held out till the year 1741, when the Turks reduced the whole Crimea, and appointed a Kan over it. In the year 1698, the Ruſſians made an attempt on the Crimea, but gained only Perekop; in 1736, they penetrated a ſecond time into the Crimea, under the conduct of count Munich, marched over the line which the Perekop Tartars had thrown up acroſs the iſthmus, with a great number of towers, garriſoned by 100,000 men for its defence, took Perekop, and opened a way into the Crimea. In the years 1737, 1738, and 1739, the Ruſſians renewed their enterprizes with ſuch ſucceſs that half of the Crimea was ravaged by them, and likewiſe by the Tartars, whilſt great numbers of the inhabitants periſhed by famine, and others abandoned the country. The Crimea was governed by its own Kan, or prince, who ſtyled himſelf indeed, the ſovereign Kan of Leſſer Tartary, &c. though in reality a vaſſal of the Ottoman Porte, and, on ſummons was obliged to take the field, with a conſiderable body as auxiliaries. In the year 1774, the khan was declared independent, but in the year 1783, abdicated his government, and ceded the whole to Ruſſia.

TAURIS, or Tabris, a city of Perſia, in the province of Adirbeitzan, ſituated in a plain at the foot of a mountain: it is of an irregular figure, and has neither walls nor fortifications. Through it paſſes a little river called Spingtcha, which ſometimes ſwelling, carries away the houſes on its banks. Another river, called the Agi, paſſes by the north ſide of the city; and is ſalt ſix months in the year, from the torrents which fall into it after they have paſſed over lands covered with ſalt. The city is divided into nine quarters or wards. Here are many magnificent ſtructures; the bazars make as fine an appearance as in any part of Aſia, from their largeneſs and great extent; from the beautiful domes with which they are covered; from the multitudes of people, and the vaſt quantity of merchandize with which they are filled. The fineſt of theſe, in which the jewels and moſt valuable merchandize are ſold, is an octagon, and is called the Royal Market. As to the other public buildings they are equally noble. There are ſaid to be 300 caravanſerais, which are ſo ſpacious, that 300 perſons may lodge in each; and the moſques and baths are anſwerable to the grandeur of the other buildings. There are three hoſpitals in the city, in which nobody is lodged; but proviſions are given twice a day to all who come. The largeſt ſquare at Tauris is much more ſpacious than that of Iſpahan. The Turks when they were in the poſſeſſion of this city, have frequently drawn up within this ſquare 30,000 men in order of battle. The number of inhabitants in Tauris, in the opinion of ſir John Chardin, amounts to at leaſt 550,000 people; beſides a multitude of ſtrangers, who are conſtantly there from all parts of Aſia. The fineſt Perſian turbans are made in this city, and the above gentleman was aſſured by the principal merchants, that the inhabitants annually manufacture 6000 bales of ſilk. The commerce of this city extends not only over all Perſia, but into Turkey, Ruſſia, Tartary, the Indies, and to the Black Sea. The air is cold and dry, but healthy. From its ſituation it is much expoſed to the north, and the tops of the ſurrounding mountains are covered with ſnow nine months in the year; from whence the wind almoſt conſtantly blows in the evenings and the mornings. The city abounds with all the neceſſaries and luxuries of life; and theſe are extremely cheap. The Caſpian Sea, which is not above forty leagues diſtant, ſupplies it with fiſh, which are alſo found in the river Agi, already mentioned. In the ſummer they have abundance of deer and wild-fowl: in the mountains are eagles. All kinds of fruits are in the greateſt plenty, and there are ſaid to be about ſixty ſorts of grapes. In the neighbourhood of the city are large quarries of white marble, one kind of which is tranſparent; and at a ſmall diſtance are two mines, the one of gold, and the other of ſalt: the gold mine has, however, been long neglected; the quantity found of that valuable metal being ſo ſmall, as to be ſcarcely worth the labour of procuring it: 60 leagues SSE. Erivan, and 134 NNW. Iſpahan.

TCHE-KIANG, a province of China, bounded on the north and north-weſt by the province of Kiang-nan, on the eaſt by the ſea, on the ſouth by Fokien, and on the ſouth-weſt by Kiang-ſi ; about 200 miles in length from north to ſouth, and from 120 to 180 broad. This province, which was formerly the reſidence of ſome of the emperors, is one of the moſt conſiderable in the empire, on account of its maritime ſituation, extent, riches, and the number of its inhabitants. The air is pure and healthful ; the plains are watered by a number of rivers and canals, kept in good order ; and the ſprings and lakes, with which it abounds, contribute greatly to its fertility. The natives are mild and lively, and very polite to ſtrangers ; but they are ſaid to be extremely ſuperſtitious. A prodigious quantity of ſilk-worms are bred in this province, whole plains may be ſeen covered with dwarf mulberry-trees, which are purpoſely checked in their growth ; they are planted and pruned almoſt in the ſame manner as vines. Long experience has taught the Chineſe, that the leaves of the ſmalleſt trees procure the beſt ſilks. The principal branch, therefore, of the trade of this province, conſiſts in ſilk ſtuffs ; thoſe in which gold and ſilver are intermixed are the moſt beautiful, and moſt eſteemed in the empire. With regard to their common pieces, an immenſe quantity is ſent to every part of China, to Japan, the Philippines, and to Europe ; and, notwithſtanding this exportation, ſo much is left, that a complete ſuit of ſilk may be bought here as cheap as one of the coarſeſt woollen-cloth in France. Excellent hams are brought from this province, and thoſe ſmall gold fiſh with which ponds are commonly ſtocked. The tallow-tree grows here, and a ſpecies of muſhrooms, which are tranſported to every province of the empire. In Tche-kiang there are reckoned to be eleven cities of the firſt claſs, ſeventy-two of the third, and eighteen fortreſſes, which in Europe would be accounted large cities.

This city is ſituated on an angle made by two rivers; the country is watered by a great number of brooks, which make the vallies exceedingly fruitful; it is very full of mountains, which yield plenty of quickſilver, lapis lazuli, and green-ſtones for painting. There are alſo mines of ſilver and gold. The people who inhabit the mountains are not ſo polite as the reſt of the Chineſe; on the contrary, their rude and ſavage manners make them to be looked upon as barbarians. The diſtrict of this city contains one of the ſecond order, and nine of the third: 765 miles SSW. Peking. Long. 127. 26. E. Ferro. Lat. 28. 23. N.

TCHONG-KING, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Se-tchuen. This is one of the moſt commercial cities of the province. It is in a great meaſure indebted for its trade, to its ſituation at the confluence of two remarkable rivers: one of which, called Kin-cha-kiang, or Golden-ſand, receives in its courſe all the ſtreams from the mountains, which riſe on the neighbouring confines of Tartary. The other is Ta-kiang, which has its ſource beyond the boundaries of China, and is commonly called Yang-tſe-kiang. Tchong-king is built upon a mountain, and riſes in the form of an amphitheatre: the air round it is wholeſome and temperate. This city is celebrated for its fiſh, and a particular kind of trunks, made with canes, interwoven in the manner of baſket-work. TEHAMA, a ſandy belt which ſurrounds the peninſula of Arabia, beginning at Suez, and extending to the mouth of the Euphrates. Its breadth varies ; it is, however, for the moſt part, about two days' journey from the ſea ſhore to the riſe of the hills : at leaſt this is the breadth of the plain adjacent to the Red Sea. It bears every mark of having been anciently a part of the bed of the ſea. Its bottom ſoil is a greyiſh clay, with a large proportion in ſand, and having marine exuviæ, interſperſed to a great diſtance from the ſea-ſhore. It contains large ſtrata of ſalt, which, in ſome places, even riſe up into hills. Its regular inclination towards the ſea indicates that it has emerged gradually. The ſmall eminences upon the confines of this plain are compoſed of calcareous ſtones, having a blackiſh appearance, and ſeeming as if they were burned by the ſun. The adjoining hills contain ſchiſtus and baſaltes ; in this differing greatly from the ſtrata of the hills on the oppoſite coaſt of Egypt, and from thoſe of Arabia Petræa, which are chiefly made up of granite. The ſea, no doubt, ſtill continues to recede, and the Tehama is on that ſide gradually extending its limits. The banks of coral are ſtill increaſing, and coming nearer to the ſhore, ſo as to render the navigation of the gulf every day more and more dangerous. Hiſtory alſo records proofs of this gradual receſſion of the waters ; and mentions as ſeaports, ſeveral places which are at preſent inland, without noticing the preſent maritime towns, which muſt undoubtedly be of later origin than the formation of the land on which they ſtand. Theſe newly formed lands are ungrateful and barren. Nor can any better be ſanguinely hoped for the future ; ſince the territory of the Tehama has remained for ſo many ages unchanged in its nature. From the ſingular local ſituation of Arabia, the inequalities in the nature of its lands, may without farther information be inferred. Theſe inequalities are indeed very remarkable : on one ſide are frightful deſerts, and on the other fertile and delightful vales. The ſandy belt which encircles this peninſula is almoſt entirely barren, and preſents one unvaried picture of deſolation.

TEMPLIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, Ucker Mark of Brandenburg, ſituated between the Bodenſee and Dol ſee. In the year 1735, this place was totally conſumed by fire, but been rebuilt to very great advantage. Its ſtreets being now broad ſtraight, and its houſes uniform, excluſive of a ſpacious market-plac it, which forms a regular quadrangle, inſomuch that at preſent it is on the moſt beautiful towns in all the Mark. It carries on a very large t in timber, which is greatly promoted by means of a canal, newly made: 15 miles SW. Prenzlow, and 34 N. Berlin.

TEMPSCHE, or Tamiſe, a town of Flanders, on the Scheldt: 10 miles SW. Antwerp.

TEMSENA, a province of Africa, in the empire of Morocco, ſituated on the coaſt of the Atlantic, to the ſouth of Sallee. This province is rich and fertile, and abounds in excellent proviſions of various kinds. Its name ſeems intended to ſignify its ſalubrity, and the puriry of the climate. Temſena appears to be derived from the two Arabic words Tamam Sana, only a year; as if they ſhould ſay, that to reſide here only a year would be ſufficient to inſure the ſickly the return of their health, and ſuch, in fact, is the firm belief of the natives Corn is very plentiful in this province; it is of a very excellent kind, and the ears frequently bear ſeventy grains or more. In the foreſts is found a kind of cedar, called hazar, of a reſinous ſmell: it is a hard and incorruptible wood, and the Moors employ it in building their houſes.

TEMUS, a river of the iſland of Sardinia, which runs into the ſea, 4 miles NE. Caſtello Aragoneſe.

TENCOA, a town of North America, in Mexico, and province of Honduras.

TENDA, a county and province of Piedmont, bounded on the north by the province of Coni, on the eaſt by the marquiſate of Ceva, and the territories of the Genoeſe, on the ſouth by Nice, and on the weſt by the county of Boglio. This county was firſt veſted in the family of Laſcaris, deſcendants from the emperors of Conſtantinople, in the 13th century. In the 16th century it came to the duke of Savoy. The principal town is Tenda. The ſoil is not fertile, being on all ſides ſurrounded by the Alps: it yields however good paſturage and timber: the rivers alſo furniſh the inhabitants with excellent trout.

TENDA, a town of Piedmont, and capital of a county to which it gives name, ſituated on the Roia, where it receives the Brogna. It has only one pariſh church, which is a beautiful ſtructure: a caſtle walled round, and flanked with towers, ſituated on a rock, commands the environs of the town. The Piedmonteſe were defeated near this town by the French, in the beginning of May, 1794: 15 miles N. Vintimiglia, and 12 NE. Nice.

TENDEBAR, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Kaen.

TENEDOS, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, near the coaſt of Aſia, about 7 leagues in circumference, with a town of the ſame name, on the north coaſt, which contains about 300 Turkiſh families, and 200 Greeks. Long. 43. 45. E Ferro. Lat. 39. 53. N.

TENEGENT, a town of Africa, in the country of Sugulmeſſa: 5 leagues S. Sugulmeſſa.

TENEN, or Knin, a town of Venetian Dalmatia, ſituated on the borders of Boſnia, and the ſee of a biſhop. In the 13th and 14th centuties it was the capital of a county. In the year 1522, it was taken by the Turks, and in the year 1649, recovered by the Venetians: a few years after it was again taken by the Turks, who loſt it to the Venetians, in the year 1688: 48 miles S. Bihacs.

TENERIA, a town of the iſland of Cuba: 55 miles NW. Villa del Principe.

TENERIFFE, one of the Canary Iſlands, the ſecond in dignity, but the firſt probably in point of extent, wealth, and fertility. Formerly it was called Nivaria, and is ſuppoſed to be the iſland of that name mentioned by Pliny the Elder; but this opinion is diſputed. Sir Edward Storey ſays, that it derived the appellation Nivaria from the circle or collar of ſnow that ſurrounds the peak of Tenda, now called The Peak of Teneriffe: this laſt name, he alleges, was impoſed by the inhabitants of Palma Iſland; for tener in their language ſignifies ſnow, and effe a mountain. The form is triangular, extending itſelf into three capes, the neareſt being about 80 leagues or more from the coaſt of Africa. What renders this iſland ſo famous in hiſtory, is the celebrated peak, of whoſe height ſo many marvellous ſtories have been related, and which Scaliger is not aſhamed to call 60 miles; Panicius, who lived in the iſland, 70; Thevet, 54; Nicolls, an Engliſhman, who reſided ſome years here, 47; and Varenius, 4 miles and 5 furlongs, in its perpendicular height. All the other writers, it is probable, compated by the oblique aſcent of a perſon journeying to the ſummit; and even then their relations ſeem extravagant. Sir Thomas Herbert affirms, that the top is ſeen at the diſtance of 120 miles at ſea, provided the weather is clear; but ſir Edmond Storey ſays, that from the baſe, beginning at the town of Garrachico, to the very ſummit, is but two days' journey and a half; which, in fact, is not equal to one days' journey, if we conſider that travellers lie by during the heat, and have alſo to combat with ſo many ſteep aſcents; that their pace muſt be exceeding ſlow. Although the vortex appears ſharp, and the exact reſemblance of a cone, yet it is flat for the extent of an acre of ground, in the centre of which is a dreadful volcano, which frequently breaks out into flames, ſo violent as to ſhake the whole iſland with an incredible force. Smoke conſtantly iſſues from the mountain, near its ſummit, but no eruption has been ſince the year 1704, when the port of Garrachica was deſtroyed, and the harbour filled by the lava. The iſland of Teneriffe is divided in the middle by a ridge of mountains, which have been compared to the roof of a church, the peak forming the ſpire or ſteeple in the centre. An author well acquainted with the iſland, ſays, that, if you divide it into twelve parts, ten of theſe conſiſt of rocks, woody and inacceſſible mountains and vineyards; and yet, from the ſmall remainder of arable ground, he has ſeen 250,000 hanackes of wheat, beſides immenſe quantities of rye and barley, produced. Nothing can be more delicately rich than the ſoil, if the Spaniards knew, or would take the trouble of properly cultivating it; for, beſides the abundance in which it bears grain, fruits, and roots, it communicates to them a peculiar elegance of flavour, unknown in other countries under the ſame parallel; two ſorts of wine are produced, the vidonia and malveſia, or malmſey. The firſt is extracted from a long grape, and is a dull, heavy wine, greatly inferior to the other, which is drawn from a large round grape, in ſuch quantities as to be exported to all the corners of the world. Mr. Anderſon, the companion of captain Cook, in his voyage to the Pacific Ocean, ſays, "To the eaſtward of Santa Cruz, the iſland appears perfectly barren. Ridges of hills run toward the ſea; between which ridges are deep vallies, terminating at mountains or hills that run acroſs, and are higher than the former. Thoſe that run toward the ſea, are marked by impreſſions on their ſides, which make them appear as a ſucceſſion of conic hills, with their tops very rugged. The higher ones that run acroſs, are more uniform in their appearance. After walking about three miles, I found no alteration in the appearance of the lower hills; which produce great quantities of the euphorbia Canarienſis. I met with nothing elſe growing there, but two or three ſmall ſhrubs, and a few fig-trees near the bottom of the vally. Moſt of the laborious work in this iſland is performed by mules; horſes being to appearance ſcarce, and chiefly reſerved for the uſe of the officers. They are of a ſmall ſize, but well ſhaped and ſpirited. Oxen are alſo employed to drag their caſks along, upon a large clumſy piece of wood. In my walks and excurſions I ſaw ſome hawks, parrots, which are natives of the iſland, the ſea ſwallow or tern, ſea-gulls, partridges, wagtails, ſwallows, martins, blackbirds, and Canary birds in large flocks. There are alſo lizards of the common, and another ſort; ſome inſects, as locuſts; and three or four ſorts of dragon-flies." Mr. Anderſon was informed that a ſhrub is common here, agreeing exactly with the deſcription given by Tournefort and Linnæus, of the tea-ſhrub, as growing in China and Japan. Another botanical curioſity, mentioned by him, is what they call the impregnated lemon. It is a perfect and diſtinct lemon, incloſed within another, differing from the outer one only in being a little more globular. The leaves of the tree that produces this ſort, are much longer than thoſe of the common one; and it was repreſented to me as being crooked, and not equal in beauty. They reckon that 40,000 pipes of wine are annually made, the greateſt part of which is either conſumed in the iſland, or made into brandy, and ſent to the Spaniſh Weſt Indies and North America. The corn they raiſe is, in general, inſufficient to maintain the inhabitants; but the deficiency uſed to be ſupplied by importation from the North Americans, who took their wines in return. They make a little ſilk; but, unleſs we reckon the filtering-ſtones, brought in great numbers from Grand Canary, the wine is the only conſiderable article of the foreign commerce of Teneriffe. None of the race of inhabitants found here when the Spaniards diſcovered the Canaries, now remain a diſtinct people, having intermarried with the Spaniſh ſettlers; but their deſcendants are known, from their being remarkably tall, large-boned, and ſtrong. The men are, in general of a tawny colour, and the women have a pale complexion, entirely deſtitute of that bloom which diſtinguiſhes our northern beauties. The Spaniſh cuſtom of wearing black clothes continues amongſt them; but the men ſeem more indifferent about this, and in ſome meaſure dreſs like the French. Long. of the Peak 17. W. TERNATE, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, and the principal, though not the largeſt, among thoſe called Moluccas or Spice Iſlands, of a circular form, and about 6 leagues in circumference. In the centre is a lofty volcanic mountain, whoſe baſe extends almoſt to the ſea every way: the upper parts are uncultivated, and covered over with ſhrubs and low trees; but in the plain are many gardens, and abundance of fruit trees: on this mountain are found many hollows or caverns full of ſulphur, which emit a thick ſmoke, and flame ſometimes appears from the ſummit, with a noiſe reſembling thunder. The productions are cocoa-nuts, bananas, yams, oranges, and other fruits; but the principal article of commerce is cloves: many birds of paradiſe and other beautiful birds are found here, and plenty of game. This iſland was firſt ſettled by the Spaniards, who were driven away by the Dutch, to whom the king of the iſland is, in ſome degree, ſubject. The Europeans have two forts, called Orange and Terloeke, between which is a lake, called Saſſe, a league in circumference, and ſixty fathoms deep, ſeparated from the ſea by a narrow dike, which the Spaniards made a fruitleſs attempt to cut through, to form a port. Long. 126. 10. It is a biſhop's ſee, and in its large market-place are ſeen a great number of ſtatues, mile ſtones, and inſcriptions. It once had a harbour on the ſea, but is now entirely choked up. On the ſide towards Rome, is ſtill ſeen part of the Via Appia entire, and on that towards Naples, about an Italian mile from Terracina, to make this road more commodious, an eaſy deſcent has been cut through a rock near the ſea: 26 miles W. Sezza, and 47 SE. Rome.

TERRA DEL ESPIRITU SANTO, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, and the moſt weſterly, as well as the largeſt, of thoſe called New Hebrides; diſcovered by Quiros, and viſited by captain Cook, in the year 1774; 60 miles in length and 30 in breadth. The land of it, eſpecially the weſt ſide, is exceedingly high and mountainous; and, in many places, the hills riſe directly from the ſea. Except the cliffs and beaches, every other part is covered with wood, or laid out in plantations. Beſides the bays of St. Philip and St. Jago, the iſles which lie along the ſouth and eaſt coaſt cannot, in the opinion of captain Cook, fail of forming ſome good bays or harbours. Long. 166. E. TERRA FIRMA. Under this name is comprehended a vaſt extent of country, and, conſidered as a government under the authority of the crown of Spain, comprehends ſeveral extenſive provinces, and three audiences, which are fixed at Panama, Quito, and Santa Fè de Bogota; the large provinces are Terra Firma Proper, or Darien, Popayan, Quito, and New Grenada, all of which are again ſubdivided into ſeveral ſmaller provinces or juriſdictions.

TERRA FIRMA PROPER, or Kingdom of Terra Firma, a province of South America, bounded on the north by the Spaniſh Main, on the eaſt by the river and Gulf of Darien, which ſeparates it from the province of Carthagena, on the ſouth by Popayan and the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by the Pacific Ocean and province of Veragua. It is divided into the four provinces of Panama, Darien, Choco, and Boriquetta. The whole country is an alternate mixture of vallies and hills of different heights, with abundance of rivers running towards each ſea. The climate is very hot, yet the humidity is greater, in proportion, than the heat, conſequently the air muſt be rendered unwholeſome. What has been ſaid under the different heads of Panama, Darien, and Portobello, includes, perhaps, every thing that need be ſaid to give the reader a general idea of this country.

THEROUANNE, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of St. Omer, on the Lis. It was anciently the capital of the Morini, and afterwards an epiſcopal ſee. It contains ſeveral churches and convents; but being taken in the year 1553, by the emperor Charles V. he demoliſhed it. The diſtrict belonging to it, however, was ceded by Spain to France, at the treaties of the year 1559, and 1659: 2 leagues S. St. Omer, and 2 W. Aire.

THESSALY, or Janna, a province of European Turkey, bounded on the north by Macedonia, on the eaſt by the Archipelago, on the ſouth by Livadia, and on the weſt by Livadia and Epire: anciently called Theſſalia, Pelaſgia, and Pyrrhea, and now by the Turks Janna. It was ſometimes annexed to Macedonia, ſometimes divided from it, and then again united with it. The celebrated mount Pindus, now Meſſova, or Meſſo Novo, ſeparated it from Epirus, or a part of the preſent Albania. Among its once celebrated twenty-four mountains, the moſt remarkable are Olympus, Pelion, and Oſſa. Here alſo are ſituated the plains of Pharſalia, and between the mountains Olympus, Pelion, and Oſſa, is the moſt delightful vally of Tempé, which was ſo adorned with the gifts of nature, and ſo delightfully watered by the gentle winding ſtreams of the tranſparent Peneus or Salampria, that it was reckoned the garden of the Muſes. The country is certainly fertile to exuberance, and ſeems to exceed all other parts of Greece. It produces oranges, citrons, lemons, pomegranates, grapes of an uncommon ſweetneſs, excellent figs and melons, almonds, olives, cotton, &c. and cheſtnuts take their Latin name from the town of Caſtanea, in Magneſia, whence they were firſt brought into the colder climates of Europe. It was noted anciently for its breed of cattle and horſes, from which and the extraordinary ſkill of the Theſſalians in horſemanſhip, in all probability the fable of the Centaurs, who are ſaid to have been half men and half horſe

The moſt remarkable places in this country are Lariſſa and Janna.

THETFORD, a town of England, ſituated on the Leſſer Ouſe, partl in Norfolk, and partly in Suffolk. The Saxon kings made it the metropol of the kingdom of the Eaſt Angles; but it was three times ruined by th Danes. In the 12th century, it was the ſee of a biſhop, and then a plac in the reign of Henry VIII. it was of ſuch conſequence as to be a ſuffraga

Hindooſtan to the deſerts of Cobi; in length, from eaſt to weſt, abo 1500 miles; the breadth is unequal, and in many parts not known. W are informed generally, that it is divided into three parts; that is, Upp Middle, and Lower Thibet. The Upper diviſion ſeems to reſpect t countries towards the ſources of the Ganges and Sanpoo rivers; the mi dle, that in which Laſſa is ſituated, and of which it forms the centre; a the Lower Thibet, that which borders on China: but the ſubject is o

Great Thibet. Conſidering the exceeding rough and ſterile ſtate of t country of Thibet, and the ſeverity of its climate; from its wonderf elevation, we are aſtoniſhed to find its inhabitants in a high ſtate of ci lization: their houſes lofty, and built of ſtone; and the uſeful manuf tures in ſome degree of improvement. All theſe advantages they probab owe to their vicinity to the Chineſe, to whom indeed, the lama is in ſo reſpect tributary. Thibet is governed by the grand lama, who is ſoverei pontiff of the greater part of Chineſe and Independent Tartary. It alſo called Barantola, and ſometimes Laſſa, becauſe the pagoda where t grand lama reſides, is in the country of Laſſa. As this lama muſt ne concern himſelf with ſecular affairs, he therefore appoints ſome native, whom he gives the name of Tipa, and empowers him to govern the pe in his name. This tipa wears the habit of a lama, but is diſpenſed fr obſerving the rules of the order, which are both ſevere and numerous.
one lama undertakes to obſerve them all, they dividing the burthen; being obliged to the performance of a particular precept, and another o different one; and ſo on: however, they have ſome common prayers, are all obliged to renounce the pomps of the world, to lead a life of bacy, and not to follow any trade. The great lama does not reſide in city of Laſſa, but near it, in one of the fineſt pagodas, of which there vaſt numbers ſtanding on the mountain, called Pateli; he is placed a kind of altar, ſitting croſs-legged upon a large and magnificent cuſh
In this poſture he receives the adoration of the natives, as well as of a n

boundleſs multitude of foreigners, who undertake long and painful journies to pay him homage on their knees, and receive his bleſſing. A vaſt number of theſe pilgrims come from Hindooſtan, and theſe take vaſt pains to repreſent their merit to the great lama, by amplifying the trouble and fatigue they had undergone on the road from India to Laſſa. Next to the inhabitants of Thibet, the Tartarians are moſt aſſiduous in paying their court to the great lama, ſome of whom come to Laſſa from the moſt diſtant countries. Princes muſt ſubmit to theſe debaſing ceremonies no leſs than the meaneſt of the people; nor have they more reſpect ſhown them by the great lama. He never returns any ſalute; never pulls off his hat; nor ever ſtirs from his ſeat for any perſon whatſoever. He only lays his hand upon the heads of his adorers, who thereby fancy they obtain the remiſſion of all their ſins. The high idea which both the prince and the common people of this wide-extended country form to themſelves of the power and holineſs of the great lama, induces them to ſubmit cheerfully to all theſe ſervile rites. They are perſuaded that Fo lives in him; that he knows all things, ſees all things, and underſtands the ſecrets of the heart, without aſking any queſtions, or receiving any informations; and that if at any time he does this, it is merely for form-ſake, and in order to leave the infidel and ill-deſigning no room to complain: that he is immortal; and that, when he ſeems to die, he only changes his abode, being born again in an entirely new body. The only thing to be then done, is to enquire out what place he has thought fit to take this new birth in, of which he never fails to make ſome new diſcovery. The Tartarian princes, themſelves, ſometimes go upon this ſearch; and yet are obliged, after all, to refer to certain lamas, who alone know the marks by which he is diſtinguiſhed; or rather, who only know who the child is, whom the preceding great lama had appointed his ſucceſſor. Beſides the great lama, who is the head of religion, and ſovereign of Thibet, there are other princes (if they may deſerve that title) in the country, who have cities, and many ſubjects under them; theſe wear the lama habit, and are called chief officers of the great lama, though they are ſubject to him only as they pleaſe. In many places are large pagodas, in which the lamas of the greateſt diſtinction reſide. The temporal government of Thibet has not been always poſſeſſed by the great lama. At the beginning of the laſt century, Thibet was ruled by a king: and the territories ſubject to the great lama were not very large. By the letters of Father Andrada, who was in Thibet in the year 1624, it appears, that the king of this country ſhowed vaſt favour to the Chriſtian religion, which diſguſting the great lama, he, by his machinations, brought about an inſurrection among the Tartarian princes, who, after they had entirely routed the prince's army, put him to death.

THIEBLEMONT, a town of France, in the department of the Marne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Vitry le François: 2½ leagues ESE. Vitry.

THIEL, or Tiel, a city or town of Guelderland, ſituated on the north ſide of the Wahal, in a ſmall iſland called Tieler-Weert; in one of its fauxbourgs, called Sant-wyck, which is well fortified, is a ſtrong citadel: the fortifications were deſtroyed in the year 1674, by the French, who had made themſelves maſters of the place about two years before, and have been ſince repaired. In the year 1528, it was beſieged by the Spaniards, when Charles V. was at war with the duke of Gueldres; but they were compelled to raiſe the ſiege, through the brave reſiſtance of the citizens. The country about it is marſhy, and the air reckoned unwholeſome. The fortifications are deſtroyed: 6 leagues NNE. Bois-le-Duc, and 5 W. Nimmegen.

THIONVILLE, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Moſelle, on the Moſelle. This town formerly belonged to the duchy of Luxemburg. In the years 1558 and 1643, it was taken by the French, and finally ceded to France, by the treaty of the Pyrennées, in the year 1659. It was once the reſidence of the kings of Auſtria. In the year 1792, it was beſieged by an Auſtrian army; the commander was general Felix Wimpfen, who on being ſummoned to ſurrender, replied, "You may deſtroy the fortreſs, and not leave one ſtone upon another, but you cannot burn the ramparts." It reſiſted during the whole campaign, and held in check a force which was ſaid to amount to 28,000 men; and which, in ſeveral ſucceſsful ſallies, the beſieged frequently harraſſed and diſtreſſed. The town was relieved by the general retreat of the enemy; and the victorious garriſon and commander received all the honours and applauſe which a grateful country could confer: 3½ poſts N. Metz, and 39¾ ENE. Paris. Long. 23. 50. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 21. N.

THIVA, or Stibes, a town of European Turkey, in the province of Livadia, anciently called Thebes, and the capital of Bœotia, ſituated on a riſing ground between two ſmall rivers, ſuppoſed to be the Iſmenus and Dirce of the ancients. Only that part of it is now inhabited which was originally the caſtle, called Cadmæa, from Cadmus, its founder. Amphion, according to the poets, firſt built the walls of Thebes, charming the ſtones to follow him, and place themſelves in order, by the muſic of his harp. The preſent walls ſeem very ancient, and have ſquare towers at convenient diſtances, built of hewn ſtone, with the utmoſt regularity and exactneſs. The town is of an oval form, about three miles in circumference, and the houſes are higher and better built than is uſual in moſt parts of Greece. It contains 4000 or 5000 inhabitants, about half Turks, and half Chriſtians, which latter have ſeveral churches, not remarkable for any thing except ſome few inſcriptions to be ſeen upon the pavement of the cathedral. The air of the country about Thebes is thick and foggy, whence the ancient inhabitants of Bœotia were accounted dull and phlegmatic, and were neither famous for their wit nor valour. Epaminondas raiſed Thebes to its higheſt pitch of grandeur; after whoſe death it was not remarkable for its virtues, but misfortunes, till it ſunk into its original obſcurity; ſo that its glory took birth with this great man, and with him expired: 28 miles WNW. Athens.

THORN, a city of Pruſſia, ſituated on the Viſtula, formerly the chief city of Poliſh Pruſſia. Thorn was founded by Herman Balck, firſt grandmaſter of the Teutonic order, who built the caſtle of Thorn, in 1231. In the following year, the foundation of the town was laid; but the building was diſcontinued in 1235, on account of the inconvenient ſituation, and Thorn was built about a German mile farther up the river, on the ſpot where it now ſtands. It is ſuppoſed to have been called Thorn, becauſe the knights of the Teutonic order, by building this city, opened themſelves a thor or door into Pruſſia. When the knights of the Teutonic order enormouſly abuſed their power, throughout all Pruſſia, Thorn was the firſt city which formed the noble ſcheme of ſhaking off their oppreſſive yoke. The inhabitants then put themſelves under the protection of Caſimir the Great, king of Poland, upon advantageous conditions, as a free city. Thorn has ten gates, and is divided into the Old and the New Town, each of which had formerly its reſpective council, magiſtracy, and police. But, in 1454, they were incorporated into one city. They are, however, ſeparated from each other by a wall and moat within the town; and without they are defended in common, by a fine double wall and moats. Thorn was formerly ſtrongly fortified; and it gradually improved its advantageous ſituation, ſo as to become a place of very conſiderable trade, and one of the principal of the Hanſe towns. It likewiſe carried on an extenſive commerce in the Baltic, independently of the other cities of that confederacy; for before the river widened ſo much, and conſequently became ſhallower, ſhips of burden could come up to the very city. From this cauſe and other ſubſequent misfortunes, which followed cloſe upon one another, in little more than half a century, Thorn greatly declined from its flouriſhing condition; for it ſurrendered by capitulation, in 1655, to Charles Guſtavus, king of Sweden; and, in 1658, after a vigorous ſiege, it was taken by the Poles and Brandenburghers. In the year 1703, it was bombarded and taken by Charles XII. king of Sweden, who not only exhauſted it by the heavieſt contribution; but alſo demoliſhed all the fortifications, contrary to the articles of capitulation. Between the years 1708 and 1710, great numbers of its inhabitants were ſwept away by the plague. In the following years the revenues of the city ſuffered conſiderably by the confederations in Poland, and no leſs by the commotions occaſioned by the competitors for the crown of that kingdom. In the year 1724, in a proceſſion, a Jeſuit furiouſly attacked ſome Lutheran ſtudents, who were ſtanding by, and endeavoured to force them to kneel to the Hoſt. This occaſioned a tumultuous concourſe, which the next day broke out into a moſt unhappy quarrel; ſo that the populace being provoked from the Jeſuit's college, by inſulting language, and even by firing of muſkets, forced their way into the college, where in their rage they did a great deal of damage; in conſequence of which, preſident Roſner, and nine burghers were beheaded, on the 7th of December following, and a heavy fine impoſed on the city. In the year 1793, ſome Pruſſian troops entered this town, and from that time it has formed a part of the dominions of that king. The king of Pruſſia taking poſſeſſion of Thorn and Dantzick together, with the palatinates of Poſnania, Kaliſh, &c. agreeably to a proclamation, publiſhed on the 25th of March. The ſoap, ginger-bread, &c. of Thorn, are every where in great requeſt, and accordingly, great quantities of them are exported. THURGAU, a country of Swiſſerland, with the title of landgraviate; bounded on the north by Swabia and the Lake of Conſtance, on the eaſt by the Lake of Conſtance, on the ſouth by the territories of St. Gall, and on the weſt by the cantons of Zurich and Schaffhauſen. It receives its name from the river Thur, and, in its moſt extenſive ſenſe, comprehends all the extent of country on both ſides of that river. Though ſomewhat mountainous towards the ſouth, yet it affords rich paſtures; and its other parts, as approaching nearer to levels, produce plenty of grain, with vegetables and fruits of all kinds, as alſo wine. The country is populous, and well cultivated, containing ſix towns, with ſeveral handſome burghs, and a great number of ſeats, and upwards of 170 villages. About one-third of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and in church affairs ſubject to the biſhop of Conſtance. The other two-thirds, ever ſince the year 1542, have been Calviniſts. The Thurgau is a very ancient landgraviate, which, on the extinction of the counts of Old or Hohen Frauenfelden, devolved to thoſe of Kyburg, and, on their failure, to the counts of Habſburg, with whom it came to the houſe of Auſtria, which contiuued poſſeſſed of it till 1460, in which year, the Switzers being at war with the archduke Sigiſmond, wreſted this country from him, which, by the peace concluded at Conſtance, in the following year was confirmed to them. The cantons to which the territorial ſovereignty of this country belongs, are the eight old cantons of Zurich, Bern, Lucerne, Schweitz, Underwalden, Zug, and Glaris; but it was not till the peace of Arau, that the ſecond was admitted by the others as a co-ſovereign. Theſe eight every two years alternately appoint a landvogt over it, who reſides at Frauenfeld; and ſince the year 1449, the cantons of Freyburg and Soleure have alſo obtained a ſeat in its criminal court.

THURINGIA, a circle of Germany, included in the circle of Upper Saxony. This circle forms the north part of the landgraviate of that name. The country is well watered, yields good paſturage, and abundance of corn, particularly wheat, which is excellent, as alſo fine timber-wood, ſaffor, aniſe, fennel, and wine; and has alſo a conſiderable breed of horſes, horned-cattle, and ſheep. Of theſe natural productions of the country, a great part is exported. Thuringia contains in it 60 towns, 674 villages, and 300 noble eſtates. The modern Thuringia, which lies nearly between the Saale and the Werra, is but a part of the ancient Thuringia, a country formerly comprized under that name, extending itſelf much farther every way. In the 6th century, the Franks and Saxons ſubjected the Thuringians to their dominions, whoſe country from that time forwards became divided into the North and South. North Thuringia, towards the north, extended itſelf beyond Harzwalde, quite to the river Elbe, and belonged to the Saxons. It was united with the duchy of Saxony, loſt its name, and was at length annexed to Eaſtphalia, or to the eaſtern part of the county of Saxony. South Thuringia belonged to the Franks, and comprized in it the modern Thuringia, together with a large ſhare of the modern Franconia, Heſſe, &c. Till the 11th century, it ſtood under the emperors and kings, and beſides the counts, we find alſo ſome dukes mentioned, to whom the German kings entruſted the government of this country. Ever ſince the 13th century, the marggraves of Meiſſen, who afterwards became electors of Saxony, have been in poſſeſſion of the landgraviate of Thuringia, which was at one time divided among ſeparate lines, but returned again by the extinction of the latter to that of Meiſſen.

TILSIT, a town of Pruſſia, in the Lithuanian department; large, rich, and commercial. It obtained the privileges of a city in the year 1552; though the caſtle is ſaid to have been ſtanding ſo early as the year 1289. The river Memel, which runs along the north ſide of the town, opens to it a very advantageous trade with Konigſberg, in corn, linſeed, butter, and other proviſions. Tilſit, properly ſo called, conſiſts of two long ſtreets, of a proportionate breadth, which are called the German-ſtreet and the High-ſtreet, contiguous to which is the ſuburbs, called the Liberty. The number of houſes in this city is about 600, and the inhabitants amount to 7000 ſouls. The eccleſiaſtical buildings are an evangelical or Lutheran German church, a Lithuanian church, and a Calviniſt, or reform church. Without the town ſtands a Lutheran chapel, and about an Engliſh mile from it, a Roman Catholic Chapel. The flat country about Tilſit, which is about ſixteen miles in length and as many in breadth, is one of the moſt fertile ſpots in the whole kingdom: the inhabitants of it breed great numbers of horned cattle, and furniſh not only Pruſſia, but likewiſe other provinces, with excellent butter and cheeſe; and the fiſheries in this place are alſo conſiderable. The horſes are large and ſtrong, but clumſy. Barley is almoſt the only grain ſown in theſe parts, which afford little or no wood. TINEMOUTH, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Northumberland, ſituated at the mouth of the Tine, on the German Sea. It is defended by a large caſtle well furniſhed with cannon, and inacceſſible from the ſea. The Tine here is not above ſeven feet deep at low water; and though the channel is good from hence to Newcaſtle, a ſand lies acroſs the mouth of it, called The Bar, with dangerous rocks about it called the Black Middins; but to prevent ſhips running on them by night, there are light-houſes ſet up, and maintained by the Trinity-Houſe, at Newcaſtle; and near them is Clifford's Fort, built in 1672, which commands the mouth of the river. It has ſeveral ſalt works; but its greateſt article of trade is coals, of which upwards of 770,000 chaldrons are ſent to London only, beſides other places. This place is now much reſorted to as a watering place during the ſummer months: there was a monaſtery, the ruins whereof are ſtill to be ſeen, which was often plundered by the Danes. TINIAN, one of the Mariana Iſlands, in the North Pacific Ocean, about 40 miles in circumference; firſt diſcovered by the crew of a Manilla ſhip, which was caſt away here in the year 1638. The author of Anſon's Voyage gives a pleaſing deſcription of this iſland, as found by the crew of the Centurion, in the year 1742. Commodore Byron, who viſited it in the year 1765, and anchored on the ſouth-weſt end of the iſland, in the ſame place where the Centurion lay, inſtead of delightful lawns he found the trees and underwood ſo thick, that in endeavouring to force a paſſage through, they were entangled, and cut as if with whip-cord. After they had cleaned the well which they imagined was the ſame at which lord Anſon filled his caſks, commodore Byron found the water brackiſh, and full of worms. He ſays, "the road alſo where the ſhips lay, was a dangerous ſituation at this ſeaſon (Auguſt 1ſt), for the bottom is a hard ſand, and large coral rocks ; and the anchor having no hold in the ſand, is in perpetual danger of being cut to pieces by the coral ; to prevent which, as much as poſſible, I rounded the cables, and buoyed them up with empty water-caſks. Another precaution alſo was taught me by experience, for at firſt I moored, but finding the cables much damaged, I reſolved to be ſingle for the future, that by veering away, or heaving in, as we ſhould have more or leſs wind, we might always keep them from being ſlack, and conſequently from rubbing, and this expedient ſucceeded to my wiſh. At the full and change of the moon, a prodigious ſwell tumbles in here, ſo that I never ſaw ſhips at anchor roll ſo much as our's did, while we lay here ; and it once drove in from the weſtward with ſuch violence, and broke ſo high upon the reef, that I was obliged to put to ſea for a week ; for if our cable had parted in the night, and the wind had been upon the ſhore, which ſometimes happens for two or three days together, the ſhip muſt inevitably have been loſt upon the rocks. I ſoon found that the iſland produced limes, ſour-oranges, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, guavas, and paupaus in abundance ; but we found no water-melons, ſcurvy-graſs, or ſorrel. Notwithſtanding the fatigue and diſtreſs that we had endured, and the various climates we had paſſed through, neither of the ſhips had yet loſt a ſingle man, ſince their ſailing from England, but while we lay here two died of fevers, a diſeaſe with which many were ſeized, though we all recovered very faſt from the ſcurvy. I am indeed of opinion that this is one of the moſt unhealthy ſpots in the world, at leaſt during the ſeaſon in which we were here. The rains were violent, and almoſt inceſſant ; and the heat ſo great as to endanger ſuffocation : beſides the inconvenience which we ſuffered from the weather, we were inceſſantly tormented by the flies in the day, and by the muſquitos in the night. The iſland alſo ſwarms with centipedes and ſcorpions, and a large black ant, ſcarcely inferior to either in the malignity of its bite. Beſides theſe, here were venomous inſects without number, altogether unknown to us, by which many of us ſuffered ſo ſeverely, that we were afraid to lie down in our beds : nor were thoſe on board in a much better ſituation than thoſe on ſhore, for great numbers of theſe creatures being carried into the ſhip with the wood, they took poſſeſſion of every birth, and left the poor ſeamen no place of reſt, either below or upon the deck. Our principal reſource for freſh meat, was the wild hog, with which the iſland abounds. Theſe creatures are very fierce, and ſome of them ſo large, that a carcaſe frequently weighed 200 pounds. Mr. Gore, one of our mates, at laſt, diſcovered a pleaſant ſpot, upon the north-weſt part of the iſland, where cattle were in great plenty, and whence they might be brought to the tents by the ſea. We were now upon the whole, pretty well ſupplied with proviſions, eſpecially as we baked freſh bread every day for the ſick ; and the fatigue of our people being leſs, there were fewer ill with the fever ; but ſeveral of them were ſo much diſordered by eating of a very fine looking fiſh, which we caught here, that their recovery was for a long time doubtful." The author of lord Anſon's voyage ſays, that the people on board the Centurion, thought it prudent to abſtain from fiſh, as the few which they caught at their firſt arrival ſurfeited thoſe who eat of them. Beſides the fruit that has been mentioned already, this iſland produces cotton and indigo in abundance, and would certainly be of great value, if it were ſituated in the Weſt Indies. The ſurgeon of the Tamar encloſed a large ſpot of ground here, and made a very pretty garden, but we did not ſtay long enough to derive any advantage from it. Long. 146 E. Greenwich. Lat. 15. N.

TINOS, an iſland in the Grecian Archipelago, anciently called Tenos ; of a long oval form, about 60 miles in circumference. It is mountainous and well cultivated : the fruits are excellent, melons, figs, and grapes ; of the latter the inhabitants make ſome good wine, but the chief riches of the iſland ariſe from its ſilk, of which 16,000lb. are obtained annually. It belongs to the Venetians, and is governed by a proveditor. It is the ſee of a Roman Catholic biſhop : but the greater part of the inhabitants are of the Greek church. The two principal places are Tinos and St. Nicolo, beſides which there are upwards of 50 villages. Long. 42. 55. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 33. N.

TINTO, a river of Spain, in the province of Seville, which owes i name to the waters being tinged of a yellow colour ; they are of a petrify ing quality, and harden the ſand ; if a ſtone happens to fall in and re upon another, they both become, in a year's time, perfectly united and con glutinated. This river withers all the plants on its banks, as well as th roots of trees, which it dyes of the ſame hue as its waters. No kind verdure will come up where it reaches, nor any fiſh live in its ſtream. kills worms in cattle when given to drink ; but in general no animals wi drink out of this river, except goats, whoſe fleſh, nevertheleſs, has an ex cellent flavour. Theſe ſingular properties continue till other rivulets ru into it and alter its nature ; for, when it paſſes by Niebla, it is not differen from other rivers, and falls into the Atlantic ſix leagues lower down, the town of Huelva, where it is two leagues broad, and admits of larg veſſels, which may come up the river as high as San Juan del Puerto, leagues above Huelva.

TIPPERARY, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munſter, bounded on the north-eaſt by King's County ; on the eaſt by Queen County and Kilkenny ; on the ſouth by Waterford ; and on the weſt b Limerick, Clare, and Galway ; 52 miles in length, and from 12 to 31 i breadth. It contains 24 pariſhes, 30,700 houſes, and 169,000 inhabitant This county is in ſome parts mountainous, but to no great extent ; an elſewhere the ſoil is generally good, and in ſome large tracts extremely fer tile, more adapted to the feeding of cattle, than for cultivation by th plough ; notwithſtanding which, much wheat is raiſed in the ſouth part and near fifty boulting-mills are counted on the different rivers, a much greater number than is found in any other county. The principal rive is the Suir, beſides which there are abundance of ſmaller rivers and brooks. In Clonmell both the linen and woollen manufactures flouriſh : near Silver-mines are mines of lead, with a mixture of ſilver ; but the princip productions are cattle, ſheep, butter, and flour, the laſt particularly fo Dublin. The county, Caſhell, Clonmell, and Fethard, each ſend two members to the Iriſh parliament ; Clonmell is the county town.

TIRLEMONT, or Tillemont, a town of Brabant, called by the people of the country Tienen, ſituated on the river Geete. It was anciently one of the principal cities of Brabant, and made one-fourth quarter in the aſſembly of the States; but that precedence was afterwards removed to Bois-le-Duc. It certainly has been a very flouriſhing and populous city, and many veſtiges of its grandeur are yet viſible; but it has ſuffered much by war, and other calamities, particularly in 1635, when it was taken and ſacked by the French and Dutch; and in the year 1701 a fire, which happened through the careleſſneſs of a workman, conſumed the principal church, and the greater part of the city to aſhes: 9 miles SE. Louvain, and 24 WNW. Liege—On the 27th of November, 1792, the Auſtrians were defeated near this town, by the French; and on the 14th of March, 1793, the French were defeated by the Auſtrians, loſing about 7000 men, and 33 pieces of cannon.

TITICACA, or Chucuito, a lake of South America, in the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, and biſhopric of Cuſco, upwards of 60 leagues in circumference, and 400 feet in depth. The water of this lake, though neither ſalt nor brackiſh, is muddy, and has ſomething ſo nauſeous in its taſte as not to be drank. It abounds with fiſh of two oppoſite kinds and qualities: the one large and palatable, by the Indians called ſuchis; the other ſmall, inſipid, and bony, which the Indians long ſince called boyas. On it are alſo great numbers of geeſe and other wild fowls; its ſhores are covered with flaggers and ruſhes, the materials of which the bridges of the country are made. As the weſtern limits of this lake are called Chucuito; ſo thoſe on the eaſt ſide are diſtinguiſhed by the name of Omaſcuyo. In it are ſeveral iſlands, among which is one very large, and anciently was a mountain, ſince levelled by order of the Yncas. It however gave to the lake its own name of Titicaca, which in the Indian language, ſignifies a mountain of lead, and about two muſket ſhots from the ſhore. In this iſland the firſt Ynca Mancho-capac, the illuſtrious founder of the empire of Peru invented this political fable: That the ſun, his father, had placed him there, together with his ſiſter and conſort Mama Oello Huaco; enjoining them to draw the neighbouring people from the ignorance, rudeneſs, and barbarity in which they lived, and to humanize them by cuſtoms, laws and religious rites, dictated by himſelf:. ſo that in return for the benefits reſulting from this artful ſtratagem, the iſland has been looked upon as ſacred by the Indians.

TIVERTON, a town of England, in the county of Devon, ſituated on the river Ex, where it is joined by the Lowman, with two weekly markets, on Tueſday and Saturday. It has long been celebrated for its woollen manufacture, particularly kerſeys. This town has been three times nearly deſtroyed by fire. In the year 1598, 600 houſes were deſtroyed; in 1612, the loſs ſuſtained was computed at 35,000l.: and, in the year 1731, another fire deſtroyed 200 of the beſt houſes, with moſt of the manufactures, to the amount of 150,000l. Next year, an act of parliament was paſſed for rebuilding it, enjoining that the new houſes ſhould be covered with lead or tile, inſtead of thatch; that no perilous trades ſhould be exerciſed in the ſtreets; no ſtacks of corn, ſtraw, hay, &c. be erected there; that fire-engines ſhould be provided againſt like accidents; that houſes ſhould be demoliſhed to ſtop any future fire; that particular houſes ſhould be pulled down for widening the ſtreets and paſſages: 14 miles N. Exeter, and 161 W. London.

TIULIT, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Fez: 4 leagues SW. Fez.

TIUMEN, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Tobolſk, at the union of the Piſchma and the Tura. This town is not built parallel to the river Tura, but at right angles with it; and the little river Piſchma runs through the town, and falls into the Tura at the extremity of it. Over the river is a bridge, of 83 fathoms in length; and a little below it ſtands a fort, built with ſtone, in which is a church of the ſame materials. Without this fortification, and towards the lower bank of the Tura, are ſix wooden churches, a convent of nuns, with a church, and 500 dwelling-houſes. At the lower end of the town is an oſtrog. Beyond the Tumenka lies the Yamſkaia ſloboda, or ſuburb, conſiſting of 250 houſes, inhabited by people of all ranks and profeſſions; and at the extremity of this ſuburb ſtands a monaſtery; it has likewiſe 3 churches, built with ſtone. Another ſuburb lies oppoſite to Tiumen, on the north ſide of the Tura, which is inhabited by Ruſſians, Mahometan Tartars, and Bucharians: 112 miles WSW. Tobolſk, and 320 ENE. Upha. Long. 83. E. Ferro. Lat. 57. N.

TIVOLI, anciently called Tibur, a town of Italy, in the Campania di Roma, ſituated on a rocky mountain, planted with olive-trees, which are ſaid to yield the beſt oil in Italy; the ſee of a biſhop, held immediately under the pope. The town itſelf is mean, and contains a great number of forges. The cathedral is built on the ruins of a temple of Hercules. In the market-place are two images of Oriental granite, repreſenting Iſis, the Egyptian deity. The principal beauty of this place ariſes from the river Teverone, which falling headlong about 50 feet down the rock, forms a noble caſcade, and ſeveral leſſer ones, called Le Caſcadelle. The latter are extremely pictureſque; as is alſo a deep ravine in the hill, called La Grotta di Nettuno, into which the great caſcade falls. To enrich the view, here are ſome fine remains of ancient buildings, as the villa of Mecænas, and particularly the little round temple of the Sibyl, as it is commonly called, but rather of Veſta; one of the moſt elegant remains of the Grecian architecture. The naturaliſt will here take pleaſure in obſerving the continual formation of new Tiburtine ſtone from the depoſit of water deſcending from the calcareous Apennines: 15 miles ENE. Rome.

TIUTERS, an iſland of Ruſſia, in the Gulf of Finland: 80 miles ENE. Revel. Long. 45. E. Ferro. Lat. 59. 40. N.

TIZZANO, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Parmz: 13 miles S. Parma.

TLASCALA, a province of North America, in the government of Mexico; bounded on the north by Guaſteca, on the eaſt by the Gulf of Mexico and the province of Guaxaca, on the ſouth by the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by the province of Mexico Proper; about 320 miles in length, and from 40 to 120 in breadth. The climate, ſoil, and produce, are much the ſame with thoſe of Mexico Proper. On the weſt ſide there is a chain of mountains for the ſpace of eighteen leagues, very well cultivated; and on the north is alſo a great ridge of mountains, the nighbourhood of which expoſes it to horrid tempeſts, hurricanes, and frequent inundations, whereby houſes, even on the top of eminences, are ſometimes endangered. Yet this is allowed to be the moſt populous country of all America: and this is partly aſcribed to its having been originally an ally to Cortez, in the conqueſt of Mexico, who obtained a grant of it from the emperor Charles VI. alſo king of Spain, by which it is ſtill exempt from any ſervice or duty whatſoever to that crown, only paying the king of Spain a handful of maize for each head, as an acknowledgment; which inconſiderable parcels were ſaid, upwards of fifty years ago, to make up 13,000 buſhels; for it produces ſo much of that Indian corn, that hence it has had the name of Tlaſcala, that is the Land of Bread. By this means the towns and villages ſwarm with Indians. This province was anciently a monarchy, till civil wars ariſing among the inhabitants, they formed themſelves into an ariſtocracy of many princes, in order to get rid of one. They divided their towns into different diſtricts, each of which nominated one of their chiefs to reſide in the court of Tlaſcala, where they formed a ſenate, whoſe reſolutions were a law to the whole. Under this form of government they maintained themſelves a long while againſt the kings of Mexico, and continued in it till the reception of the Spaniards, under Cortez. When the Spaniards firſt arrived here, it is ſaid to have contained 300,000 inhabitants: and Acoſta affirms, that it had a market-place large enough to hold 30,000 buyers and ſellers; that in the ſhambles were ſeldom leſs than 15,000 ſheep, 4000 oxen, and 2000 hogs. But matters were ſo much altered, that Gemelli, who was here in 1698, ſays, it was then become an ordinary village, with a pariſh church, in which hangs up a picture of the ſhip which brought Cortez to La Vera Cruz.

TLASCALA, a town of North America, and anciently the capital of the province to which it gives name, ſituated on a river, which runs into the Pacific Ocean: 30 miles N. Puebla de los Angelos, and 140 NW. Vera Cruz.

TOALOOR, a town of Hindooſtan in the Myſore country: 3 miles SE. Wombinellore.

TOBAGO, one of the Caribbee Iſlands, in the Weſt Indies, about 30 miles in length, from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt, and about 9 in breadth. This iſland was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1498; but we know of no ſettlement that he or any of his countrymen made upon the iſland. When an adventurous ſpirit for diſcoveries prevailed in England under queen Elizabeth, Sir Robert Dudley ſon of the famous earl of Leiceſter, in an expedition againſt Trinidada, gave the Engliſh governor the firſt hint of peopling Tobago, which was then uninhabited by any European nation: but this propoſal met with ſmall encouragement. William, earl of Pembroke, in the year 1628, obtained a grant of this iſland, with that of Barbuda, and St. Bernard, but his death happening in leſs than two years after, the deſign came to nothing. About the year 1632, ſome Zealanders having fitted out a ſmall ſquadron for trading to thoſe iſlands, made ſuch a favourable report of this in particular, upon their return home, that the company of merchants to which they belonged, undertook to ſettle it, and gave it the name of New Walckern, from one of the iſlands in Zealand. The new colony, in a ſhort time, increaſed to about 200, who, finding themſelves peſtered by the viſits of the Caribbean Indians, began to erect a fort for their preſervation. The Indians had recourſe to the Spaniards, who readily granted them aſſiſtance. They ſent a force upon the iſland, which demoliſhed the riſing fort, and exterminated the new colony. It was probably from ſome Dutch merchants who travelled to Courland, that James, duke of that country, conceived the deſign of ſettling Tobago. Being a prince of an active diſpoſition, and finding there was room for ſuch a ſettlement, he ſent over a colony of his own ſubjects, who ſettled upon what has ſince been called Great Courland Bay, and erected a ſmall regular fort, with a town, in the neighbourhood; and the duke's title was farther confirmed by a grant from Charles II. king of Englan but diſputed by the Dutch. Upon the extinction of the Kettler famil dukes of Courland, in the perſon of Ferdinand, ſon of duke James, fief of the iſland of Tobago, reverted to the crown of England, in t year 1737, and, by the definitive treaty, concluded at Paris, in the ye 1763, Tobago was ceded in full right to Great Britain. A few Indian while it was in its ſtate of neutrality, were its only ſettled inhabitant and they live in huts, on the ſea coaſt, towards the northern extremity the iſland. Thoſe Indians are by nature far more tractable than the oth Caribbeans; and though enthuſiaſtically fond of liberty, there is doubt but that every paſſion might prevail with them to enjoy it, under mild protection. The climate of Tobago is far more temperate th could be expected in an iſland that is but 11 degrees 16 minutes nor from the equator: for the heat is allayed by the ſea-breezes. Tobago h

The ſurface of the iſland is unequal and agreeably diverſified: but no pa of it is rugged or impaſſable, though its north-weſt extremity is mou tainous. Its ſoil is of different kinds, but in general the mould is ri and black, and proper for producing, in the greateſt plenty, whatever raiſed in other parts of the weſt Indies. The abundance of ſprings up the iſland, contributes to its healthfulneſs, and its bays and creeks are diſpoſed as to be very commodious for all kinds of ſhipping. It is, ho ever, to be remarked, that its ſituation requires fortifications to rend the iſland ſecure againſt the viſits of ſavages and enemies. Beſides its pr

India iſlands, the Dutch affirm, that both the true nutmeg-tree, and the ci namon-tree, with that which produces the real gum-copal, grows upon t iſland, but this aſſertion wants confirmation. Mr. Blome, who, in the ye 1687, wrote the preſent ſtate of our American Iſlands, ſays, "that the ſoil

TOBOLSK, a city of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, at the co flux of the Irtiſch and Tobol. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and w heretofore the capital of all Siberia. This city is divided into the Up and Lower Town. The Upper town ſtands very high, on the eaſt-ſide the Irtiſch; and the Lower Town lies on a plain, between the hill, which the former is built, and the river. Both towns, taken togeth are of a very large circumference; but the houſes are all built with wo
In the Upper Town, which is properly called the city, ſtands the fo

Lower Town contains a market-place for all kinds of proviſions, on which ſeveral ſhops are built. The Upper Town is out of the reach of inundations from the river, by its high ſituation, which, however, is attended with this inconveniency, that the inhabitants are under a neceſſity of going down the hill for water. Beſides large maſſes of earth fall from the ſide of the hill, on which the town ſtands, towards the river, almoſt every year, which obliges the inhabitants to pull down and rebuild the houſes that ſtand near the declivity. The Lower Town, indeed, has water at hand, but is expoſed to inundations when the river overflows its banks; but ſuch floods do not happen every year. The town is very populous, and almoſt the fourth part of its inhabitants are Tartars, who are partly deſcended from thoſe that were ſettled there before the conqueſt of Siberia, and partly from the Bucharians. Theſe Tartars, in general, behave very quietly, and carry on ſome commerce; but practiſe no mechanic trades. They are very ſober, and averſe to intemperance, and all kinds of riotous living. The reſt of the inhabitants are Ruſſians, whoſe anceſtors were baniſhed hither for their crimes, or ſuch as are exiles themſelves. As every thing is ſold here ſo exceeding cheap, that a common man may live very well, at Tobolſk, for ten rubels a year; indolence and ſloth prevail to ſuch a degree, that it is a hard matter to get the leaſt utenſil, &c. made, though the town abounds with artificers, who want neither tools nor materials to carry on their reſpective trades. The commerce is in a flouriſhing condition, in this city: and the traffic which the Bukharian and Calmuck merchants carry on in Indian goods, with which they ſupply all Siberia, and part of Ruſſia, is very conſiderable. All the Chineſe caravans are obliged to paſs through this town; and all the furs furniſhed by Siberia are brought into a warehouſe in this city, and from hence are forwarded to the Siberian chancery, at Moſcow. Several of the Swediſh officers, who were taken priſoners at the battle of Pultawa, and ſent to Tobolſk, ſet up ſchools here, in the year 1713, for teaching the children of Swedes, Ruſſians, Coſaks, Tartars, &c. the German, Latin, and French languages, with geography, geometry, and drawing. Many of them alſo took in boarders. Theſe ſchools acquired great reputation; ſo that children were ſent hither for education, from a conſiderable diſtance, and the exemplary behaviour of theſe military pedagogues, was attended with uncommon ſucceſs. However, when the peace of Nyſtadt was concluded, the Swediſh officers returned into their own country; and then theſe beneficial ſeminaries of learning dropped of courſe. Some time after a German ſchool was founded here, under the auſpices of the empreſs: 1000 miles E. Moſcow, and 1172 E. Peterſburg. Long. 86. E. Ferro. Lat. 57. N.

It is the reſidence of a cadi, a waiwode, and an aga, commanding 1000 janizaries, and ſome ſpahis. The inhabitants are computed to conſiſt of 20,000 Turkiſh families, 4000 Armenians, and about 400 families of Greeks. The Armenians have 7 churches, the Greeks only one. It is the ſee of a metropolitan, dependent on the archbiſhop of Nicſara, or Neoceſarea, an ancient city, almoſt ruined, about two days' journey from Tocat. Here are ſome manufactures of ſilk and yellow Turkey leather, but the chief trade is in copper veſſels, kettles, candleſticks, &c. which are ſent to Conſtantinople, Egypt, &c. Tocat may be conſidered as the centre of trade of Aſia Minor. TOGGENBURG, a county of Swiſſerland, dependent on the abby of St. Gal, bounded on the north by the territory of St. Gal, on the eaſt by the canton of Appenzell, on the ſouth by the county of the Sargans and the territory of Gaſter, and on the weſt by the canton of Zurich. In its natural quality it reſembles Appenzell and the other cantons, and, being full of fertile Alps, abounding in numerous breeds of cattle. Till the year 1436, this country had its own counts; the laſt of whom carried his indulgence to his vaſſals ſo far, as to grant them ſuch privileges as nearly amounted to a ſtate of abſolute freedom: accordingly, on his demiſe in the above year, they entered into a cloſe alliance with the cantons of Schwitz and Glaris, which alliance was confirmed in the year 1440. Afterwards the county deſcended to the barons of Raron: but, in the year 1468, they ſold it to Ulrich VIII. abbot of St. Gal, who, in the year 1469, entered into a perpetual league with the cantons of Schwitz and Glaris, and likewiſe gave his ſanction to the former compact between the inhabitants of the county and the ſaid cantons. In the beginning of the 18th century, the Toggenburgers reſenting the illegal and oppreſſive exactions of abbot Leodegarius applied for aſſiſtance to their allies, who readily granted it; and, in the year 1707, Zurich and Bern alſo declared, that they would maintain the county of Toggenburg in the ſecure enjoyment of its right and liberties againſt all illicit violence whatſoever. On this the people began to aſſert their rights, and, in the year 1707, in a ſolemn landeſgemine, held at Wattweil, renewed their federal oath, and erected three councils, named the great, leſſer, and privy, which are compoſed of an equal number of members of both ſects. The inteſtine commotions here continued, however, to increaſe, till, in the year 1712, they broke out into open war, in which Zurich and Bern ſided with the county, and Schwitz and Glaris with the abbot. The former overruning all the abby's territories, ſecured the ſeveral paſſes into the country of Toggenburg, and the abbot and his conventuals betaking themſelves to flight, the council aſſumed the regency. In the year 1714, negociations for a peace were ſet on foot at Rorſchach, without effect, but at length, namely, in the year 1718, at Baden, in the Argau, an accommodation, confirming the liberties of the country, was brought about between the new abbot and the cantons of Bern and Zurich. Purſuant to this peace, the abbot and prince of St. Gal both is, and bears the title of, natural ſovereign and territorial lord of the county of Toggenburg; and the people are to take the accuſtomed oath to him, and to pay him ſuitable ſervices, but without any violence of their rights and liberties.

TOLEDO, a city of Spain, in New Caſtile, on the Tagus, the ſee of an archbiſhop, and an univerſity, founded in the year 1475. The origin of Toledo is uncertain ; it is only known to have been a Roman colony, and made the depoſitory of the treaſury ſent to Rome. From the Romans it paſſed under the dominion of the Goths ; Leovigild reſided there and embelliſhed the city, which became more conſiderable under his ſucceſſors. The Moors took Toledo in 714, and reigned there until the year 1085, when it was taken from them by Alphonſo VI. who ſtyled himſelf emperor of Toledo, whence it took, and has preſerved, the title of royal and imperial. Toledo, as is well known, was formerly famous for the exquiſite temper of the ſword blades made there ; and the genuine ones that ſtill remain are ſold at an exorbitant price. It is ſaid, that the ſecret of hardening them has been again recovered, and experiments have been made with blades lately fabricated there, which ſeem to juſtify this aſſertion. When one of theſe has undergone the operation of tempering, if it is in the leaſt notched, by ſtriking with it ſeveral violent blows on an iron head piece, it is rejected : almoſt all that are made here, it is ſaid, will ſtand this proof. Two centuries ago, Toledo contaiend more than 200,000 inhabitants, but at preſent, it ſcarcely has 30,000. When a houſe falls to decay it is never rebuilt ; and in twenty years more this city will be little elſe than a heap of ruins. Toledo is built upon rocks, and commanded by eminences which ſeem to preſent the image of ſterility, yet, in the midſt of theſe precipices, the traveller finds, to his ſurpriſe, ſeveral fertile and charming ſituations, impenetrable to the burning rays of the ſun. Theſe places are called Cigarrales : 32 miles SSW. Madrid. Long. 12. 28. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 39. 56. N.

TOLEN, an iſland belonging to the ſtate of Zealand, the eaſt branch of the Scheldt, ſeparated from the main land of Brabant by a canal, about ten miles in length, and four in breadth. It contains two towns, Tolen and St. Martyn's Dyck, and ſeveral villages. Tolen, the capital, from whence the iſland itſelf is named, is a handſome town, and ranks as fourth in the aſſembly. The name of it is derived from the toll which was formerly paid here by order of the counts of Zealand. The 13th of November, in 1572, the prince of Orange thought to ſurpriſe it, but was diſappointed by the vigilance of the Spaniſh captain, Mondragon : however, it ſurrendered to that prince in 1577, and has ever ſince been in the hands of the United Provinces. In the year 1712, a detachment of French, under the command of brigadier James Paſture, pillaged and ſet fire to the town, in repriſal for the ſame done by the allies in France. It is fortified with ſeven baſtions, and the ſtates have cauſed a fort, called Stickenburg, to be built on the other ſide of the river, ſo that is now one of the ſtrongeſt frontier towns of the province of Zealand. The ſtadt-houſe is an old building, which makes a good ſhow. The arſenal is ſituated at the entrance of the ſmall harbour ; there is alſo a magazine for powder. TOMBUCTOU, a city of Africa, and capital of a rich and populo kingdom, ſuppoſed to have been built in the 13th century by Soliman, wh pretended to be of the royal race of Morocco. The caravans of Trip and other parts of Africa trade to this city. The houſes are ſaid to ha been formerly magnificent, but at preſent only built of wood, and cover with ſtraw or turf, except a magnificent moſque of ſtone, and the roy palace, which was built after the deſign of a Moor, who was baniſh from Grenada, in Spain. The country abounds in millet, wheat, and ba ley, and is well watered by a number of wells and ſprings : cattle are n merous, and milk and butter in great plenty. The deareſt article is ſa which is purchaſed from Teguza. Cloth and other European manufactu and produce are ſent to Tombuctou by the caravans, and exchanged f ivory, ſlaves, ſena, gold-duſt, dates, oſtrich feathers, &c. brought from t interior and the more maritime parts of Africa. The king of Tombuct is deſpotic; all perſons approaching him muſt proſtrate themſelves on the ground, take up the duſt, and throw it over their heads; and even ambaſſadors are compelled to this ceremony at their firſt audience: his general guard conſiſts of 3000 horſemen, well armed with bows and poiſoned arrows, beſides a number of foot, who wear ſhields and ſwords. The horſes are purchaſed from Barbary; the king generally rides on an elephant. Tombuctou is ſaid to contain a great number of cotton-weavers, and ingenious mechanics. The police is well regulated, and the inhabitants are in general very rich. The women, except of the meaner ſort, and ſlaves, never go abroad without veils. The ordinary food is fleſh, fiſh, milk, and butter. Tombuctou is ſituated near the Niger. Long. 17. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 19. 55. N.

TOMINA, a government of South-America, in the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, and archbiſhopric of La Plata, which begins about 16 leagues ſouth-eaſt from the city of La Plata. The climate here is hot, and conſequently its productions are ſuch as are common to hot countries. Some parts have vineyards, and in others are made conſiderable quantities of ſugar. It alſo abounds in cattle and ſheep. Its extent in ſome parts is near 40 leagues. The vicinity of ſome free Indians is a continual uneaſineſs to the towns in this juriſdiction, and even to the city of Plata itſelf, as they have more than once attempted to ſurpriſe it.

TOMSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Tobolſk, on the Tom. The foundation of Tomſk was laid in the reign of the czar Feodor Iwannowitz, who built an oſtrog on this ſpot; and this happened about 20 years before the building of the town of Kuſnetſk. Several nations of these countries having been reduced by force of arms, and others voluntarily ſubmitted to the Ruſſians, the oſtrog was by degrees converted into a fort, and the fort in time increaſed to a town; which, at preſent contains above 2000 houſes within its circuit. It was at firſt, next to Tobolſk, the ſecond principal city in Siberia, and continued ſo for ſome years. On the higheſt part of the town ſtands a ſmall wooden caſtle, defended by 14 pieces of cannon; and in it are a cathedral built of wood, the woiwode's houſe, the governor's chancery, and an arſenal. Near the fort ſtand ſeveral private houſes, and a church. The lower part of the town is the moſt populous. This town is extremely well ſituated for commerce, and the inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade. It lies on the road from Eniſeiſk, and all the towns in the eaſtern and northern parts of Siberia; ſo that all caravans going to and from China paſs every year through this town, beſides a caravan or two going from the country of the Calmuks. Here are indeed all kinds of tradeſmen and artificers; but they are extremely indolent and ſlothful: 540 miles E. Tobolſk, and 168 NNE. Kolivan. Long. 103. E. Ferro. Lat. 56. 30. N.

TONGATABOO ISLAND, one of the Friendly Iſlands, in the South Pacific Ocean, firſt diſcovered by Taſman, who called it Amſterdam, ſeen by captain Cook, in the year 1773, and viſited by him again in 1777. Tongataboo, or Tonga, is about 20 leagues in circuit, ſomewhat oblong, though by much broadeſt at the eaſt end; and its greateſt length from eaſt to weſt. The ſouth ſhore is ſtraight, and conſiſts of coral rocks, eight or ten feet high, terminating perpendicular, except in ſome places, where it is interrupted by ſmall ſandy beaches; on which, at low water, a range of black rocks may be ſeen. The weſt end is not above five or ſix miles broad, but has a ſhore ſomewhat like that of the ſouth ſide; whereas the whole north ſide is environed with ſhoals and iſlands, and the ſhore within them low and ſandy. The eaſt ſide or end is moſt probably like the ſouth; as the ſhore begins to aſſume a rocky appearance towards the north-eaſt point, though not above ſeven or eight feet high. The iſland may, with the greateſt propriety, be called a low one, as the trees, on the weſt part, where captain Cook lay at anchor, only appeared; and the only eminent part, which can be ſeen from a ſhip, is the ſouth-eaſt point; though many gentle riſing and declining grounds are obſervable by one who is aſhore. The general appearance of the country is great fertility. At a diſtance, the ſurface ſeems entirely clothed with trees of various ſizes; ſome of which are very large. But, above the reſt, the tall cocoa-palms always raiſed their tufted heads; and are a very conſiderable ornament to any country that produces them. The boogo, which is a ſpecies of fig, with narrow pointed leaves, is the largeſt ſized tree of the iſland. The winds are, for the moſt part, from ſome point between ſouth and eaſt; and when moderate, are commonly attended with fine weather. The baſis of the iſland, as far as he could obſerve, is entirely a coral rock, which is the only ſort that preſents itſelf on the ſhore. Of cultivated fruits, the principal are plantains; of which they have 15 different ſorts or varieties; bread-fruit; two ſorts of fruit found at Otaheite, and known there under the name of jambo and eevee, the latter a kind of plumb; and vaſt numbers of ſhaddocks, which, however, are found as often in a natural ſtate, as planted. The roots are yams, of which are two ſorts; one black, and ſo large, that it often weighs 20 or 30 pounds; the other white and long, ſeldom weighing a pound; a large root, called kappe; one not unlike our white potatoes, called mawhaha; the taro, or coccos of other places; and another named jeejee. The only quadrupeds, beſides hogs, are a few rats, and ſome dogs, which are not natives of the place, but produced from ſome left by captain Cook, in the year 1773, and by others got from Feejee. Fowls, which are of a large breed, are domeſticated here. Amongſt the birds, are parrots, ſomewhat ſmaller than the common grey ones, of an indifferent green on the back and wings, the tail bluiſh, and the reſt of a ſooty or chocolate brown; parroquets not larger than a ſparrow, of a fine yellowiſh green, with bright azure on the crown of the head, and the throat and belly red; beſides another ſort as large as a dove, with a blue crown and thighs, the throat and under part of the head crimſon, as alſo part of the belly, and the reſt a beautiful green; cuckoos; king fiſhers; and a bird of the thruſh kind. The other land birds are rails, fly-catchers, and 3 ſorts of pigeons. Of water-fowl, and ſuch as frequent the ſea, are ducks, blue and white herons, tropic birds, noddies, and white terns. The only noxious or diſguſting animals of the reptile or inſect tribe, are ſea-ſnakes, ſcorpions, and centipedes. The ſea abounds with fiſh, though the variety is leſs than might be expected. The moſt common ſorts are mullets, ſeveral ſorts of parrot-fiſh, ſilver-fiſh, old wives, and albicores; ſome ſharks, rays, pipe-fiſh, a ſort of pike, and ſome curious devil-fiſh. The many reefs and ſhoals on the north ſide of the iſland, afford ſhelter for an endleſs variety of ſhell-fiſh; amongſt which are many that are eſteemed precious in Europe, ſuch as the hammer oyſter, of which, however, none could be obtained entire: a large indentated oyſter, and ſeveral others, but none of the common ſort; panamas, cones, a ſort of gigantic cockle, found alſo in the Eaſt Indies, pearl-ſhell oyſters, and many others. There are, likewiſe, ſeveral ſorts of ſea eggs, and many very fine ſtar-fiſh, beſides a conſiderable variety of corals, amongſt which are two red ſorts, the one moſt elegantly branched, the other tubulous: And there is no leſs variety amongſt the crabs and cray-fiſh, which are very numerous. To which may be added, ſeveral ſorts of ſponge, the ſea-hare, and the like. Long. 185. 14. E. Greenwich. Lat. 21. 9. S.

TONGEREN, or Tongres, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Liege. This town is ancient, and was formerly governed by dukes. In the year 454, it was entirely ruined by Attila, king of the Huns; and likewiſe by the Normans, in the 9th century, during the reign of Charles the Bald, emperor, and king of France. In the year 1428, it was treated with as much ſeverity, by Charles the Hardy, duke of Burgundy, who laid it entirely waſte, and buried in the ruins a fountain of medicinal water, mentioned by Pliny. This fountain was diſcovered and re-eſtabliſhed in the year 1690: the waters are chalybeate. The collegiate church of Tongres is very ancient; they ſay it was the firſt on this ſide the Alps, built by St. Materne, who was ſent by St. Peter to preach the goſpel in Lower Germany, and became the firſt biſhop of Tongres; which was erected into a dioceſe. He had nine ſucceſſors, who were at the ſame time biſhops of Treves. St. Servais, the tenth biſhop, transferred the ſee to Maeſtricht, in the year 312, from whence St. Hubert removed it to Liege, in the year 709. It has three pariſh churches, and ſeveral religious houſes. On the 21ſt of November, 1673, the French pillaged it, and burned ſeveral houſes. In the year 1677, they returned with greater fury, under the command of lieutenant general Calvo, governor of Maeſtricht; entering the city, on the 28th of Auguſt, about midnight, they committed a thouſand ſacrileges and inſolencies, without regard to age or ſex, and ſet fire to the town-houſe, the churches, ſeveral convents, and above 600 houſes. On the 19th of September following, they came to burn the reſt of the city, which had eſcaped their fury, which was again repeated on the 4th, 10th, and 18th of October; the principal reaſon given for this cruel treatment was, that the inhabitants had refuſed their contributions, and aſſiſted the troops of the allies: 9 miles NNW. TONNINGE

TONNINGEN, a ſea-port town of Denmark, in the duchy of Sleſwick, ſituated on a peninſula, formed by the Eider. In the year 1613, the harbour was enlarged and repaired at a conſiderable expence. In the year 1675, during the war with Sweden, the duke, purſuant to the treaty of Rendſburg, was obliged to cede this town to the king, who cauſed the fortifications of it to be demoliſhed. But when the duke recovered the town and the whole country in the year 1679, they were repaired and improved with additional works; ſo that when king Frederick IV. beſieged it, he was not able to make himſelf maſter of it. In the year 1713, Stenbock, the Swediſh general, having by the duke's conſent been admitted into the town, the king of Denmark with the aſſiſtance of his allies plied it ſo vigorouſly, that the Swedes were obliged to ſurrender themſelves priſoners of war; and in the year 1714, the king having got poſſeſſion of the town, the fortifications were demoliſhed a ſecond time. Tonningen has been in a defenceleſs condition ever ſince that time. It had once a noble caſtle, but that was likewiſe demoliſhed by the king's orders, in the year 1734: 57 miles NNW. Hamburg, and 24 WSW. Sleſwick. Long. 9. 7. E. Greenwich. Lat. 54. 23. N.

TONOUWAH, a kingdom of Africa, ſituated to the weſt of Dahomay.

TONQUIN, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north and eaſt by China, on the ſouth by a part of the Eaſtern Indian Sea, called the bay of Tonquin, and Cochin China, and on the weſt by Laos, about 350 miles in length, and 220 in its greateſt breadth. The climate is reckoned mild and temperate: they have only two winds, which commonly prevail, the north and the ſouth: the former blows from June or July to January, and the latter from January to July. The rainy ſeaſon begins about April, and continues till Auguſt, and is the moſt unhealthy part of the year. The country lying low and flat, is frequently overflowed by violent rains, ſo as to do great injury to the harveſt; and on the other hand, if the rains be not in ſufficient quantity to nouriſh the rice, a famine is the conſequence. Towards China, Tonquin is defended by an impenetrable ridge of mountains, which are covered with vaſt foreſts of trees, and filled with elephants, deer, tigers, and other wild creatures; whilſt the reſt of the country is beautifully variegated with fertile hills and vallies, and interſected with a great number of rivers; among which father Tiſſanier, a Jeſuit miſſionary, reckons twenty-eight, which empty themſelves into the ſea. From theſe and other inferior rivers which fall into them, the inhabitants cut a vaſt number of canals, not ſo much for the ſake of commerce as to fertilize their numerous plains and paſture grounds. The country is divided into eight provinces, or cantons. Cacnao is the only city in the kingdom. That of Domea, though the next in rank, is hardly worth notice, being a large ſcattered town or rather village; and ſo we may ſay of all the reſt. The greateſt part of the fruit trees in Tonquin are affirmed to exceed all the reſt in Aſia in the flavour, beauty, and excellency of their fruit. The betel, in ſuch vogue all over India, is here found in great plenty, and offered as a great compliment even to ſtrangers. Theſe woods abound with the ſame ſpecies of wild beaſts found in other parts of India and China; and their elephants are reckoned the largeſt and nimbleſt in all Aſia. They have plenty and great variety of fowl, both wild and tame, which conſtitute their uſual food at all their feaſtings, though at other times they eat ſparingly of fleſh, contenting themſelves with their boiled rice, herbs, roots, dried fiſh, and pickled eggs. Their common drink is a kind of tea, which they call chia bang, or chaw-bang; the leaves of which, boiled in water, yield a tincture of a reddiſh brown, not unlike the ordinary Chineſe bohea. They drink it without ſugar; and in their merry meetings frequently mix it with arrack, and drink to intoxication. The Tonquineſe are generally of a tawny colour, their faces are oval, and moſtly flattiſh; their hair is black, long, and lank. They are at great pains to dye their teeth black; and whilſt the operation laſts, they take no other nouriſhment than ſome chaw or other ſuch liquid, and that but ſparingly, leſt ſome of the dye, which is of a poiſonous nature, ſhould mix with their food, and endanger their health. They are naturally healthy and robuſt, nimble and active, dexterous and ingenious in their ſeveral manufactures, ſuch as that of ſilk, cotton, lacquering, great quantities of all which are yearly exported. Nevertheleſs their country is ſo very populous, that vaſt numbers of its inhabitants labour under the moſt extreme poverty, for want of employment: but what contributes principally to their indigence, is the univerſal itch of gaming, which runs among them all, rich and poor, maſters and ſervants, while they have any thing left to hazard; and, when money, goods, and their very cloaths are loſt, they will ſtake even their wives and children. The dreſs of the women differs little from that of the men; but it is rather more grave, excepting on grand feſtivals, when they ſtrive to adorn themſelves with the richeſt habits and ornaments; on other occaſions, their women affect much gravity in their dreſs and behaviour. The Tonquineſe do not trade for themſelves, nor export any of their merchandize in their own bottoms, nor have they indeed any veſſels fit for thoſe rough ſeas, ſo that moſt of their wares are imported and exported by ſtrangers. Thoſe imported are ſalt-petre, ſulphur, broad-cloths, and other woollen ſtuffs, ſpices, lead, guns and caſh; we do not find that they have any money of their own, but make uſe of that which is brought thither by ſtrangers, together with the ſmall copper coin which they have from China, and which they exchange with them at a great diſadvantage for foreign ſilver. Their inland commerce is moſtly carried on by water, and by the help of their numerous rivers and canals, and of the many markets and fairs which are appointed by the government; the moſt conſiderable of which are thoſe held every new and full moon at their metropolis of Cachao. Other towns have likewiſe their fairs and markets, but with this difference, that ſix of theſe are joined together in one charter, and hold their own each in their turn. The Tonquineſe have adopted the two chief religions which reign in China, that of their great philoſopher Confucius, and that of Fo, which was brought from India into China. Chriſtianity was planted here in the year 1626, by the Jeſuit Baldinoty, and met with ſuch ſucceſs, that in four years the government thought fit to baniſh him and his colleagues to Macao. This ſeverity did not deter the ſociety from ſending three new miſſionaries the very next year, who made ſuch progreſs among thoſe idolaters, that above 80,000 were converted before the year 1639, and they had already built above 200 churches at their own charge, in the ſeveral provinces of the kingdom. This aſtoniſhing ſucceſs proved their ruin. After ſeveral dreadful perſecutions raiſed againſt them by the government, an edict was at length iſſued from the king and council, in the year 1721, by which the Chriſtian religion was utterly proſcribed; the miſſionaries and their catechiſts were impriſoned, and put to ſundry tortures and deaths; others condemned to attend the elephants, a ſlavery worſe than that of the gallies, their churches were all demoliſhed, or turned to profane uſes; the profeſſion of Chriſtianity was forbidden under the ſevereſt penalties; and all the frontiers and avenues were diligently guarded by the ſoldiery, to prevent any more European preachers from entering the Tonquineſe dominions. Tonquin had been heretofore ſubject to the vaſt empire of China, when a famous robber, called Din, put himſelf at the head of a body of men of his own profeſſion, into whom he inſpired the reſolution of taking up arms, and throwing off the yoke of all ſervitude. He ſucceeded; and thoſe whom he engaged in the revolt, out of gratitude, placed the crown upon his head. The happineſs which the Tonquineſe flattered themſelves to have acquired by their independence, became to them a ſource of miſeries and cruel wars ſtill more pernicious than their former ſubjection to the Chineſe emperors. For ſeven centuries after their revolt, they were almoſt continually in arms, one againſt another, in ſupport of the different factions which ambition and jealouſy had raiſed up among them; and the families on the throne have been already changed ſix times. The iſſue of the laſt civil war was a treaty, by which the competitor of the king Le, leſs deſirous of the title of ſovereign than of real power and royal authority, left him all the external ſplendor of a monarch, on condition that he ſhould have the abſolute command in the armies, with the greateſt part of the revenues of the kingdom, and that his deſcendants ſhould ſucceed to the ſame privileges. By virtue of this agreement, there are two ſorts of kings; he who receives all the honours of royalty is called Bua, and the Chouah has all its advantages.

TOOBOUAI ISLAND, one of the Society Iſlands, in the South Pacific Ocean. Its greateſt extent, in any direction, excluſive of the reef, is not above five or ſix miles. On the north-weſt ſide the reef appears in detached pieces, between which the ſea ſeems to break upon the ſhore. Small as the iſland is, there are hills in it of a conſiderable elevation. At the foot of the hills is a narrow border of flat land, running quite round it, edged with a white ſand beach. The hills are covered with graſs, or ſome other herbage, except a few rocky cliffs at one part, with patches of trees interſperſed to their ſummits; but the plantations are more numerous in ſome of the vallies, and the flat border is quite covered with high, ſtrong trees, whoſe different kinds could not be diſcerned, except ſome cocoa palms, and a few of the etoa. According to the information of ſome men whom captain Cook ſaw in the canoes, their iſland is ſtocked with hogs and fowls, and produces the ſeveral fruits and roots that are found at the other iſlands in this part of the Pacific Ocean. The language is the ſame as that ſpoken at Otaheite. Long. 210. 37. E. Greenwich. Lat. 23. 25. S.

TORTOSA, a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia, ſituated near the Ebro, about five leagues from its mouth; the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Saragoſſa. It is ſaid to have been founded 2000 years before the Chriſtian æra: but the proofs of this illuſtrious origin are unfortunately loſt: Scipio gave it the name of Dordoſa, and made it a municipal city. Among the numerous and trifling combats between the Spaniards and the Moors, there was one in which the women of Tortoſa ſignalized themſelves. They courageouſly mounted the ramparts of their city, and performed ſuch prodigies of valour, that Raimond Berenger, the laſt count of Barcelona, inſtituted for them, in 1170, the military order of the hacha, or flambeau. They merited and obtained the ſame day ſeveral honourable privileges, which exiſt not at preſent; they have, however, preſerved the right of precedency in matrimonial ceremonies, let the rank of the men be ever ſo diſtinguiſhed. The moſt remarkable buildings are the cathedral and the caſtle; the latter of which is a mile ſquare, and in a ſtate of decay; and only ſerves as a place of reſidence for a governor: 81 miles SE. Saragoſſa, and 77 SW. Barcelona. Long. 17. 12. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 40. 47. N.

TORTUGA SALADA, an iſland in the Caribbean Sea, about twelve leagues in circumference; the eaſt end is full of rugged and broken rocks, which ſtretch themſelves a little way out to ſea. At the ſouth-eaſt part i an indifferent good road for ſhipping, and much frequented in peaceable times by merchantmen, which come hither to lade ſalt, from May to Auguſt: for at the eaſt end is a large ſalt-pond, within 200 paces of the ſea. Near the weſt extremity of the iſland, on the ſouth ſide, there is a ſmall harbour, and ſome freſh water. That end of the iſland is full of ſhrubby trees, but the eaſt end is rocky, and bare of trees, producing only coarſ graſs. Upon it are ſome goats, but not many. The turtles or tortoiſe come into the ſandy bays to lay their eggs, and from thence the iſland ha its name. There is no anchoring any where but in the road where the ſalt-ponds are, or in the harbour. Long. 64. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 11. 7. N.

TOULON, a city and ſeaport of France, and capital of the department of the Var, ſtrongly fortified. Before the revolution, it was the ſee of a biſhop, and, beſides the cathedral and other pariſh churches, contained nine convents, a ſeminary, and a college. The old and new harbour lie contiguous, and by means of a canal, communicate with one another, both having an outlet into the ſpacious outer harbour, which is naturally almoſt of a circular figure, and very large, being ſurrounded with hills. The entrance on both ſides is defended by a fort, with ſtrong batteries. The new harbour, which is a work of Louis XIV. is well defended by batteries, and round it ſtands the arſenal, where every man-of-war has its own particular ſtore-houſe, but the guns and cordage are laid up ſeparate. In it are ſpacious working houſes for black-ſmiths, joiners, carpenters, lock-ſmiths, carvers, &c. The rope-houſe is built wholly of freeſtone, being 320 toiſes in length, with three arched walks, in which as many parties of rope-makers may work at the ſame time. The general magazine here, which ſupplies whatever may be wanting in the particular ſtore-houſes for ſingle ſhips, contains an immenſe quantity of all kinds of ſtores, diſpoſed in the greateſt order and conveniency. The cannon foundery here is conſiderable. In the year 1707, the duke of Savoy and prince Eugene laid ſiege to this city, but without ſucceſs. In the year 1721, it ſuffered greatly by the plague. In the month of Auguſt, 1793, the people of Toulon, and the French vice-admiral Trugoff, entered into a negociation with the Engliſh admiral, lord Hood, who was then cruiſing in the Mediterranean, and he took poſſeſſion both of the town and of the ſhipping, in the name of Louis XVII. and under the expreſs and poſitive ſtipulation, that he was to aſſiſt in reſtoring the conſtitution of 1789. Great expectations were formed on this occaſion; and general O'Hara was ſent with troops from Gibraltar, being appointed, under the king of England's commiſſion, governor and commander in chief; the republicans were not negligent in attempting to recover a place of ſo much conſequence, and ſoon ſucceeded. General O'Hara was wounded, and taken priſoner, and the city and port abandoned. On the 19th of December, the town was bombarded from noon till ten o'clock in the evening; when the allies, and part of the inhabitants, having firſt ſet fire to the town and ſhipping, precipitated their flight. Two chaloupes, filled with the fugitives, were ſunk to the bottom by the batteries. The precipitation with which the evacuation was effected, cauſed a great part of the ſhips and property to fall into the hands of the French, and was attended with the moſt melancholy conſequences to the wretched inhabitants. Of 31 ſhips of the line, which the Engliſh found at Toulon, 13 were left behind, 9 were burned at Toulon, and 1 at Leghorn, and 4 lord Hood had previouſly ſent away to the French ports, Breſt and Rochfort, with 5000 republican ſeamen, whom he was afraid to truſt: 7½ poſts E. Marſeilles, and 105¼ SSE. Paris. Long. 23. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 9. N.

TOULON EN CHAROLLOIS, a town of France, in the department of the Saône and Loire, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Charolles, near the Arroux river: 5½ leagues NW. Charolles, and 5 NE. Bourbon Lancy. Long. 21. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 41. N.

TOULOUSE, a town of France, and capital of the department of the Upper Garonne, on the Garonne. Before the revolution, the capital of Languedoc, ſee of an archbiſhop, and ſecond parliament of France: it is reckoned for ſize next to Paris; the ſtreets are moſtly broad, and the houſes are built of brick. It is not, however, very populous; and, though ſo finely ſituated, its trade is inconſiderable, the principal article being Spaniſh wool. The univerſity here was founded in the year 1228. The town-houſe is a ſpacious building, and called the capitolium, whence the aldermen are termed capitouls; and amongſt other curioſities preſerved here, are 15 large parchment folios, delicately written and illuminated, being annals of the city, commencing from the year 1288, and annually continued by the eldeſt capitoul. Theſe were drawn up originally in Latin, but, under Francis I. were altered to French. The three firſt volumes are principally filled with the portraits and names of the capitouls, and the following contain all the memorable events and tranſactions throughout the whole kingdom. Here is alſo an academy of the ſciences and liberal arts. At half an hour's diſtance below the city, the celebrated canal of Languedoc joins the Garonne, which here becomes navigable. In this city are made carpets, but of little value, together with ſome ſlight ſilk and woollen ſtuffs: 34 poſts SE. Bourdeaux, and 85½ S. Paris. Long. 19. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 35. N.

Tours is the capital. This province had formerly counts of its own. In the year 1044, it was taken by the counts of Anjou; in 1202, united with the crown; and in 1356, raiſed to a dukedom and peerage. It has frequently been granted to the royal children; and after the death of Francis, duke of Alençon, brother to Henry III. was again united to the crown, ſince which it has never been alienated. It was governed by laws of its own, but with a right of appeal to the parliament of Paris.

TOURNAY, a city of Flanders, on the Scheldt, conſidered as the moſt ancient town of Belgic Gaul, being founded 600 years before Chriſt, and anciently the capital of the Nervij. It was lately the capital of a diſtrict to which it gave name, and the ſee of a biſhop, erected in the 5th century. This city has often been taken and laid waſte in the different wars between the French, Engliſh, and Flemings. In the year 1513, it was taken by the Engliſh, and continued in their poſſeſſion till the year 1518, when it was reſtored to the French, from whom it had been taken. Three years after it was taken by the emperor Charles V. who erected it into a lordſhip, in favour of his ſon Philip of Spain. In the year 1667, in a time of profound peace, it was beſieged by the troops of Louis XIV. and two days after the trenches were opened, the marquis de Trazegnis, the governor, was obliged to ſurrender at diſcretion. By the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, it was ceded to France, and made one of the beſt fortified towns in Flanders. In the year 1709, prince Eugene and the duke of Marlborough, finding the marſhal Villars too advantageouſly poſted in the camp near Lens, inveſted Tournay, and beſieged it in form. The trenches were opened on the 7th of July, and the attack began on the 13th; on the 28th the town capitulated, being in want of proviſions. The citadel held out till the 3d of September, when the garriſon ſurrendered priſoners of war. By the peace of Utrecht, in the year 1713, the States General remained maſters of the military, and the emperor of the civil government. In the year 1745, after the battle of Fontenoy it was taken by the French, but ceded to the Auſtrians, by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, in the year 1748. The late emperor Joſeph ordered the fortifications to be deſtroyed. In the year 1792, an action took place between the Auſtrians and the French, near Tournay, in which M. Dillon commanded the latter, and being ſuſpected of treachery was murdered at Lille, by the ſoldiers. On the 10th of May, 1794, the duke of York was aſſailed near Tournay, by the republican forces, in different columns, to the amount of 30,000 men. The attack began at day-break, when the French attempted to turn the right flank of the combined army; but were driven back by the Auſtrian regiment of Kaunitz, which was poſted in a wood to cover the army on that ſide. The French then directed their efforts againſt the duke's centre, upon which they advanced, under a heavy cannonade, with great reſolution. An occaſion however ſoon preſented itſelf of attacking them in their right flank, when they were compelled to retreat. In this engagement the French are computed to have loſt 3000 men; an eſtimate probably over-rated. In the year 1794, on the general evacuation of Flanders by the allies, the French entered Tournay, where they found 20 guns ſpiked, 10,000 muſket-balls, a large quantity of gun-powder, ſeveral magazines, and 14 barges laden with ammuntion: 3 poſts E. Lille, and 31 N. Paris.

TRANSYLVANIA (Principality of), a country of Europe, bounded on the north by Hungary, Poland, and Moldavia; on the east by Moldavia; on the south by Walachia, and the bannat of Temeswar, and on the west by Hungary. The form is nearly oval, about 400 miles in circumference. It is surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains, and is itself mountainous and woody; the mountains run from north to south, and branch off likewise east and west, and terminate at the centre, in hills covered with vineyards, and abundant in minerals. The air is generally warm, but more wholesome than that of Hungary; the soil is fertile, abounding in corn, wine, cattle, and rich pastures: among the minerals are gold, silver, copper, iron, quicksilver, cinnabar, antimony, sulphur, vitriol, rock-salt, salt-petre, ochre, &c. The principal quadrupeds are buffaloes, horses, wild asses, elks, bears, wild boars, linxes, chamois, martens, ermines, and beavers. The inhabitants are composed of different nations: Hungarians, Sikli or Scythian Huns, Saxons, Walachians, Armenians, Rascians, Bulgarians, and Greeks; to which may be added Jews and Cingars, who live in tents, and lead a vagabond life like gipſies. This country is by the Germans called Siebenburgen, and by the Hungarians Erdely. It was anciently a part of Dacia, and conquered by Trajan, it became a Roman province. It afterwards fell into the hands of the Goths, Huns, and afterwards the Hungarians. In the year 1004, it was firſt made a province of Hungary, and continued under the government of a waywode to the year 1526, when two rival princes contended for this principality; one of them was ſupported by the German Emperor, and the other by the Turk; whereupon this country became the ſeat of war for many years. The princes of the houſe of Ragotſki were at the head of the Proteſtant faction, and ſupported by the Turks, but being at length obliged to quit Tranſylvania by the Auſtrians, Ragotſki fled for refuge into Turkey; and at the treaty of Carlowitz in 1699, this country was confirmed to the houſe of Auſtria by the Turks. The government of Tranſylvania is wholly different from that of Hungary; and, by the joint conſent of prince and people, formed into an ariſtocratical government; and, ſince the year 1722, rendered hereditary to the princes and princeſſes of the houſe of Auſtria. Formerly the prince of Tranſylvania ſucceeded to the government by free election, but ſince the year 1772 by inheritance; and though his power is connected with that of the king of Hungary, and archduke of Auſtria, yet his government and privileges differ from both. The ſtates of Tranſylvania, with reſpect to the number of its nations, are divided into Hungarians, Siculi and Saxons; with reſpect to its different religions, into Catholics, Calviniſts, and Lutherans; and formerly alſo, into Unitarians: but politically, after the example of Hungary, into prelates, nobility, gentry, and royal towns. The magnates conſiſt of the great officers of ſtate, the counts and barons. The gentry are Hungarians and Siculi, but the royal towns Saxons only. The principality of Tranſylvania is governed, in the name of the prince and nobility, by the diet, the office of ſtate, the royal government, the exchequer, the aſſembly of Hungarian counts, the tribunals of juſtice, and the magiſtrates of the Siculi and Saxons. The diets meet by ſummons from the prince at Hermanſtadt. The revenue ariſes from the contributions, cuſtoms, metals, minerals, rock-ſalt, royal demeſnes, eſcheats, and confiſcations; and are levied by the treaſury. Tranſylvania formerly could bring from 80,000 to 90,000 men into the field; but at preſent the whole force of that principality conſiſts of ſix regiments, under a commander in chief, for the defence of the country.

TREBISOND, or Taraboſan, a city of Aſiatic Turkey, with a harbour, on the Black Sea; founded by a Greek colony of Sinope, deſcended from the Mileſians. From the Romans it was taken by the Scythians, or Tartars, in the time of Valerian. The Greek emperors became afterwards maſters of Trebiſond, and erected it into a principality; Alexis Comnenes took poſſeſſion of it in the year 1204. When the French and Venetians made themſelves maſters of Conſtantinople, this principality, or, as it is ſometimes called, empire, continued till the year 1462, when it was taken by Mahomet II. who carried David Commenes and all his family priſoners to Conſtantinople, where they were moſtly put to death. The town of Trebiſond is built on the ſea ſide, at the foot of a little hill, pretty ſteep; its walls are almoſt ſquare, high embattled, and though they are not of the firſt ages, yet it is very probable they ſtand upon the foundations of the ancient incloſure, which got this town the name of Trapezium. The preſent walls are built of the ruins of the ancient edifices, as appears by old pieces of marble ſet in ſeveral parts, and whoſe inſcriptions are not legible, becauſe they are too high. The town is large, and not well peopled; there are more woods and gardens in it than houſes; and thoſe houſes that are there, though well built, are but one ſtory high. The caſtle, which is pretty large, but very much neglected, is ſituated upon a flat rock, and its ditches are cut in the rock. The inſcription that is on the gate of this caſtle, the arch whereof is a ſemi-circle, ſhows that the emperor Juſtinian repaired the edifices of the town. The port of Trebiſond, called Platana, is to the eaſt of the town. The emperor Adrian cauſed it to be repaired, as we are informed by Arrian. This port is now proper for nothing but ſaiques. The mole, which the Genoeſe are ſaid to have built there, is almoſt deſtroyed, and the Turks give themſelves very little trouble about repairing ſuch works: 150 miles NNE. Sivas, and 220 ENE. Erivan. Lat. 41. N.

TREMECEN, or Tlemſam, a city of Africa, and capital of the weſtern diviſion or province of Algiers, which is governed by a bey or viceroy; ſituated on a riſing ground, below ſome rocky precipices, from which iſſue a number of ſprings. In the weſt part of the city is a large ſquare baſon, of Mooriſh workmanſhip, 200 yards long, and about half as broad. The inhabitants entertain a tradition, that formerly the kings of Tremecen took here the diverſion of the water, whilſt their ſubjects were taught the art of rowing and navigation. But the water of the fountain being eaſily turned off from its ordinary courſe, this baſon might have been rather deſigning for a reſervoir, in caſe of a ſiege: not to mention the conſtant uſe of it at other times, in preſerving a quantity of water, ſufficient to refreſh the beautiful gardens and plantations, that lie below it. Moſt of the walls of Tremecen have been built, or rather moulded in frames, a method of building uſed by the Africans and Spaniards. The mortar of which they conſiſt, is made up of ſand, lime, and gravel; which, by being at firſt well tempered and wrought together, has attained a ſtrength and ſolidity, not inferior to ſtone. The ſeveral ſtages and removes of theſe frames, are ſtill obſervable, ſome of which are at leaſt 100 yards in length, and two yards in height and thickneſs, whereby may be eſtimated the immenſe quantity of this compoſt, that was made uſe of at one time. About the year 1670, Haſſan, then dey of Algiers, laid moſt of this city in ruins, as a puniſhment for the diſaffection of the inhabitants; ſo that there is not remaining above one-ſixth part of the old Tremecen, which, when entire, might have been four miles in circuit. Among the eaſtern part of theſe ruins, we meet with ſeveral ſhafts of pillars, and other fragments, of Roman antiquities; and in the walls of a moſque, made out of theſe old materials, we have a number of altars, dedicated to the dii manes: 50 miles SW. and Cingars, who live in tents, and lead a vagabond life like gipſies. This country is by the Germans called Siebenburgen, and by the Hungarians Erdely. It was anciently a part of Dacia, and conquered by Trajan, it became a Roman province. It afterwards fell into the hands of the Goths, Huns, and afterwards the Hungarians. In the year 1004, it was firſt made a province of Hungary, and continued under the government of a waywode to the year 1526, when two rival princes contended for this principality; one of them was ſupported by the German Emperor, and the other by the Turk; whereupon this country became the ſeat of war for many years. The princes of the houſe of Ragotſki were at the head of the Proteſtant faction, and ſupported by the Turks, but being at length obliged to quit Tranſylvania by the Auſtrians, Ragotſki fled for refuge into Turkey; and at the treaty of Carlowitz in 1699, this country was confirmed to the houſe of Auſtria by the Turks. The government of Tranſylvania is wholly different from that of Hungary; and, by the joint conſent of prince and people, formed into an ariſtocratical government; and, ſince the year 1722, rendered hereditary to the princes and princeſſes of the houſe of Auſtria. Formerly the prince of Tranſylvania ſucceeded to the government by free election, but ſince the year 1772 by inheritance; and though his power is connected with that of the king of Hungary, and archduke of Auſtria, yet his government and privileges differ from both. The ſtates of Tranſylvania, with reſpect to the number of its nations, are divided into Hungarians, Siculi and Saxons; with reſpect to its different religions, into Catholics, Calviniſts, and Lutherans; and formerly alſo, into Unitarians: but politically, after the example of Hungary, into prelates, nobility, gentry, and royal towns. The magnates conſiſt of the great officers of ſtate, the counts and barons. The gentry are Hungarians and Siculi, but the royal towns Saxons only. The principality of Tranſylvania is governed, in the name of the prince and nobility, by the diet, the office of ſtate, the royal government, the exchequer, the aſſembly of Hungarian counts, the tribunals of juſtice, and the magiſtrates of the Siculi and Saxons. The diets meet by ſummons from the prince at Hermanſtadt. The revenue ariſes from the contributions, cuſtoms, metals, minerals, rock-ſalt, royal demeſnes, eſcheats, and confiſcations; and are levied by the treaſury. Tranſylvania formerly could bring from 80,000 to 90,000 men into the field; but at preſent the whole force of that principality conſiſts of ſix regiments, under a commander in chief, for the defence of the country.

TREBISOND, or Taraboſan, a city of Aſiatic Turkey, with a harbour, on the Black Sea; founded by a Greek colony of Sinope, deſcended from the Mileſians. From the Romans it was taken by the Scythians, or Tartars, in the time of Valerian. The Greek emperors became afterwards maſters of Trebiſond, and erected it into a principality; Alexis Comnenes took poſſeſſion of it in the year 1204. When the French and Venetians made themſelves maſters of Conſtantinople, this principality, or, as it is ſometimes called, empire, continued till the year 1462, when it was taken by Mahomet II. who carried David Commenes and all his family priſoners to Conſtantinople, where they were moſtly put to death. The town of Trebiſond is built on the ſea ſide, at the foot of a little hill, pretty ſteep; its walls are almoſt ſquare, high embattled, and though they are not of the firſt ages, yet it is very probable they ſtand upon the foundations of the ancient incloſure, which got this town the name of Trapezium. The preſent walls are built of the ruins of the ancient edifices, as appears by old pieces of marble ſet in ſeveral parts, and whoſe inſcriptions are not legible, becauſe they are too high. The town is large, and not well peopled; there are more woods and gardens in it than houſes; and thoſe houſes that are there, though well built, are but one ſtory high. The caſtle, which is pretty large, but very much neglected, is ſituated upon a flat rock, and its ditches are cut in the rock. The inſcription that is on the gate of this caſtle, the arch whereof is a ſemi-circle, ſhows that the emperor Juſtinian repaired the edifices of the town. The port of Trebiſond, called Platana, is to the eaſt of the town. The emperor Adrian cauſed it to be repaired, as we are informed by Arrian. This port is now proper for nothing but ſaiques. The mole, which the Genoeſe are ſaid to have built there, is almoſt deſtroyed, and the Turks give themſelves very little trouble about repairing ſuch works: 150 miles NNE. Sivas, and 220 ENE. Erivan. Lat. 41. N.

TRENT, a city and biſhop's ſee of Germany in the county of Tyrol, ſituated in a vally on the Adige, or Etſch, memorable for a grand council held here, from 1545 to 1563. The biſhop is ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Goritz. It contains no ſtreets exactly regular, and the houſes are in general old. The palace is large, but in the antique ſtyle. Beſides the cathedral, there are three pariſh churches, a college, and ſome convents: 55 miles N. Mantua, and 65 NW. Venice. Long. 28. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. N.—On the 5th of September, 1796, this city was taken by the French.

TRENT, a princely biſhopric of Germany, ſituated in the Tyroleſe, in which this ancient biſhopric was gradually increaſed, by the liberality of the ancient Roman emperors. On the arrival of the houſe of Auſtria to the county of Tyrol, it reinſtated the biſhopric in whatever it had loſt in the preceding times; whence alſo biſhop Albrecht, in the year 1365, gave a brief to Albrecht and Leopold, dukes of Auſtria, in which, as counts of Tyrol, he acknowledged them to be hereditary vogts of his church, and, on the other hand, promiſed them his aſſiſtance. Such ſtipulations were alſo made under the emperors Frederick IV. Maximilian I. and Ferdinand I. In the year 1511, it was ſtipulated between the archhouſe of Auſtria and the biſhop of Trent, that the biſhop ſhould appear at the diet of Tyrol, and at other meetings, by deputies, and conſult concerning the welfare and ſecurity of the country; and alſo that, for this end, it ſhould contribute its ſhare of the taxes and impoſts raiſed on it; but that the houſe of Auſtria, as ſovereign of Tyrol, ſhould, on occaſion of extraordinary taxes laid by the emperor, anſwer for the biſhopric, Brixen excepted; which ſtipulation was ratified in the receſs of the empire, at Augſburg, in the year 1548. But, though the biſhop of Trent is thus held by the archducal houſe of Auſtria, as a land-ſtate, yet he enjoys, as an immediate prince of the empire, both a ſeat and voice at the diets, in the college of princes of the empire, and likewiſe actually ſends deputies to the diet of the empire. This prelate is alſo a ſtate of the circle of Auſtria. As a biſhop, he is ſubject to the archbiſhop of Goritz.

TREUENBRIETZEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Middle Mark of Brandenburg. This town was ſurrounded with walls in the year 1296. It was at firſt ſimply called Brietzen, but for its fidelity to the marggrave Louis the Roman, was honoured with the epithet of Treuen, or faithful. In the year 1641, this town was laid waſte by the Swedes: 20 miles S. Brandenburg, and 34 SW. Berlin. Long. 30. 29. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 8. N.

TREVES, an archbiſhopric and electorate of Germany, bounded on the north by the electorate of Cologn, on the eaſt by the eſtates of the elector-palatine, and of the houſe of Naſſau, on the ſouth by France, and on the weſt by the duchy of Luxemburg; about eighty miles in length, but of very uncertain breadth. The country is in general mountainous and woody, containing, indeed, good paſturage for cattle, and in many places alſo fruitful arable land, but yet ſtands in need of the importation of corn; on the contrary, the growth of wine on the Moſel is very conſiderable, with plenty of game. There are likewiſe mineral ſprings, and mines of coal, calamy, iron, copper, lead, tin, ſilver, and gold. The electoral ſubjects are Roman Catholics, but in ſome other places which the elector of Treves is poſſeſſed of in common with other houſes, there are likewiſe proteſtants. The ancient Treviri, from whom the principal town here, and the country alſo, has its name, were, till the fourth century, ſubject to the Romans, and afterwards to the Franks. In the diviſions which the ſons and poſterity of the emperor Louis I. had made, this country was added, in the year 855, to the kingdom of Lorrain, and in 870, fell to the ſhare of Louis, the German king, ever ſince which time it has continued annexed to Germany. The origin of the biſhopric of Treves is ſought after by ſome in the firſt, but by others in the third century; and ſtill more uncertain is it who, of all the biſhops of Treves, was firſt raiſed to the dignity of an archbiſhop. The church of Treves, however, is held to be the moſt ancient in Germany. An archbiſhop of Treves is elected by the chapter there, and ſwears to a capitulation propoſed by them. The pope confirms ſuch elections in the uſual manner, empowering one of the new elected biſhops, allotted for that purpoſe, to conſecrate him. The archbiſhop of Treves is in rank the ſecond ſpiritual elector. At the election of an emperor, he delivers the formula of the election-oath to the elector of Mentz, to be ſworn to by him. At the election of an emperor, he has alſo the firſt voice. As elector, the archbiſhop of Treves enjoys both ſeat and voice in the electoral council at the diets of the empire. The Imperial matricular evaluation of the elector of Treves is twenty-ſix horſe and two-thirds, and 122 foot two-thirds, or 806 florins forty kruitzers. As archbiſhop of Treves, he is to be conſidered as a ſtate of the electoral Rheniſh circle, and obtains therein the ſecond place; namely, that after the elector of Mentz. By virtue of the peace of Weſtphalia, he has the right of preſenting two Roman Catholic aſſeſſors of the chamber judicatory; but the number of theſe aſſeſſors being reduced in the year 1719, to one-half, he nominates only one, who is the ſecond in order among all the aſſeſſors. Towards the maintenance of the chamber judicatory, he pays to each term, on account of this archbiſhopric, 811 rix-dollars fifty-eight kruitzers and a half. The ſuffragans of the archbiſhop of Treves were the biſhops of Metz, Toul, and Verdun. The chapter of Treves conſiſts of 40 canons, among whom are 16 capitulars, and 24 domicelli. All theſe canons muſt at leaſt be deſcended of ancient noble families, and have it in their power to exhibit ſixteen anceſtors capable of being admitted to tournaments. The archbiſhopric has regular troops, and a land militia. The former of theſe conſiſt, in times of peace and ordinarily, only of the circle troops, which the elector of Treves is bound to maintain, and which amount to between 1100 and 1200 men. The elector alſo keeps up a life-guard of forty perſons.

TREVES, or Triers, a city of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and capital town of the archbiſhopric, lying between two mountains on the Moſel, over which it has a ſtone bridge. This town is very old, but its age reaches by no means ſo far back as it is uſually fixed at. Long, however, before the birth of Chriſt, Treves was a town of note of the Treviri. Afterwards, the ancient Roman emperors had a reſidence here; and it is alſo the head town of the firſt Belgium, and ſo early as the days of Conſtantine the Great, was the capital of all Gaul. In the year 410, it was twice laid waſte, as alſo again in 411, and 415. About the year 458, from the Romans it fell under the power of the Franks. Under the Auſtraſian monarchs, a royal court had its ſeat here; in which, as well under the Frankiſh kings, as alſo for a long time after, reſided pfalzgraves. The archiepiſcopal court, or palace, near the cathedral church, was rebuilt by the elector Francis George. The cathedral church of St. Peter here ſtands on a hill, being a large building. Excluſive of this church, there are likewiſe here three collegiate and five pariſh churches, together with three colleges, and thirteen monaſteries and nunneries, as alſo a houſe of the Teutonic order, and a manſion belonging to that of St. John. For the eſtabliſhment of the univerſity here, papal privileges were iſſued ſo early as the year 1454, but theſe were brought duly to bear only in 1472, in 1535 renewed, and in 1722 improved. This town, according to the common opinion, was formerly Imperial, and had a particular matricular evaluation of its own; but by a ſentence of the electors pitched upon for the deciſion of this matter, in conjunction with the Imperial aulic counſellors, nominated by the emperor, it was declared to be ſubject to the ſuperiority of the elector of Treves, which was alſo immediately after effectually exerciſed by him over it. In the beginning of Auguſt, 1794, the French republicans entered the city, which had been haſtily evacuated by the German troops. The magiſtrates met them in their robes at the gates, with the keys, congratulated them on their ſucceſs, and declared they were glad to receive them. The good conduct of this army deſerves commendation; and an Engliſh writer, ſpeaking of it, obſerves, They had no ſooner entered Treves than they eſtabliſhed a municipality; they broke in upon no property whatever, and left the different corporations, and all civil and religious inſtitutions as they found them: 68 miles SSW. Cologn, and 74 W. Mentz. Long. 23. 57. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 56. N.

TRIESTE, a ſea-port town of Germany, in the circle of Auſtria, and duchy of Carniola, ſituated in the Adriatic, at the north-eaſt part of what is called The Gulf of Trieſte. The houſes here ſtand on the aſcent of a mountain, extending themſelves quite to the ſea, and on the top of the mountain is a caſtle. The harbour conſiſts of the inner and outer. The empreſs queen, Maria Thereſa, has cauſed it to be conſiderably improved and fortified, and alſo declared it a free port, imparting thereto all the requiſite immunities and privileges, whence all ſorts of wares, both by water and land, in and out of the time of fairs, may be imported here, free from any duties and taxes ; but from this immunity, iron, ſteel, copper, quickſilver, ſalt, gunpowder, mirrors, and cryſtal, are excepted. By theſe means many ſhips and veſſels are induced to arrive there, which at this place unlade their goods, and take others on board, which are conveyed from hence by land-carriage out of the hereditary lands belonging to the houſe of Auſtria, and alſo out of Germany. A wall fortified with a baſtion, ſerves as well for the defence of the harbour againſt an enemy, as for ſcreening it againſt the wind, and alſo for the ſecurity of the ſhipping. On the north-weſt ſide of the town, where formerly were ſalt-pits, a beautiful ſuburb has been erected, and thereby the bad air, which formerly aroſe from theſe ſalt-pits, meliorated : but ſtill at the time of flood, which often riſes here four or five feet in height, a ſtench is perceived, the ſea at this place having a boggy ground. The water alſo of a freſh ſpring has been conducted by pipes from the diſtance of two Italian miles to this town. Theſe and other improvements, and good regulations, have in view the increaſe of the trade of the place. Trieſte is likewiſe the ſee of a biſhop, who is ſuffragan to the archbiſhop of Goritz, and bears the title of the count of Trieſte. In its cathedral too, are twelve canons. The ſovereign captain, who governs the town and its territories, reſides in the caſtle. Lotharius, king of Italy, made a donation of this town and circumjacent country, together with the right of mintage, to John, at that time biſhop of the place ; but biſhop John II. diſpoſed of the juriſdiction over it to the community of Trieſte for 500 marks. Afterwards it was incorporated with the duchy of Carniola, but again diſmembered : 174 miles SSW. Vienna. Long. 31. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 53. N.—On the 25th of March, 1797, this city was taken by the French.

Here is the ruins of an ancient caſtle, formerly the reſidence of king John ; a barrack for a troop of horſe, and a charter-ſchool for 40 children. The town is governed by a ſovereign, recorder, and town-clerk ; it formerly was walled, and a place of great ſtrength. The ſteeple of the abbey, called the yellow ſteeple, was a lofty handſome ſquare tower ; it held out for a long time as a garriſon againſt Cromwell, who demoliſhed one half of it with his cannon ; the moſt of the other half ſtill remains. The inhabitants are noted for making a particular kind of cakes, called Trim cakes : 23 miles NW. Dublin. Long. 6. 48. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 32. N.

TRINIDAD, an iſland near the coaſt of South America, about thirty leagues long, and from two to ten broad. The climate is ſaid to be unwholeſome ; the iſland being very often covered with thick fogs. The quality of its ſoil is variouſly reported ; however ſir Walter Raleigh, who was there ſome time in the year 1593, and examined the iſland, gives an account, that the northern part of it is high land ; but that its ſoil is good, proper for planting of ſugar-canes, tobacco, &c. Here are ſeveral ſorts of animals, plenty of wild hogs, fiſh, fowl, and fruit. It alſo produces maize, caſſava, and other roots, and in general all that is commonly found in America. The Spaniards owned to ſir Walter, that they found gold in the rivers of this iſland, but nothing in compariſon of what the main land produces. The natives called this iſland Cairi ; but they themſelves had different names, according to the different parts of the iſland where they dwelt. Long. 60. 6. to 61. 36. W. Greenwich. Lat. 9. 48. to 10. 42. N.

TRINIDAD (La), a town of South America, in the viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres, and province of Moxes.

TRINITY, or La Trinité, a ſea-port town of the iſland of Martinico; the harbour is formed on the ſouth-eaſt ſide by the point Caravelle, which is two leagues in length ; and on the other ſide by a very high hill, about 350 or 400 paces in length, which only joins to the main land by an iſthmus not above 200 feet broad. The eaſt ſide, oppoſite to the bottom of this bay, is ſtopped up by a chain of rocks, which appear level with the water when the ebb-tide is ſpent. The town here is a very thriving place, being the reſidence of ſeveral merchants, as well as of the lieutenant-governor of the Cabes-terre ; and much frequented by ſhipping, eſpecially from Nantes ; the cargoes of which are ſure here to meet with a quick ſale, the people, who are very numerous in the adjacent parts, chooſing rather to buy what they want near at hand, than to ſend for it from the Baſſeterre. Beſides, during the hurricane ſeaſon, ſhips have a ſafe ſtation in this port. Another advantage they have here, is, that when they ſet out for Europe, they are to the windward of all the iſlands, and ſave above 300 leagues in their paſſage, which they would find by the way of St. Domingo, or Porto Rico. Long. 61. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 53. N.

TRIPOLDA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Principato Ultra: 16 miles S. Benevento.

TRIPOLI, a country of Africa, which, though tributary to the grand ſignior, is called a kingdom; bounded on the north by the Mediterranean, on the eaſt by Barca, or, conſidering Barca as a province of Tripoli, by Egypt; on the ſouth by the Atlas mountain, and on the weſt by Tunis and Biledulgerid; about 600 miles from eaſt to weſt. The breadth, from north to ſouth, is various, from 120 to 250. It has formerly been divided into ſeven provinces, or with Barca, eight; but is generally diſtinguiſhed into Maritime and Inland; the inhabitants of the former chiefly live upon commerce and piracy; the latter for the moſt part on plunder and robbery. Each diviſion hath ſome cities and towns, beſides a number of villages, which lie ſcattered chiefly through the latter; moſt of them very poor, and thinly inhabited; the country being almoſt every where ſandy and barren; as for cities and towns, there are few of conſequence, the greater part being either wholly depopulated and gone to ruins, or only inhabited by a few fiſhermen, lime-burners, pot-aſh makers, and here and there ſome few labourers: the chief part reduced to the loweſt degree of miſery and wretchedneſs, through the cruel exactions of the government, or the frequent depredations of the Arabs. What hath contributed moſt to the ruin of all theſe maritime towns, is their neighbourhood to the iſland of Malta, which lying conveniently over againſt thoſe coaſts, hath enabled the knights of it to have a more conſtant watch over them, and ſuppreſs their corſairs; ſo that they have been obliged to take to fiſhing, and cultivating as much land about thoſe ruinated places, as will juſt afford them a miſerable ſubſiſtence. The government, religion, laws, and cuſtoms, of this kingdom are in a great meaſure the ſame with thoſe of Algiers and Tunis. Only with reſpect to the firſt of theſe articles, it will not be amiſs to obſerve, that the beys of Tripoli are not mere titular vaſſals to the Porte, but really under ſubjection and tribute. This joined to the other exigencies of the regency, the avarice of the Turkiſh baſhas ſent hither from Conſtantinople, and the general decay of commerce, obliges them to load the ſubjects with ſuch heavy taxes and extortions, as hath reduced the greateſt part of the kingdom to the loweſt degree of indigence and miſery. The revenues ariſe chiefly from their corſairs, which are nevertheleſs but few, ſeldom exceeding ſeven or eight, and of theſe one only can properly be ſtyled a ſhip, the reſt are ſmall gallies, poorly manned and equipped. The next is the duty on imports and exports; the tax on the Jews, who are here very numerous; on the natives, who, though ever ſo poor, muſt yet pay part of the product of their ground, or manufactures; and laſtly on the country Moors and Arabs, among whom the bey ſends his flying camp of janiſſaries to levy it; for theſe laſt, as well as the Moors, are kept ſo poor by thoſe heavy taxes, that nothing but force, and ſometimes exemplary ſeverity, can extort it from them. As their commerce is greatly dwindled of late, and the exigencies of their government increaſe by their being tributary to the Porte, ſo they are forced to exact greater taxes from the ſubjects to ſupply them, though they are in continual apprehenſion of their putting themſelves ſome time or other under the protection of ſome Chriſtian power, to alleviate their miſery. And, indeed, there is hardly any other tye but that of religion, could have prevented their taking this ſtep long ago, in ſpite of the vigilance of the regency. However the bey, by means of his protection from the Porte, makes ſhift to keep up a kind of deſpotic power, as he is beſides, generaliſſimo of all the forces. By appointing proper officers to act in all capacities under him, he hath alſo made himſelf ſo abſolute over the douwan, that it is now kept only as a matter of form, they have nothing to do but to approve and ratify whatever he pleaſes to lay before them; neither doth the Porte, or its baſhaw concern themſelves in the government, provided he doth but punctually pay his tribute to the one, and ſatisfy the avarice of the other. As for their commerce, it chiefly conſiſts in ſlaves, either ſuch as are taken by their corſairs, or ſuch as they traffic for with their neighbours; the greateſt part of both they ſend into Turkey, where they can diſpoſe of them to the beſt advantage. The next branch is that of aſhes, which they buy from the Arabians, and ſell to the Europeans, to make glaſs and ſoap: the reſt of their traffic is not worth mentioning. One circumſtance in the conduct of this regency deſerves notice: they are more ſcrupulous obſervers of their treaties with other nations than any of their neighbours; which punctuality, whether it proceeds from real probity, or a conſciouſneſs of their own weakneſs, is nevertheleſs of no ſmall advantage to navigation and commerce. This ſtate, as well as the reſt of Barbary, after being freed from the Roman yoke, paſſed ſucceſſively under the Vandals, Saracens, and the kings of Morocco, Fez, and Tunis; till weary of their ſlavery and oppreſſion, they reſolved to have a monarch of their own, whom they choſe from amongſt themſelves; and the new monarch governed them at firſt with great equity and moderation. Bucamen, king of Tunis, ſent a conſiderable army againſt him, but his general being poiſoned by the intrigues of ſome of the principal inhabitants, the army returned home without ſucceſs. The new king no ſooner ſaw himſelf out of danger, than he began to play the tyrant in his turn, to ſuch a degree, that the citizens conſpired againſt him, and he was murdered by his own brother-in-law. They choſe in his room one Abubacer, who had been formerly an officer under him, but had ſince retired, and turned marabout or hermit. This man was eaſily perſuaded to take the reins of government upon him; but had not reigned many months, before Ferdinand, king of Caſtile and Aragon, ſent thither Peter, count of Navarre, with a powerful fleet and army, which laid ſiege to the capital. Abubacer, who received private notice of this intended deſcent by ſome Genoeſe merchants, had taken all proper meaſures to make a vigorous defence. But neither the great number of his forces, nor the artillery which he had planted along ſhore, could prevent their landing and inveſting the place, whilſt the count proſecuted the ſiege. Finding himſelf unequal to ſo powerful an enemy, he ſurrendered on honourable terms, and was ſent with his wife, two ſons, and an uncle, to the emperor, Charles V. then at Palermo, who ſoon after reſtored him to his former dignity, on condition that he ſhould become his vaſſal and tributary. Abubacer rebuilt and repeopled the city, which he held in the emperor's name, till the knights of Rhodes were driven out of that iſland, and forced to retire into Syracuſe, when Charles was pleaſed to beſtow the iſland of Malta upon them, together with the city and caſtle of Tripoli. They ſent accordingly and took poſſeſſion of both, made one of their order governor, and put a garriſon into it of their own troops. They were ſcarcely ſettled in this new acquiſition, before Barbaroſſa made himſelf maſter of it, but it was ſoon after retaken by the emperor, and reſtored to them, who continued in poſſeſſion of it till the reign of Solyman, who, under pretence that it had been retaken during the truce, ſent thither a naval armament, conſiſting of about 110 royal gallies, and thirty other veſſels, under the command of Sinan baſhaw, who had under him the famed Solha Rais, ſurnamed Devil-driver, and the no leſs famous Dragut; and notwithſtanding every means of defence, it was obliged to ſurrender, and was delivered up to the Turks, after it had continued in the poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians a little above forty years, from the time of its being taken by the count of Navarre. Sinan committed the government of it to the aga Morat, upon condition that he ſhould hold it under the grand ſignior, and reſign it whenever he ſhould appoint another governor. It was not long, however, before the famed corſair Dragut got poſſeſſion of this place. Being repulſed in his attempt upon Malta, he came and made it his place of arms, not indeed with the title of baſhaw, which the grand ſignior had abſolutely refuſed him, but only as governor for the Porte. He fortified both city and caſtle with ſtrong walls, and two forts near the ſea-ſide, well ſupplied with artillery and ammunition; by which means it became one of the ſtrongeſt cities in Africa, and the common retreat of moſt of the corſairs that roved under Turkiſh colours, from whence they infeſted the coaſts of Italy, Sicily, Naples, and Spain, and a fruitleſs attempt was made by the Chriſtians to retake it. After the death of Dragut, the Porte continued ſending either a ſangiac or baſhaw to Tripoli, the caſtle being garriſoned with Turks, and the city inhabited by Moors, and the kingdom ſtill paying tribute to the grand ſignior. The piratic trade went on with ſucceſs; the renegadoes met with the uſual encouragement from the Turks, and were promoted to the command of the corſairs, and even of their whole fleets, and ſometimes to the baſhawſhip; theſe recommending themſelves to the regency, not only by their deſperate behaviour, but much more by their peculiar barbarity to the Chriſtian priſoners, which often provoked repriſals, which were carried on both ſides to ſuch exceſs as can hardly be particularized without horror. In this condition the kingdom continued till the Turkiſh government, becoming more and more intolerable, by the avarice and tyranny of thoſe baſhaws, a certain marabout, named Sid Hajah, about the cloſe of the 16th century, found means to raiſe a general revolt both in the city and country. He did not doubt but he ſhould be aſſiſted by ſome Chriſtian princes abroad, as well as by the Moors and Arabs at home, to drive all the Turks out of the kingdom; after which expulſion, he thought he might new-mould the government; and in caſe of need, put it under the protection of thoſe who had aſſiſted him in effecting this revolution. Unfortunately for him, he did not take care to ſecure a foreign aſſiſtance, before he broke out into open rebellion; ſo that Haſcen baſhaw, the Turkiſh admiral, came ſuddenly upon him, at the head of 60 gallies, and a number of other ſhips and forces, which he had procured from Tunis and Algiers, and defeated him ſo often, that he was at length abandoned by his troops, and aſſaſſinated by his own partizans. Haſcen ſent the marabout's head to Conſtantinople, and had hardly ſettled the government on the old footing, when a new governor, ſent thither from the Porte, found a much more effectual way to free them from this tyranny. This man was a renegado Greek, of the ancient family of the Juſtiniani, known by the name Mahmet Beygh, who, by his intrigues and bribes, had obtained a banner or government from the grand ſignior. He ſailed directly to Tripoli, and having got poſſeſſion of the caſtle, refuſed to acknowledge or receive any baſhaw from Conſtantinople. He took the reins of the government wholly upon himſelf, not indeed as independent, but as vaſſal and tributary to the Porte, to whom he obliged himſelf to pay a tribute and homage, as an acknowledgment of his ſubjection and dependence.

TRIPOLI, a city and ſeaport of Africa, and capital of the country ſo called, ſituated on the coaſt of the Mediterranean. It was formerly divided into two parts, the Old and New; the former, which was the native country of the emperor Severus, is ſuppoſed to have been built by the Romans, was ſince conquered by the Vandals, and at laſt deſtroyed by the Mahometans, under their khalif, Omar II. ſince which time it hath never recovered its importance, and is now almoſt gone to ruin; the latter, which ſtands at a ſmall diſtance from it, though of no great extent, is populous, and in a flouriſhing condition. It ſtands on a ſandy ground, by the ſea ſide, ſurrounded with high walls, and ſtout ramparts, flanked with pyramidical towers, but not kept in good repair. It hath but two gates, one towards the inland, on the ſouth, and the other to the ſea, on the north, where it expands itſelf in form of a creſcent, near a ſpacious and commodious haven. The point by the eaſt is little elſe than a group of rugged rocks, on which are to be ſeen ſome ancient forts, now gone to decay; but that to the weſtward is defended by a ſtrong caſtle, ſurrounded with fortifications, after the modern faſhion, and furniſhed with ſome large cannon. New Tripoli is ſuppoſed to have been built by the natives, who gave it the name of Tarabilis, or Trebiles, whence the Latins call it Tripolis. Some authors pretend that it was once a place of vaſt trade, on account of its neighbourhood to Numidia and Tunis, reſorted to by veſſels from Malta, Venice, Sicily, Marſeilles, and other parts; there being hardly ſuch another commodious ſeaport along this whole coaſt, except Alexandria; by which means it became ſo opulent, that it was filled with rich merchants, abounded with fine moſques, hoſpitals, and other public buildings, and excelled Tunis in beauty and wealth. It retains now but few traces of its ancient ſplendour: the houſes are low and mean, and ſtreets narrow, dirty, and irregular: there are in it, nevertheleſs, ſome monuments ſtill ſtanding, which evince its former magnificence; particularly a triumphal arch, one-half of which now lies buried in the ſand. We need not wonder at this extraordinary decay, if we conſider the two great inconveniencies which this city labours under: firſt, the want of ſweet water, here being neither rivers, ſprings, nor wells, nor any other means of ſupplying it with that uſeful element but ciſterns, and reſervoirs of rain-water; ſecondly, the great ſcarcity of corn, and the other products of the ground, occaſioned by the dry ſandy ſoil that ſurrounds it on the land ſide for ſeveral miles. It produces, however, palm-trees in great plenty, that yield the moſt delightful dates, which conſtitute a conſiderable part of their food: beſides theſe, they have the lothus, or lotus, a tree whoſe fruit is reckoned ſtill finer than the dates, and makes a moſt excellent wine. That plant ſerves them for meat and drink, for which reaſon they have been ſtyled by the ancients Lotophagi. But, upon the whole, were it not for the continual ſupply of proviſions brought in by their corſairs, and other trading veſſels, Tripoli could never ſubſiſt by the products of its own territories; and hence we may infer the cauſe of its preſent decay. Adjacent to the walls of the city is a famous burying-ground, in which are found coffins, urns, medals, and other curious relics of antiquity. The Franciſcan friars have here a very handſome church, convent, and hoſpital, the laſt of which is the more neceſſary, as the city is ſo often and ſo ſeverely viſited by the plague. Other orders of monks were here ſettled, who have been ſince obliged to abandon it, probably on account of its decay. The country around is adorned with a multiplicity of handſome villas, cultivated chiefly by Chriſtian ſlaves, and much like thoſe about Algiers and Tunis. It is obſervable, with reſpect to thoſe unhappy wretches, that there is but a very ſmall number of them here, in comparison to the many thouſands who ſwarm in thoſe two capitals, inſomuch that they have but one bagnio in the whole city to lock them in at night They juſt keep a ſufficient number to ſerve them in the loweſt offices an cultivate their villas, and make a traffic of the reſt. The people here carr on a conſiderable trade in linen cloths, great quantities of which ar wrought by the inhabitants; but their chief dependence is on their ow corſairs, and thoſe of other nations, which reſort to their harbour. The keep, indeed, few of their own, yet thoſe are ſo deſperate, and make ſ good an advantage of their ſituation, that they take a great number o ſhips trading to Egypt, Italy, and the Archipelago. This city was take by the count of Navarre, and by the emperor Charles V. given to th knights of Malta, from whom it was taken by Sinan, general of Solyman accompanied by Salha Rais, and the celebrated Dragut, ſince which time i has been governed by baſhaws, tributary to the Ottoman Porte. In th year 1685, the city was bombarded by the French, under the command o marſhal d'Etrees, and they were compelled to ſue for peace. A late traveller ſays, the date-trees, which ſpread themſelves like a foreſt behin the town, and the hills beyond them, which bound the proſpect on th ſouth, are intereſting objects; but the town itſelf is built in too low ſituation to compoſe a part of the general ſcene: for it is ſcarcely viſibl at the diſtance of a mile. The firſt appearance of Tripoli may diſappoint by its meanneſs, the expectations of the traveller; but if he reflects o the nature of a deſpotic government, ever incompatible with permanen proſperity, he will not be ſurpriſed when he finds, on a nearer view, th the city, though the capital of an empire, exhibits through all its exten the marks of a rapid decay; that its ſcanty limits, though ſcarcely fo miles in circumference, are too great for its preſent population; and th its ancient caſtle, though once the pride, and ſtill the reſidence, of th reigning family, is now a mouldering ruin: 100 leagues SE. Tuni Long. 31. E. Ferro. Lat. 32. 35. N.

TRIPOLI, or Tarabolus, a town of Aſiatic Turkey, and capital of pachalic, in Syria, ſituated near the mouth of a ſmall river, called Kadiſh at the foot of Mount Lebanon, which overlooks and ſurrounds it with it branches to the eaſt, the ſouth, and even a little to the north-weſt. It i ſeparated from the ſea by a ſmall triangular plain, half a league i breadth, at the point of which is the village, where the veſſels land thei goods. The Franks call this village La Marine, the general name give by them to theſe places in the Levant. There is no harbour, but a ſimpl road, which extends from the ſhore to ſhoals, called The Rabbit and Pigeon Iſlands. The bottom is rocky, and mariners are not fond of remaining here, as the cables are ſoon worn out, and the veſſels expoſed to th north-weſt winds, which are frequent and violent on all this coaſt. I the time of the Franks, this road was defended by towers, ſeven of which are ſtill ſubſiſting, from the mouth of the river to the village. They a ſtrong built, but how ſerve only as a place of reſort for birds of prey All the environs of Tripoli are laid out in orchards, where the nop grows ſpontaneouſly, and the white mulberry is cultivated for the ſilkworm; and the pomegranate, the orange, and the lemon-tree, for thei fruit, which is of the greateſt beauty. But theſe places, though delightfu to the eye, are unhealthy. Every year, from July to September, epidemi fevers, like thoſe of Alexandretta and Cyprus, rage here: theſe are owing to the artificial inundations with which the mulberry-trees are watered, in order that they may throw out their ſecond leaves. Beſides, as th city is open only to the weſt, the air does not circulate, and the ſpirits a in a conſtant ſtate of oppreſſion, which makes health at beſt but a kind o convaleſcence. The commerce of Tripoli, conſiſts almoſt wholly in indifferent coarſe ſilks, which are made uſe of for laces, and is in the hands o the French alone. They have a conſul here, and three commercial houſe They export ſilks, and ſponges fiſhed up in the road; theſe they exchang for cloths, cochineal, ſugar, and Weſt India coffee; but this factory, bot with reſpect to imports and exports, is inferior to Latakia. The pachal of Tripoli, comprehends the country which ſtretches along the Mediterranean, from Latakia to the Narh-el-Kelb, and is bounded by that torren and the chain of mountains which overlook the Orontes. The princip part of this government is hilly; the ſea-coaſt alone, between Tripoli an Latakia, is a level country. The numerous rivulets which water it, contribute greatly to its fertility; but, notwithſtanding this advantage, th plain is much leſs cultivated than the mountains, without even exceptin Lebanon, with its numerous rocks and pine-trees. Its chief productio are corn, barley, and cotton. In the territory of Latakia, tobacco an olives are principally cultivated; but in Lebanon, and the Keſraoua white mulberry-trees and vineyards. This pachalic contains ſeveral di ferent tribes and religions. From Lebanon to above Latakia, the mountains are peopled by the Anſarians, a particular ſect of religious, whi firſt roſe in the latter end of the 9th century; Lebanon and the Keſraou are inhabited entirely by the Maronites, and the ſea-coaſts and cities, ſchiſmatic Greeks, and Latins, Turks, and deſcendants of the Arab The pacha of Tripoli, enjoys all the privileges of his place. The milita and finances are in his hands: he holds the government in quality of fa farm from the Porte, on a leaſe of one year only, at the annual rent of 750 purſes (39,000l.). Tripoli is ſituated, 72 miles NW. Damaſcus, and 132 S. Alexandretta. Long. 53. 33. E. Ferro. Lat. 34. 25. N.

Trois Rivières (Les), a town of the iſland of Martinico.

Trois Rivières, a town of Canada, on the river St. Lawrence, ſo called from three rivers whoſe ſtreams unite about a quarter of a mile below the town, and afterwards fall into the great river of St. Lawrence. It was formerly the capital of the French government in New France, and much reſorted to by ſeveral nations which come down thoſe rivers to it, and trade in various ſorts of furs. The town has palliſades round it, being commodiouſly ſituated in the centre of the country, and conſequently free from the irruptions of the Indians. It was the reſidence of the governor, who kept a major under him, with a monaſtery of recollects, who are the curates of the place. It was likewiſe the common emporium or mart to which the natives uſed to bring their furs, and other commodities to ſell, before the Engliſh firſt ſeized it, and the ſettlement at Montreal. The colony was again reſtored in the year 1635, and the monks, who had ſettled a miſſion there, returned to it in 1673. But in the year 1760, or in the war between England and France, it fell with the reſt of Canada, into the poſſeſſion of the crown of Great Britain, in whoſe hands it ſtill is. The town itſelf is ſaid to be but thinly peopled, though the inhabitants are wealthy, and the houſes in general large, and richly furniſhed. The country round it is pleaſant and fertile : 18 leagues WSW. Quebec. Long. 72. 20. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 23. N.

Trois Rivières, a bay at the eaſt end of the iſland of St. John, near the coaſt of Nova Scotia.

TROISSEREUX, a town of France, in the department of the Oiſe, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Beauvais : 1½ league NW. Beauvais.

TROITZ, or Troitſkoe Monaſtr, that is, The Convent of the Holy Trinity, a convent of Ruſſia, which is ſo large as at a little diſtance to have the appearance of a ſmall town ; and, like many convents in this country, is ſtrongly fortified, according to the ancient mode of defence, being ſurrounded with high brick walls, ſtrengthened with battlements and towers. The parapet is roofed with wood, and the walls and towers are provided with holes for muſkets and cannon : the whole is ſurrounded by a deep ditch. This place withſtood ſeveral ſieges ; and particularly baffled all the efforts of Ladiſlaus, prince of Poland, who attacked it with a large army. Beſide the convent or habitation for the monks, the walls incloſe an Imperial palace, and nine large churches, conſtructed by different ſovereigns. The convent is a large range of building encircling a court, and is far too ſpacious for the preſent inhabitants : it formerly contained 300 monks, together with proportionate number of ſtudents ; and was the richeſt eccleſiaſtical foundation in Ruſſia. The fraternity poſſeſſed conſiderable eſtates, upon which were at leaſt 100,000 peaſants : theſe eſtates, as well as all the other church lands, being now annexed to the crown, the members receive ſmall penſions. With their revenues, their number has been greatly diminiſhed, and they ſcarcely amount at preſent to 100 monks. Their habit is black, with a veil of the ſame colour ; they eat no meat, and the diſcipline of the order is very ſtrict. This convent is diſtinguiſhed in the annals of this country, as the aſylum for the Ruſſian ſovereigns, in caſes of inſurrection or danger ; and is more particularly known to foreigners, for the refuge it afforded to Peter the Great, when he put an end to the adminiſtration of his ſiſter Sophia : 40 miles from Moſcow.

TSONG-MING, an iſland near the coaſt of China, in the Eaſtern Sea, at the mouth of the Yang-tſe river, about 50 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. This iſland was formerly a place of baniſhment for criminals; to whom ſome poor Chineſe families reſorted, and they divided the lands amongſt them; but not being able to clear all the land they had appropriated to themſelves, called other families from off the continent to their aſſiſtance, and yielded to them for ever a part of the lands, on condition that they ſhould pay annually, in divers goods, a rent proportionable to their harveſt. The country is divided by an infinite number of canals, that have high banks to defend it from inundations, for the land is level, having no hills; the air is healthful and temperate, and the country agreeable. Here are large towns ſcattered about the iſland at convenient diſtances, wherein are a great number of ſhops, well furniſhed with all manner of neceſſaries and conveniences of life, and diſperſed between each town: there are as many houſes about the country, as there are families employed in tillage. The highways are very narrow, and are bordered with little ſhops that ſell refreſhment to travellers; and, indeed, one would almoſt imagine the whole iſland to be one exceeding large village. Here are no wild fowl, but great numbers of large geeſe, ducks, hens, hogs, and buffaloes, but theſe latter are uſed only for tillage. The land is not alike throughout the iſland, the produce of it being very different: that towards the north is not cultivated, but the reeds which grow here naturally produce a conſiderable revenue: as there are no trees in the whole iſland, they uſe part of theſe reeds to build houſes in the country; the other part ſerves to burn, and ſupplies fuel not only for the whole iſland, but alſo for ſome part of the neighbouring continent. The ſecond ſort of land is that which extends from the firſt quite to the ſea on the ſouth ſide; this produces two crops every year, one of grain, which is generally in the month of May; the other of rice, or cotton; of rice, in September, of cotton, a little later: their grain are rice, wheat, barley, and a ſort of bearded corn, which, though it reſembles wheat, is, nevertheleſs, of a different nature. There is a third ſort of land, which, though it appears barren, produces a greater revenue than all the reſt; it conſiſts of a whitiſh earth, found in ſeveral parts of the north ſide of the iſland, from whence they get ſuch a great quantity of ſalt, that it ſupplies not only the iſland, but part of the continent. Long. 138. 40. TVER, a town of Ruſſia, and capital of a government, at the conflux of the Tvertza, and Volga. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and according to Buſching contains 70 churches and convents. Tver owes its origin to Vlodimir Georgivitch, great duke of Vladimir, who in 1182, raiſed a ſmall fortreſs upon the point where the Tvertza falls into the Volga, in order to protect his territories againſt the incurſions of the inhabitants of Novgorod; afterwards, in 1240, the great duke Yaroſlaf II. built another citadel, upon the ſpot occupied by the preſent fortreſs, and laid the foundation of a new town, which ſoon increaſed in population and wealth to ſo great a degree, as to become the metropolis of an independent ſovereignty, called from the town, the Duchy of Tver. Yaroſlaf III. ſon of Yaroſlaf II. and brother of Alexander Nevſki, received this duchy as his inheritance; and tranſmitted the ſucceſſion to a long train of deſcendants. The laſt ſovereign of this hereditary line was Michael Boriſovitch, whoſe ſiſter, Maria, was married to the great duke Ivan Vaſſilievitch I. The harmony which had for ſome time ſubſiſted between theſe two neighbouring princes, was at firſt ſtrengthened by this alliance: but in the courſe of a few years, either mutual jealouſies or the ambitious views of Ivan, produced an open rupture; and in 1486, the latter beſieged Tver, with a large army. Michael, unable to reſiſt ſo formidable an antagoniſt, abandoned the town, and fled into Lithuania, where he died in extreme indigence. Upon this retreat, the inhabitants ſurrendered Tver to Ivan Vaſſilievitch, who beſtowed it and the duchy, as a fief, upon his eldeſt ſon, Ivan; that prince dying in 1490, the great duke annexed the duchy to his other dominions in the form of a province, and it has never been again diſmembered. Tver is divided into the Old and New Town, the former, ſituated on the oppoſite ſide of the Volga, conſiſts almoſt entirely of wooden cottages; the latter, was, a few buildings excepted, burned down, in the year 1763. The empreſs was no ſooner informed of this calamity, than ſhe ordered a regular and beautiful plan of a new town to be ſketched, by an eminent architect; and enjoined, that all the houſes ſhould be reconſtructed in conformity to this model. She raiſed, at her own expence, the governor's houſe, the biſhop's palace, the courts of juſtice, the new exchange, the priſon, and ſeveral other public edifices; and offered to every perſon, who would engage to build a houſe with brick, a loan of 300l. for 12 years, without intereſt. The money advanced by her majeſty upon this occaſion, amounted to 60,000l. and ſhe afterwards remitted one-third of this ſum. The ſtreets, which are broad and long, iſſue in a ſtraight line from a ſquare, or rather an octagon, in the centre: the houſes of this octagon, and of the principal ſtreets, are of brick ſtuccoed white, and form a very magnificent appearance. There is an eccleſiaſtical ſeminary at Tver, which is under the inſpection of the biſhop, and admits 600 ſtudents. In 1776, the empreſs founded a ſchool for the inſtruction of 200 burghers' children; they are taught to read, write, and caſt accounts, and a few of them are trained to handicraft trades. In June, 1779, an academy was alſo opened in this town, for the education of the young nobility of the province, at the charge of the ſame imperial patroneſs. It admits 120 ſtudents; who are inſtructed in foreign languages, arithmetic, geography, fortification, tactics, natural philoſophy, muſic, riding, dancing, &c. Tver is a place of conſiderable commerce, which it owes principally to its advantageous ſituation, being near the conflux of the two rivers, along which, are conveyed all the goods and merchandize ſent by water from Siberia, and the ſouthern provinces towards Peterſburgh: 72 miles NNW. TUMBEZ, a town of South America, in the viceroyalty of Peru, and juriſdiction of Piura, near a river of the ſame name, which diſcharges itſelf into the Bay of Guayaquil, almoſt oppoſite to the iſland of St. Clare. Barks, boats, balzas, and canoes may go up and down this river, being three fathoms deep, and twenty-five broad; but it is dangerous going up it in the winter ſeaſon, the impetuoſity of its current being then increaſed by torrents from the mountains. At a little diſtance from the cordillera, on one ſide of the banks of the river, ſtands the town of Tumbez, in a very ſandy plain, interſperſed with ſome ſmall eminences. The town conſiſts only of 70 houſes, built of cane, and thatched, ſcattered up and down, without any order or ſymmetry. In theſe houſes are about 150 families of Meſtizos, Indians, Mulattoes, and a few Spaniards. There are, beſides theſe, other families living along the banks of the river, who having the conveniency of watering their grounds, continually employ themſelves in rural occupations. The heat is exceſſive; nor have they here any rain, for ſeveral years ſucceſſively; but when it begins to fall, it continues during the winter. The whole country, from the town of Tumbez to Lima, contained between the foot of the Cordillera and the ſea, is known by the name of Valles. Tumbez was the place where, in the year 1526, the Spaniards firſt landed in theſe parts of South America, under the command of Don Franciſco Pizarro, and where he entered into ſeveral friendly conferences with the princes of the country; but vaſſals to the yncas. If the Indians were ſurpriſed at the ſight of the Spaniards, the latter were equally ſo, at the prodigious riches which they every where ſaw, and the largeneſs of the palaces, caſtles, and temples, of all which, though built of ſtone, no veſtiges are now remaining. Lat. 3. 13. TUNBRIDGE, a town of England, in the county of Kent, on the Medway. Near it are the remains of a caſtle, built by Richard de Clare, natural ſon of Richard I. duke of Normandy, in the reign of William Rufus. This caſtle was taken by king Stephen, by king John, and by Henry III.; it was garriſoned by the laſt; the market is on Friday. About four or five miles ſouth of the town, are ſome medicinal ſprings, called Tunbridge Wells: they are ſituated at the bottom of three hills, to which have been given the fanciful names of Mount Ephraim, Mount Sinai, and Mount Pleaſant. The ſprings were firſt diſcovered in 1606, by Dudley lord North, who retired to the neighbourhood in a deep conſumption, and, returning home hopeleſs, in paſſing through a wood, obſerved theſe ſprings, and carried ſome of the water to a London phyſician, who, after analyſing them, recommended them to his lordſhip's drinking, who ſoon found in them a perfect cure. The firſt buildings were erected in 1636; ſince that time coffee-houſes, lodging-houſes, and aſſembly-rooms have been built, with a regular maſter of the ceremonies, and a large chapel of eaſe to the pariſh church, where divine ſervice is performed twice a-day during the ſeaſon. The rocks, about a mile and a half from the wells, are in ſome parts 75 feet high, the mean height 40, interſperſed with ſurpriſing cliffs and chaſms, that lead through the midſt of them, by narrow gloomy paſſages: 14 miles S. TUNIS, a city of Africa, and capital of the country ſo called, ſituated on a riſing ground, on the weſt bank of a lake. It was, by Diodorus Siculus, called Leucon Tuneta; that is, White Tunis, perhaps from the chalky cliffs which lie round it, when viewed from the ſea. It is ſurrounded by lakes and marſhes, which, however, do not render it unhealthy, which is, by Dr. Shaw, attributed to the number of maſtick and myrtle trees, roſemary, and other gummy and aromatic plants, with which they heat their ovens and their baths: the water is obtained a mile diſtant for the general uſe of the inhabitants. The Tuniſians are the moſt civilized nation of Barbary, with little of the inſolent haughtineſs of the Algerines; and affairs with the government are tranſacted with eaſe: the Engliſh, French, Dutch, and ſeveral European ſtates, having conſuls here, who are treated with civility and reſpect. Including the ſuburbs, Tunis is, by Dr. Shaw, ſuppoſed to be rather more than three miles in circumference, and the number of houſes 12,000. There are few buildings of any magnificence, except the great moſque, the bey's palace, and a few others: there are five gates, but none of them grand. Near the centre of the city is a piazza of vaſt extent, which is ſaid to have contained 3000 ſhops for the ſale of woollen and linen goods; in the manufacture of both which this city has been long famous. Here are ſeveral colleges and ſchools, with many learned men and doctors of the Mahometan law, partly maintained by the public; the janiſſaries are quartered in barracks: other public buildings are, an exchange, a cuſtom-houſe, and an arſenal. On the ſide of a canal is the fortreſs of Goletta, but not carefully ſupported: the chief defence is the caſtle. Long. 11. 22. E. Greenwich. Lat. 36. 33. N.

TUNIS, a country of Africa, uſually dignified with the title of kingdom; bounded on the north and eaſt by the Mediterranean, on the ſouth by Tripoli, and on the weſt by Algiers. It was formerly of greater extent than it now is, and comprehended the country of Tripoli, and a conſiderable part of Algiers: it is now about 200 miles from north to ſouth, and 120 from eaſt to weſt. After the decline of the Roman empire, this country came under the power of the Vandals and Goths; and after them, under the Saracens, when they were governed by viceroys, called emirs. It afterwards became ſubject to the emperor of Morocco. For a ſpace of time it became an independent and powerful kingdom. In the year 1538, it was overrun by Barbaroſſa; and, notwithſtanding the endeavours of Charles V. and his ſucceſſors, the kingdom was made a province of the Ottoman empire, under the dominion of Selim II. by Sinan, baſha of the Levant. At preſent the whole kingdom is divided into two circuits, the ſummer and winter, which the bey makes in perſon through his dominions at thoſe two ſeaſons. The ſummer circuit, or northern diſtrict, is by far the moſt pleaſant, fertile, and populous, and hath the greateſt number of cities, villages, and dowars, and carries the faireſt appearance of plenty, proſperity, and cheerfulneſs, of the two; advantages owing to the mildneſs of its government, and its being freer from tyranny and oppreſſion than that of Algiers. The Tuneſians, in general, are like the Algerines: a mixture of Turks, Moors, Arabians, Jews, and Chriſtians, merchants and ſlaves; with this difference, that they are here polite and civilized. They are much more kind and humane to their ſlaves, in general, though they treat the knights of Malta with greater ſeverity. In other reſpects, the Tuneſians are courteous to ſtrangers; and all affairs with the regency are tranſacted in a very friendly manner: the conſuls that reſide here are treated with greater affability and condeſcenſion, juſtice, and diſpatch, than in any other court on theſe African coaſts; in a word, this nation hath, for many years, been more intent upon trade, and the improvement of their manufactures, than upon plundering and cruiſing; upon which account, it hath cultivated the alliance of many Chriſtian powers. The dreſs of the Tuneſians, of both ſexes, is much of the ſame faſhion with that of Algerines. The women are handſome, neat, and more familiar: they go, indeed, veiled out of doors, but are allowed to be ſeen, and converſe with ſtrangers, their huſbands not being tainted with ſuch jealouſy as reigns among other Africans. The religion is the ſame as that of the Algerines. The kingdom, as well as Algiers, and others along the Barbary coaſts, are very ſubject to earthquakes, which commonly happen after heavy rains, at the end of the ſummer, or in autumn, and are often felt at a great diſtance from land, where the depth of water hath been above 200 fathoms: in other reſpects, the country is, for the moſt part, as healthy and fertile as any under the ſame climate. The northern parts, which are the beſt cultivated, enjoy a wholeſome temperature. The winds are moſtly from the ſea, conſequently refreſhing; but thoſe that blow from the ſouthern ſandy deſerts are quite ſuffocating, eſpecially as they prevail moſtly in July and Auguſt; if they continue five or ſix days, ſucceſſively, the inhabitants are obliged to keep themſelves cool by ſprinkling their floors with water. The ſea winds, that blow weſt-north-weſt and north, bring dry weather in ſummer, and rain in winter; but the eaſterly, as well as the ſoutherly, are for the moſt part dry, though attended with a thick cloudy atmoſphere in moſt ſeaſons. Their firſt rains commonly fall in September, and ſometimes in October; about three weeks after which the Arabians break the ground, ſow their corn, and plant their beans, barley, lentils, and garvancos: their harveſt uſually begins in May, or the beginning of June, according to the quality of the preceding ſeaſons. The Tuneſians are much more addicted to agriculture than their neighbours, the Algerines, and are for making the moſt of every inch of their ground. Mines of metals and minerals they diſregard. The government of Tunis at preſent, like that of Algiers, is altogether deſpotic; but with this difference, that there it is elective, and here not only hereditary, but the bey hath power to name which of his ſons he pleaſes for his ſucceſſor, without regard to elderſhip; or, in caſe he doth not think him worthy, he may appoint a brother, or a nephew, to the ſucceſſion: in all other caſes, likewiſe, they are equally abſolute and independent, either on the Porte, or the Douwan. They were once, indeed, under the protection of the former; and the rapacious extortions and tyranny of its baſhas had, in ſome meaſure, obliged them to ſhake off their yoke, and form a government of their own, which they ſettled in ſuch a manner, that their deys, as they were then called, could do nothing without the advice and conſent of the Douwan; but they have found means, in time, to rid themſelves of this uneaſy clog alſo, though they ſtill retain a kind of form, or ſhadow, of both. The Porte hath a baſha reſiding here, but in power and influence he is a mere cypher, and ſerves only to remind the Tuneſians, that they were once ſubject to the Turkiſh ſultans. The Douwan being chiefly compoſed of friends and creatures of the beys, is rather aſſembled to give a forced approbation to their reſolutions, than to conſult them about the juſtice or expediency of them. At the firſt ſettling of this new form of government, the deyſhip was the ſupreme dignity, as it is ſtill at Algiers; as that of bey was the next in rank, but wholly ſubordinate to it. However, having ſince built their power upon the ruins of the deys, they have, by degrees, raiſed the beyſhip to be deſpotic and independent; and by making it hereditary, have prevented, in a great meaſure, thoſe frequent depoſitions, rebellions, and maſſacres, which are the almoſt conſtant concomitants of the regal authority, wherever it is made elective. Yet far from preventing jealouſies, cabals, and rebellions, in ſpite of all their precautions, the dignity oftener falls to the ſhare of that ſon who has been able, by his addreſs, to form the ſtrongeſt party, than to him who hath been appointed to it by the father. Hence it is, that whenever the throne becomes vacant, whether in the courſe of nature, or by open treaſon and rebellion, it is ſeldom filled up again without a great deal of bloodſhed, rapine, and violence, in proportion to the number of competitors. Tunis exports to France, corn, oil, beans, lentils, wax, wool, hides, and Morocco ſkins, and receives, in exchange, Spaniſh wool, Languedoc cloths, vermillion, ſugar, pepper, cloves, wine, brandy, paper, hardware, iron, and ſteel. The Italian trade is wholly carried on by the Jews, who ſend the ſame commodities to France, and import from thence Spaniſh cloths, damaſks, ſeveral ſorts of ſilk and woollen ſtuffs, gold and ſilver tiſſue. The French pay 3 per cent for all the goods they bring from France, and the Jews 10 per cent. on their imports from Italy. The Turks and Moors export to the Levant, woollen ſtuffs, lead, gold-duſt, and chequins, and a vaſt number of bales of caps; and bring, in return, ſilks, calicoes, iron, alum, and vermillion. They ſend much the ſame kind of commodities into Egypt; but the oil that is carried thither muſt be put up in jars, and not in caſks, becauſe the greateſt part of it is deſigned for the lamps of Mecca and Medina; and the Arabians would think it polluted, as the caſks might have formerly contained wine. They import, in exchange, from thence, linen, cotton, rice, flax, and coffee. The number of French ſhips freighted at Tunis, by Turks, Moors, and Jews, amounts yearly to 150 to the Levant, and 50 for France and Italy: as for thoſe of the Engliſh, their number is uncertain. All public conventions and inſtruments are written in the Arabic tongue, but the public commerce is commonly carried on by the lingua Franca.

TURCOCARIA, a town of European Turkey, in Livadia: 14 miles N. Livadia.

TURCOIN, a town of France, in the department of the North, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Lille. This town was taken by the duke of York, on the 17th of May, 1794, and a poſt fixed there, the command of which was given to Colonel Devay. On the 18th, the French attacked this poſt, and the duke of York diſpatched two battalions of Auſtrians, to make a diverſion on that part, with expreſs orders to fall back upon the main army, if hard preſſed; but, by ſome miſtake, theſe battalions joined Colonel Devay, at Turcoin. From this circumſtance an opening was left on the right of the duke of York's corps, of which the French commander immediately availed himſelf. At this period a column of 15,000 men appeared advancing from Lille; and another corps having forced general Otto's poſition, near Waterloo, attacked the Britiſh in the rear. The few troops that remained with his royal highneſs ſoon gave way, nor was it poſſible to rally them. The duke himſelf was obliged to fly, accompanied by a few dragoons, of the 16th regiment, and join general

Otto, with whom, from the diſaſtrous ſtate of his own army, he was obliged to remain. After this ſeparation, the very difficult taſk of extricating the Britiſh forces, devolved upon generals Abercrombie and Fox; and they performed this duty with great firmneſs and addreſs. It has been ſaid, that the allies, on this occaſion, did not act with that vigour and ſpirit which was expected; but the Auſtrian official details ſeem to caſt a principal ſhare of the blame on the Hanoverians, who, they aſſert, were the firſt to retreat. They created the greateſt confuſion, for their cavalry not only deſtroyed the foot, but threw the whole army into ſuch diſorder, that they became a helpleſs prey to the purſuing enemy. Of the loſs of the allies, we have no authentic return, but one account ſtates it at 3000; and it muſt have been very great, ſince the Britiſh troops alone loſt upwards of 1000 men, and 43 pieces of cannon. Two columns of the Imperial troops, which were brought up by the emperor and the prince of Saxe Coburg, were alſo obliged to retreat, with great loſs. The army of general Clairfaite being ſtill ſeparated by the Lys, was unable to co-operate. This unfortunate conflict may be ſaid to have decided the fate of the Netherlands: 2 leagues NNE. Lille, and 3 SW. Courtray.

TURIN, a city of Italy, and capital of Piedmont, ſituated at the conflux of the Po and the Grand Doria, about ſeven miles from the foot of the Cottian Alps, in the road from France to Italy, by the way of Mount Cenis: according to Pliny, the inhabitants derive their origin from the Ligurians, and were anciently called Taurini. Hannibal, the Carthaginian general, when he invaded Italy, took and deſtroyed the town, becauſe the inhabitants would not take part with him; which frightened the other people who inhabited the banks of the Po. It was erected into a Roman colony by Julius Cæſar, who gave it the name of Julia, and was called Auguſta Taurinorum by his ſucceſſor Auguſtus. It was ſucceſſively ſubjected to the Goths, Huns, Heruli, and Burgundians, who ruined and deſtroyed it, but it was ſoon rebuilt, though not ſo large as before. When the Lombards became maſters of the country, it became the capital of one of their principal duchies. Some of their dukes became kings of Italy. Such was Agilulph, or Agon, who, with his wife Theodelinga, built the cathedral conſecrated to John the Baptiſt, which is at preſent the metropolitan, and endowed it with great revenues. After Charlemagne had aboliſhed the kingdom of the Lombards, it appears that Turin became ſubject to the marquis of Suſa, who had the charge of guarding the paſſages of the Alps, and continued in that family to the death of Ulric Manfred, the laſt marquis of Suſa, in 1302; whoſe daughter, Adelaide, married with Odo, comte of Maurienne and Savoy. Turin ſubmitted to him and his deſcendants, who have poſſeſſed it with little interruption to this time. Turin is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and contains 110 churches or chapels, ſeveral hoſpitals, and about 65,000 inhabitants. The approach to it is magnificent, and the environs beautiful, though thick fogs from the two rivers are frequent in autumn and winter; ſo that the air of Turin is then very thick and moiſt. The four gates are highly ornamental; the ſtreets in the New Town are wide, ſtraight, clean, having plenty of water running through them, well built, in a good taſte, chiefly of brick ſtuccoed, and generally terminating in ſome agreeable object. No inhabitant can rebuild or repair his houſe but on an uniform plan, laid down by government, for the improvement of the city. The fortifications of Turin are regular, and kept in excellent repair. The citadel is a regular pentagon, conſiſting of five ſtrong baſtions, and is reputed one of the ſtrongeſt in Europe. At the end next the new gate is an arſenal, which, beſides the armories found in ſuch places, contains a cabinet of minerals, a good chemical laboratory, a library of books in mineralogy and metallurgy, and furnaces for caſting cannon: here, alſo, are mathematical, mechanical, and other maſters, for the inſtruction of engineers, miners, &c. The garriſon of Turin is always changed at the end of two years, and then there is a general review. The univerſity was founded firſt in the year 1405, and conſiſts of ſchools, wherein 24 profeſſors read lectures, from the 3d of November to the 24th of June; of the royal library, wherein are about 50,000 volumes of printed books, beſides manuſcripts: this is open every day, except holidays, both morning and afternoon. The royal muſeum has a good cabinet of medals, and a collection of antiquities, found chiefly in Piedmont or Sardinia, and elegantly arranged: alſo of natural hiſtory, as ſhells, and Engliſh minerals, poliſhed marbles, and hard ſtones, petrifactions, corals, zoophytes, and ſome minerals, collected by Donati, in the Adriatic; alſo, ſome cheſts of natural curioſities, which Donati, during his travels in Egypt and Arabia, ſent from Goa. In the military academy, young gentlemen, both natives and ſtrangers, may be inſtructed in the exerciſes at a moderate expence, the king defraying a part of the charge attending this inſtitution. The king's palace is in a ſimple and noble ſtyle of architecture. The apartments are handſomely fitted up and furniſhed: the cielings painted by Daniele di Sancterre and others. They contain a great collection of pictures, among which are many good ones. The king's theatre, or great opera-houſe, is reckoned one of the fineſt in Europe. The buildings which are moſt eſteemed in point of architecture, are, the palace of the duke of Savoy, called Caſtello Reale, by Filippo Giuvara; the Carignano palace, by Guarini; the buildings of the univerſity, and the town-houſe. There is a literary ſociety at Turin, who have publiſhed memoirs, under the title of Miſcellanea Philoſophico-Mathematica. The chief trade of this city and country is in thrown ſilk, which is ſent to England and Lyons; they manufacture, however, ſome of it into excellent ſtockings, and good ſilk for furniture. In the year 1536, Turin was taken by the French, and again in the year 1640, after a long ſiege. In the year 1706, the ſame enemy made another attempt, but after beſieging it upwards of three months, under the conduct of the duke of Orleans, they were driven away, with great loſs, by the duke of Savoy and prince Eugene. Long. 25. 19. TURKESTAN, or Turan, a country of Aſia, bounded on the north by deſerts, which ſeparate it from the dominions of Ruſſia, on the eaſt by a part of Tartary, belonging to the Calmuks, on the ſouth by Bukharia, and on the weſt by Charaſm, near 300 miles in length, and not much leſs in breadth. It is at preſent divided between two Tartar khans or chiefs; one of whom, reſiding at Taſchkant, poſſeſſes the eaſtern part; the other, who poſſeſſes the weſtern part, reſides at Turkeſtan or Taraz. The latter is generally called the khan of the Karakalpaks. Turkeſtan, taken in a larger ſenſe, is underſtood to include all the country between Ruſſia to the north, and Bukharia to the ſouth, and between the Caſpian Sea to the weſt, and Chineſe Tartary on the eaſt, not leſs than 700 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 350 from north to ſouth.

TURKEY, one of thoſe great ſovereignties which includes many countries and provinces, in Europe, Aſia, and Africa, extending from Long. 16. to 66. E. Ferro, reckoning from the weſtern part of Algiers, which is tributary to Baſſora, on the Gulf of Perſia, and from Lat. 13. to 45. N. including Arabia, and the provinces on the coaſts of the Black Sea, from Aden to Otchakov. In Europe, may be reckoned, Romelia, which comprehends Greece, Macedonia, Albania, the Morea, and Theſſaly, with the iſlands of the Archipelago or the Egean Sea; part of Sclavonia, Croatia, Servia, Boſnia, Bulgaria, &c. In Aſiatic Turkey are comprehended Natolia, Caramania, Syria, Turcomania, Diarbekir, and the three Arabias, Felix, Petræa, and Deſerta. In Africa, the countries ſubject to the Turks are, Barca and Egypt, and great part of Nubia. The ſtates of Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, are under their protection: ſo likewiſe are the princes of Moldavia and Walachia; and the republic of Raguſa pays them a tribute. The whole is divided into 25 governments, of which two are under the care of beglerbegs, viz. Natolia and Romelia; the reſt under pachas or baſhas: 1. Egypt, or Cairo. 2. Aleppo. 3. Diarbekir. 4. Natolia. 5. Boſnia. 6. Buda, now belonging to Hungary. 7. Caffa (now Theodoſia, and belonging to Ruſſia). 8. Caramania, or Cogni. 9. Cyp.

10. Candia. 11. Cyprus. 12. Damaſcus. 13. Van. 14. Maraſch. 15. Moſul. 16. That of the Captain Pacha. 17. Rica. 18. Romelia. 19. Sivas. 20. Schehereſul. 21. Bagdad. 22. Erzerum. 23. Temeſvar, now ſubject to Auſtria. 24. Trebiſond. 25. Tripoly, in Syria. Happily ſituated in the centre of our continent, the Turks might eaſily acquire the trade, as well as the empire of the world, if not withheld by their indolence and their maxims of government. But though the Turks are no traders, being rather diſcouragers and deſtroyers of trade; yet, as they poſſeſs ſo great a part of the world, and ſome of the moſt fruitful countries, and productive of the beſt and choiceſt merchandizes, it will always induce the European parts of the world to ſend their merchants to traffic with them: and the Turks themſelves, by their haughtineſs, deſpiſing manufacturing, and not improving the products which they enjoy in many places, muſt neceſſarily be obliged to purchaſe of other nations the things they ſtand in need of; which naturally encourages the merchants of the other nations to come among them. Thoſe that ſettle among them from the Eaſtern part of the world, are generally Greeks, Jews, Armenians, and Georgians; thoſe from the weſtern parts are chiefly Venetians, French, and Dutch, with ſome Jews alſo, chiefly Italian. The principal places of trade on this ſide the Turkiſh dominions, reſpecting Europe, where the ſaid merchants reſide, are Conſtantinople, Smyrna, Aleppo, Alexandretta or Scanderoon, Alexandria, Tripoli, Antioch, and the iſlands on the coaſt. There are ſome Chriſtian merchants in moſt of the iſlands belonging to the Turks, as at Cyprus, Candia, Rhodes, Zant, Cephalonia, and in moſt of the inhabited iſlands of the Archipelago. Theſe merchants are generally French, though there are ſome Jews. The merchants of England, France, and Holland, chiefly furniſh the Turks with fine woollen cloths, dyed ſcarlet, crimſon, purple, blue, and green; the firſt three in grain, and as rich in colour as poſſible, which raiſes their value. The Engliſh, beſides their cloth, ſend block-tin, lead, clock-work and watch-work, both in gold and ſilver; and all put together, the value was formerly for upwards of 300,000l. ſterling, one year with another. The returns which the Franks (for ſo the European merchants are called in Turkey) make from the Turks, and which are the product of the Turkiſh and Perſian dominions, are, raw ſilk, Caramania wool and wool of the iſlands, goat's-hair, ſpun or twiſted cotton wool, and yarn; oil, gums dragant, ſandarac, ſenega, arabic, ſarcocolla; Perſian ſilks, carpets, burdets, callicoes, from the iſlands of Siphanto, Paros, &c. Morocco leather, cordovans, ſhagreen-ſkins. Galls, from Syria; coffee, from Mocha, by Alexandria, balm, natural balſam, rhubarb; from Perſia, ſal-ammoniac, turmeric, incenſe, pumices; from Santorini, ſtorax; from Samos, ſcammony, myrrh, manna, galbanum, ſena, aloes, hepatica, olibanum, zedoary, okre, emery, ſealed earth, velani, coloquintida, euphorbium, mirabolans, frankincenſe, maſtic, opium, and other articles. Arrac, orange-flower-water, vermicelli, turpentine, wormwood, clover-ſeed, garden-ſeeds, rice, piſtachios, raiſins of Smyrna, pomegranates, box and cypreſs wood, fuſtic, ebony, walnut-tree, &c. As the Turks have little or no trade but what is, as it were, forced by the Europeans and others, ſo they have but few ſhips, compared to the extent of their naval dominions. The chief of their ſhipping is among the Grecian iſlands, and theſe are ſuch as belong to the Greeks. Alſo in the Morea, and in the Black Sea, they have ſome ſhipping; but, for the traffic between Egypt and the Porte, they generally hire Engliſh, Dutch, or Venetian ſhips, upon freight. The produce of the iſlands is exceedingly great, and aſſiſts the Turks in making returns for the goods they buy of the European merchants. From what has been ſaid of the trade to Turkey, a judgment may be formed of its importance; but notwithſtanding this, the Engliſh trade has for ſome years been greatly on the decline. The air of Turkey in Europe is healthy in itſelf, but the peſtilence is often brought there, and has more than once ſwept away the fifth of the inhabitants of Conſtantinople; yet by the prevalence of cuſtom, and of the Turkiſh doctrine of fatality, they give themſelves no great concern about it. The provinces are univerſally fruitful, though with ſome difference; vaſt quantities of all kinds of excellent grain and fruits being exported every year. The number of its inhabitants is greatly diſproportionate to the extent and goodneſs of the country, which may be chiefly attributed to peſtilence, polygamy, and war. This accounts for ſuch large tracts of fine ſoil lying waſte. The Turks are ſtigmatized among the Chriſtians as a ſlothful, ſtupid, and inhuman people; but they are by no means ſo wicked and dreadful a ſet of creatures as ſome writers have repreſented them. Turkey is not without men of parts, probity, and honour; nor benevolent, liberal, temperate, converſable, and ingenious people. In ſhort, there is here, as in all other countries and nations, a mixture of good and bad. Dricesch ſays, that, in compaſſion and love towards our neighbours, the Turks excel all the reſt of mankind; and this aſſertion is confirmed by ſeveral other travellers. One ſtriking mark of their charity, are the public inns, by the Aſiatics called Caravanſeri, which are to be met with almoſt in every little village. In theſe a traveller, of whatever religion or country he be, may continue three days gratis; and in not a few he is found alſo in victuals. The Turks are generally robuſt and well-ſhaped, of a good mien, and patient of hardſhips, which renders them fit for war, to which indeed they inure themſelves from their youth. Perſons of rank ſeldom train up their children to any thing elſe, out of a notion that no glory is comparable to that acquired in war. In their dreſs, manner of living, and cuſtoms, they are particular. They ſhave their heads, but wear long beards, of which they are extremely careful, except thoſe in the ſeraglio, and military men, who wear only whiſkers. The turban, or Turkiſh band, worn by the men, is white, and conſiſts of long pieces of thin linen made up together in ſeveral folds. No one but a Turk muſt preſume to wear a white turban. Their clothes are long and full. They ſit, eat, and ſleep, agreeably to the cuſtom of the Orientals, on the floor, on cuſhions (ſophas) matraſſes, and carpets. Rice is their moſt general food, and coffee their uſual drink, wine being interdicted. They expend great ſums on fountains, and no country indeed affords ſo fine; and thoſe not only in the towns, but in the country, and other ſolitary places, for the refreſhment of travellers and labourers. Their moſt uſual ſalutation is to bow the head a little, laying the right hand on their breaſt; but to perſons of rank they ſtoop ſo low as to touch and kiſs the border of their veſt. In war time, the left hand is the place of honour among military men, but in time of peace this diſtinction ceaſes among the officers of ſtate and relations. The fair ſex are here kept under a rigorous confinement. The Arabic word Haram, which ſignifies a ſacred or prohibited thing, is in its fulleſt ſenſe, uſed both of the women's habitation, and of the women themſelves. The ſeraglios are improperly termed harams, the word ſeraglio ſignifying no more than a palace. The nobility among the Turks are the military chief officers, judges, and eccleſiaſtics. The Turkiſh commonalty enjoy the greateſt liberty; and to the orders of the Porte, which muſt be anſwered with the head, thoſe only are expoſed who hold conſiderable poſts; or, as the phraſe is in Turkey, "eat the ſultan's bread." The Greeks, who are the ancient inhabitants of the country, live intermixed with the Turks, and in ſeveral places, particularly the iſlands, outnumber them. In Conſtantinople alone it is computed that there are no leſs than 400,000. They are accuſtomed to ſervitude, and prefer living under the Turkiſh exactions, to the ſpiritual tyranny of the pope: but they muſt be very cautious of not giving the leaſt colour for ſuſpicion of holding correſpondence with the enemies of the Ottoman porte, or of meditating a ſedition; in caſe alſo of a war with any of the Chriſtian powers, it is uſual, for the greater ſecurity, to diſarm them. All Greeks from the age of fourteen, pay annually, at the beginning of the Turkiſh feaſt of Beiram, a head money, in value about a ducat, and receive a note of it. The eccleſiaſtics are aſſeſſed higher: a deacon paying two ducats, and an archimandrite four; but the biſhops, archbiſhops and patriarchs pay large ſums, generally as much as the arbitrary avarice of the grand vizir and baſhas ſhall think proper to require. The duties on traders are eſtimated to the value and price of the commodities they import. The Turks every where lay hold of all opportunities of extorting money from the Greeks, but eſpecially from their clergy: in return for this tribute, they enjoy the protection of the Ottoman porte, and are maintained in the quiet poſſeſſion of their properties; inſomuch that no Turk is to inſult them, take any thing from them, or intrude themſelves into their houſes, againſt their will; and in caſe of any ſuch injuries, they are certain of expeditious juſtice againſt the delinquents. The Greek women are exempt from all taxes, as are likewiſe great numbers of other Greeks, who ſerve in the navy, or elſewhere. It ſometimes happens, indeed, that a Greek girl, of diſtinguiſhed beauty, is taken away, and carried to the ſeraglio; but Chriſtian children are not in general forced away from their parents to be brought up in Mahometaniſm; and when any thing of that kind is done, it muſt be in the provinces which are at a diſtance from Conſtantinople. The Turks are of the Mahometan religion, and appropriate to themſelves the name of Moſlemim, which has been ſtrangely corrupted into Muſſelman, ſignifying perſons profeſſing the doctrine of Mahomet, which he calls Iſlam. Drinking wine is manifeſtly prohibited in the Koran, yet the Turks make uſe of it occaſionally, without any ſcruple, though inſtead of it, they generally uſe ſherbet, a liquor made of honey, ſpices, and the juice of fruits. Polygamy is indeed permitted, but the Koran enjoins that no man ſhall have more than four wives and concubines; and to exceed that number, is the particular privilege of the prophet and his ſucceſſors: divorces are alſo allowed of, but no one may take back again the wife he has once repudiated, till ſhe has been married to another, and afterwards divorced from him. Friday is the day ſet apart for divine worſhip. The churches of the Turks are called moſches, and the ſmaller ones meſches. The chief eccleſiaſtic is the mufti, which ſignifies an expounder of the law, and his office is of ſuch dignity, that when he comes to court, the emperor himſelf riſes from his ſeat, and advances ſeven ſteps to meet him. He alone has the honour of kiſſing the ſultan's left ſhoulder; whereas the grand vizir, with a more profound inclination of body, kiſſes only the edge of the emperor's veſt, who advances only three ſteps to meet him. By the law, the mufti is to be conſulted on all emergencies, in thoſe more particularly relating to peace and war. As the mufti of the Turks may be compared to the pope; ſo a cadaliſkar, who is alſo a ſecular perſon, is not unlike a patriarch; a mola is an archbiſhop; a cadie is alſo a layman, may be accounted a biſhop; and an iman

a prieſt. The chief employment of the latter is praying. The Turks have alſo their convents and monks, under the general name of derviſes. The head of the Greek church in Turkey in Europe, is the patriarch of Conſtantinople, who is choſen by the neighbouring archbiſhops and metropolitans, and confirmed by the emperor, or grand vizir; he is a perſon of great dignity, being the principal of the Greek patriarchs, and head and director of the Eaſtern church. His income amounts to no leſs than 120,000 guilders, of which he pays the one-half, by way of annual tribute to the Ottoman porte, adding 6000 guilders beſides, by way of preſent, at the feaſt of Beiram. Subordinate to him are 70 archbiſhops and metropolitans, and a much greater number of biſhops. An archimandrite is the director of one or more convents, which are called mandren, and rank above an abbot, of which each convent has one. The monks, prieſts and ſtudents excepted, are obliged to follow ſome handicraft, and lead an auſtere life. The moſt celebrated are thoſe of Mount Athos. The Greeks have but few nunneries at preſent. The ſecular clergy are ſubject to no rules, as the regulars are, who perform divine worſhip. They are allowed to marry, but that only before ordination, and then only once, and that with a virgin. Theſe ſecular eccleſiaſtics never riſe higher than an archprieſt; the biſhops, metropolitans, archbiſhops, and patriarchs, being choſen from among the monks. The Armenians, the Roman Catholics, and Jews, have alſo the free exerciſe of their religion, and the Swedes have been permitted to build a Lutheran church, at Conſtantinople. The Turks are not without all kinds of learning, having ſome ſchools, colleges, and academies. And, in this century, a Turkiſh printing office was ſet up, at Conſtantinople, by Ibrahim Effendi, who, after great oppoſition, obtained leave to print all kinds of books, except on matters of religion; accordingly, among others, he publiſhed ſome maps and books of hiſtory and geography. The Turks are of Tartarian, or Scythian extraction, this appellation being firſt given them in the middle ages, as a proper name, it being a general title of honour to all the nations comprehended under the two principal branches of Tartar and Mogul, and therefore never uſed as a proper name of any Scythian or Tartarian people: nor do even the Turks appropriate it peculiarly to themſelves; the word Tur, as an adjective, ſignifying ſublime and pre-eminent, and, as an appellative, a governor. Turci, therefore, may import both the governor of a hord (ki, among the Tartars, ſignifying a hord or company) as well as the hord itſelf. The Scythian or Tartarian nation, to which the name of Turks has been particularly given, dwell betwixt the Black and Caſpian Seas, and became firſt known in the 7th century, when Heraclius, emperor of the Eaſt, took them into his ſervice, under whom they ſo diſtinguiſhed themſelves, by their fidelity and bravery, in the conqueſt of Perſia, that the Arabian and Saracen caliphs, not only had particular bodies of them for guards, but their armies were likewiſe filled with them. Thus they gradually got the power into their hands, and ſet up and dethroned caliphs at pleaſure. Some governors alſo of this nation, have wholly revolted from the dominions of the caliphs. This happened about the 9th century. By this ſtrict union of the Turks with the Saracens or Arabs, the former were brought to embrace the Mahometan religion; ſo that they are now become intermixed, and have jointly enlarged their conqueſts. The Turks, however, were ſuperior, and ſubdued the Saracens. Jenghis Khan, or Zengis-Chan, at the head of the Oguzinian hord, iſſued out of great Tartary, and made himſelf maſter of a great tract of land, near the Caſpian Sea, and even of all Perſia and Aſia the Leſſer. Incited by his example and ſucceſs, Schah Soliman, prince of the town of Nera, on the Caſpian Sea, in the year 1214, paſſed Mount Caucaſus, with 50,000 men; he made his way through Adirbeitzan, or Media, as far as the borders of Syria; and though ſtopped there in his career, by the Jenghizkan Tartars, yet in the year 1219, he penetrated a ſecond time into Aſia the Leſſer, as far as the Euphrates. The report of his conqueſts reaching the court of Perſia, Soliman and his people were ſpoken of as Turks, a name common to all the Scythians, who came out of Tartary, under the command of Jenghiz-khan. Othman, his grandſon, made himſelf maſter of ſeveral countries and places in Leſſer Aſia, belonging to the Grecian empire; and having, in the year 1300, at the city of Karahiſſar, taken upon him the title of emperor of the Othmans, called his people after his own name. His reſidence was fixed at Eſkiſhehr, and excluſive of many other towns, in the year 1326, he took Pruſa, in Bithynia, now called Burſa, which his ſon and ſucceſſor, Orchan, made the ſeat of his empire. Orchan ſent his two ſons, Solyman and Amurath, on an expedition into Europe: the former of whom reduced the city of Gallipoli, and the latter took Tyrilos. Amurath ſucceeding his father in the government, in the year 1360, conquered Ancyra, Adrianople, and Philippopolis. In the year 1362, he inſtituted the janizaries, over-run Servia, and fell upon Macedonia and Albania. His ſon and ſucceſſor, Bajazet, was ſucceſsful both in Europe and Aſia, defeating the Chriſtians, near Nicopolis; but, in the year 1401, he himſelf was routed and taken priſoner, by Tamerlane. His ſons diſagreed, but Mahomet I. held the ſovereignty, and his ſon Amurath II. diſtinguiſhed himſelf by ſeveral important enterprizes; and, particularly, in the year 1444, gained a ſignal victory over the Hungarians, near Varna. Mahomet II. and the greateſt of all the emperors, in the year 1453, made himſelf maſter of Conſtantinople, reducing the whole Grecian empire under his dominion. He ſubdued 12 kingdoms and 200 towns. Bajazet II. and Selim I. enlarged the Turkiſh empire in Europe, Aſia, and Africa. Soliman I. is not more famous for his victories over the Hungarians, than for his body of laws. The ſucceeding emperors were not ſo fortunate: Mahomet IV. in the year 1669, ſubdued Candia; and in 1683, laid ſiege to Vienna, but in Hungary met ill ſucceſs. In the reigns of Soliman II. Achmet II. and Muſtapha, the Hungarians and Venetians were ſo ſucceſsful againſt the Turks, that Muſtapha II. in the year 1699, was glad to come to a peace at Karlowitz. Achmet III. in 1718, concluded the treaty of Paſſarowitz, and Mahomet V. by the peace of Belgrade, in the year 1739, reannexed Servia, a part of Walachia, and Choczim, to the empire. In the ſucceſſion to the empire, no regard is paid to age or birthright, the Turks thinking it ſufficient, if, in their elections, they keep to the Ottoman family. Women are excluded from the throne. The government is indeed purely monarchical: but, if the emperor indulges not the humours of the people, and eſpecially of the mutinous janizaries, he is not only in danger of being depoſed, but alſo of being put to death. The emperor's council of ſtate is ſtiled galibe Divan, or Divan galibe, and meets twice a week in the emperor's palace, namely, on Sundays and Thurſdays. The grand vizir ſits as preſident, having the cadaliſkar of Romelia at his right hand, and that of Natolia at his left. The mufti alſo aſſiſts, when expreſsly ſummoned. All the others, lubbe vizirs, have likewiſe a ſeat here, and next to them ſtand on one ſide the teſterdar, or high treaſurer, the reis-effendi, ſecretary of ſtate, and other commiſſioners of the calem, or exchequer; but the military officers, ſuch as the aga of the janizaries, the aga of the ſpahis, the aga of the ſiluds, &c. ſit within the divan. The ſultan hears what paſſes from an adjoining chamber, which looks into the divan. When the ſultan convenes a general council, to which are ſummoned all the great perſons of the empire, the clergy, the military, and other officers, and even the old and experienced ſoldiers; ſuch a divan is called Ajak Divani; the whole aſſembly ſtanding. The higheſt officer, and next to the emperor is the grand vizir, whoſe income, without any breach of probity, may amount to 600,000 dollars a year, excluſive of preſents and other perquiſites. The high court of juſtice is held in a large hall of the grand vizir's palace, called Divanchane. The grand vizir being preſident, is obliged four times a week, namely on Friday, Saturday, Monday, and Wedneſday, to ſit in the divan, and adminiſter juſtice to the people; unleſs, which ſeldom happens, he be hindred by affairs of a very important nature. A Begler-beg is a viceroy, with ſeveral provinces under his command; the name itſelf ſignifying a prince of princes: under theſe are the baſhaws or governors, whoſe poſts are very conſiderable but precarious; and ſubordinate again to theſe are the ſangiacs, who may be termed deputy-governors. The janizaries, properly jengitſheri, a word compounded of jengi new, and iſcheri a ſoldier, are the flower of the Turkiſh land forces; they are all infantry, and were firſt formed out of captive Chriſtians by the emperor Amurath the Firſt: their number is generally 40,000, divided into 162 companies, or chambers, called Odas, in which they live together at Conſtantinople, as in a convent; the recruits are termed yamagi; the capis are alſo infantry; the ſpahis light-horſe; and the timar ſpahi, or the old and preferred ſpahis, inſtead of pay, have villages in ſeveral of the provinces, and are obliged, according to their income, to bring at leaſt three ſlaves with them into the field. The foot, under the command of a baſhaw, are ſtill called by the ancient name of Segban, and the horſe Seraje. The tributary princes, as the princes of Moldavia and Walachia, are obliged alſo to ſend auxiliaries. The whole Turkiſh army makes above 300,000 men. The janizaries and ſpahi have their aga, or general. A ſeraſkier, or commander in chief of the whole army, muſt be a baſhaw of two or three horſe-tails: theſe horſe-tails are the inſignia of grandeur in Turkey, and carried before the great men. It is only the principal baſhaws, and other perſons of the higheſt diſtinction, who are allowed three. The beglerbegs and ſangiacs have alſo their ſeveral commands. The Turkiſh navy is laid up at Conſtantinople near the arſenal, and conſiſts of about 40 large ſhips; but in time of war, when the fleet is put to ſea, the Turks receive auxiliary ſhips from Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli: they buy up alſo or hire merchants' ſhips, and thoſe riſe a fleet of 150 ſail, excluſive of galleys of two, three, and four banks of oars: the admiral is ſtiled capudan or capitan-baſhaw.

TURNHOUT, a town of the duchy of Brabant, built in the year 1212, by Henry IV. duke of Brabant. In the year 1545, the emperor Charles V. gave it to his ſiſter Mary, queen of Hungary, to enjoy during her life. In the year 1648, after the peace of Munſter, Philip IV. gave it to princeſs Amelia, widow of Frederic Henry of Naſſau, from whom it came to the houſe of Orange. In the year 1596, the comte de Varac, general of the Spaniſh artillery, was defeated near this town, by prince Maurice of Naſſau. The comte had 6000 horſe, and the prince only 800, yet notwithſtanding this great inequality, by an injudicious movement the victory was complete, and 2500 Spaniards killed, beſides their general. The quarter of Turnhout comprehends 15 villages: 25 miles SSW. Bois-le-Duc, and 18 SSE. Breda.

TURUCHAN, a river of Ruſſia, which riſes from a lake, ſituated in Long. 102. Lat. 67. 42, and runs into the Eniſei, a little to the S. of Turuchanſk.

TURUCHANSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Tobolſk, on the Eniſei, formerly called Mangaſea. According to an old tradition delivered down from father to ſon, a colony from Archangel built the old oſtrog of Mangaſea, before there was ſuch a thing as a Ruſſian town known in Siberia. It derives its name from a Samoiedean tribe, who inhabited this country, and call themſelves Mangaſe: for this people, by promiſing to pay tribute to the Ruſſians, gave occaſion to the building of this town. Old Mangaſea, which ſtood on the river Taz, gradually fell to decay; and in the year 1600, the preſent town was built, and the inhabitants of the old oſtrog were removed hither. This new oſtrog was alſo called Mangaſea: but as it lies at the mouth of the river Turukan, it had alſo the name of Turukanſk, which it retains to this day. As this oſtrog proved the means of ſeveral nations becoming tributary to the Ruſſians, it was probably on that account afterwards endowed with the privileges of a town. The houſes in this town are not contiguous, and at moſt do not exceed 100. The greateſt part of it is incloſed within a ſmall wooden fortification, with four pieces of cannon; and in this ſtands the houſe of the governor or prefect, and the principal church; and without it are two other churches. Moſt of the inhabitants have always been Coſacs; who were placed here, in order to ſubdue, or at leaſt to check, the Pagan nations of this country, particularly the Tunguſians and Samoiedes: 724 miles NE. Tobolſk, and 1800 ENE. Peterſburg. Long. 106. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 65. 40. N.

TUSCANY (Duchy of), a country of Italy, ſituated between the Mediterranean, the Tiber, and the Apennines: ſome parts of it are diſtributed among the territories of Modena, Lucca, and Genoa, which portions excepted, its extent from north to ſouth, is about 115 miles, and its breadth about 80. The face of the country is beautifully varied with hills and vallies, and the ſoil rich and fertile, producing corn in abundance, with excellent fruit, oranges, lemons, olives, and grapes. The air, in ſeveral parts, is rendered unwholeſome by fens and moraſſes: the ſalt-pits are rich. Manna is gathered in the marſhlands near the ſea; and the mountainous parts are rich in mines and minerals. In ſome places are found amethyſts, jaſpers, cornelians, cryſtal, lapis-lazuli, chalcedony, marble, ſlate, alabaſter, ſulphur, alum, and quickſilver. Several medicinal ſprings have been diſcovered beſides thoſe of Piſa. The principal rivers they Arno: Florence is the capital. This country was anciently called Etruria, and the inhabitants Etrurii, Tyrrheni, and Tuſcani, though the preſent does not include the whole of Etruria: after ſeveral revolutions and changes, it became a republic, called, from its chief city, the republic of Florence. In this republic, the Medici family obtained by commerce, the wealth and grandeur of princes; and Henry II. king of France, choſe his conſort, the famous Catharine, out of this family. The emperor Charles V. in the year 1531, at the ſolicitation of Clement VII. created Alexander Medici, duke of Florence; and afterwards gave him in marriage, Margaret, his natural daughter. His nephew and ſucceſſor, Coſmo I. was, in the year 1569, declared great duke, by pope Pius V. which title was at laſt ratified by the emperor Maximilian II. in the year 1575, on condition of his enjoying and holding it as a fief of the empire. In 1699, the emperor conferred on the great duke the title of royal highneſs, to which the pope and the court of France readily acquieſced. The great duke, John Gaſton, having no heirs, it was ſtipulated in the 5th article of the quadruple alliance, made in 1718, that the duchy ſhould, by all the contracting parties, be for ever acknowledged a male fief of the Roman empire; and that, with the conſent of the Germanic body, the emperor ſhould confer it as a fief on the king of Spain's eldeſt ſon by the ſecond marriage, from him to devolve to his male deſcendants, and on their failure to the younger brother and his heirs; but that Leghorn was always to remain a free port. This was not only confirmed in the treaty of Vienna, in 1725, but the great duke alſo, and his ſiſter, in 1731, concluded with the king of Spain a family treaty of like import, and the infant Don Carlos was accordingly brought up at the great duke's court at Florence. New differences ariſing, and, in 1733, breaking out into a war, in which the emperor, in 1734, loſt the kingdom of Naples and Sicily, Don Carlos cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed king, and, by the peace of 1736, retained the poſſeſſions of theſe kingdoms. On the other hand it was ſtipulated, that the great duchy of Tuſcany, after the demiſe of the poſſeſſor, ſhould eſcheate to the Houſe of Lorrain in lieu of that duchy, which was to be reſigned to king Staniſlaus. This took place in 1737, and by this means became annexed to the Houſe of Auſtria.

TYROLESE, or Upper Auſtria, a country of Germany, bounded on the north by Bavaria, on the eaſt by Salzburg and Carinthia, on the ſouth by the dominions of Venice, and on the weſt by Swabia and the Griſons: in this circle are included the county of Tyrol Proper, the biſhopric of Trent, and the biſhopric of Brixen. The biſhopric of Trent is ſituated to the ſouth; the biſhopric of Brixen occupies the north-eaſt part; and the county of Tyrol the centre. This country is mountainous, and capable of making a powerful ſtand againſt the invading enemy; but the Tyrolian mountains, though covered with ſnow to the very utmoſt ſummits of them, are alſo fertile; whence are found not only the fineſt woods, abounding in a variety of game, but alſo large and good corn-fields; or, where theſe mountains are barren, there are, for the moſt part, mine works, or excellent marble, of all colours. Corn thrives well in many, nay, in moſt places here; and in ſome places flax. On the eminences grow, alſo, all ſorts of the fine fruits which Italy yields, and likewiſe ſmall woods of cheſtnut-trees, together with fine vines. Among the wild beaſts here are chamois and wild goats. There are, likewiſe, in this county, ſeveral ſpecies of precious ſtones, as granates, rubies, amethyſts, and emeralds, a ſpecies of diamonds, agates, cornelians, chalcedonies, &c. Hot-baths and medicinal ſprings are found in ſeveral places; at Hall are profitable ſalt-pits. Not far from Schwatz is a mine of ſilver and copper; and ſome miles diſtant from the latter is alſo a mine-work, which yields a very ſoft and malleable copper. The copper contains in it ſome ſilver and gold. Good lead, together with fine mineral colours, alum, vitriol, and a fine ſilver ore, are alſo found here. The principal rivers in this county are the Ihn, or Inn, the Adige, the Leck, and the Iſer. In this country are twelve towns and ten villages, which have markets. The common people here, excluſive of the ſubſiſtence which the mines and ſalt-works yield them, have not much to earn; whence a great part of them ſeek for ſubſiſtence out of the country, either by trade or labour. Tyrol was formerly a part of Rhœtia, but, in the ſixth century, the greateſt part of it deſcended to the dukes of Bavaria, and this was afterwards reckoned in Noricum: but, over the ſouthern part, the Longobards, at the ſame time, extended their dominion. The dukes of Bavaria appointed marggraves here; but Henry the Lyon, duke of Bavaria and Saxony, being, in the year 1180, put under the ban of the empire, by the emperor Frederic I. this laſt diſmembered the preſent province of Tyrol from Bavaria, inveſting therewith the marggravate Berchtold, under the title of duke of Meran. Otto II. grandſon to this Berchtold, dying without male iſſue, in the year 1248, this country came to count Albrecht III. who reſided at the citadel of Tyrol, gave up the title of a duke of Meran, and ſtyled the whole country the county of Tyrol. Tyrol had, afterwards, frequently princes of its own, of the houſe of Auſtria; the laſt of whom, named Sigiſmund Francis, died in the year 1665, upon which the emperor Leopold received homage on that account, in perſon, at Inſpruck. The high ſovereign colleges over Tyrol are ſeated at Inſpruck; and, towards the maintenance of the military ſtate of the houſe of Auſtria, it contributes, yearly, 100,000 florins. In this county lies one regiment of foot, which from the country receives its name, Tyrol.

TYRONE, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulſter, bounded on the north-eaſt by Londonderry, on the eaſt by Lough Neagh, on the ſouth-eaſt by Armagh, on the ſouth by Monaghan, on the ſouth-weſt by Fermanagh, and on the weſt by Donegal. It contains 35 pariſhes, and about 28,700 inhabitants: about 43 miles in its greateſt length from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt, and from 18 to 33 in breadth. The ſoil varies exceedingly; in ſome parts it is rich and fertile, in ſome rough and mountainous, but in general cultivated. The linen manufacture flouriſhes in many of the towns; and near Dungannon are ſome collieries. Ten members are returned to the Iriſh parliament by the county, the towns of Strabane, Dungannon, Augher, and Clogher, two each.

VALAIS, a country and independent republic in alliance with Swiſſerland, bounded on the north by the canton of Bern, and the lake of Geneva, on the eaſt by the Milaneſe, on the ſouth by the Milaneſe and Piedmont, and on the weſt by Savoy; about 100 miles in length from eaſt to weſt, and from 20 to 25 in breadth from north to ſouth. It is watered by the Rhône, in its whole length. The whole country is one large vale, extending eaſt and weſt, and to the north and ſouth ſides environed by very high mountains. Among the ſouthern mountains the moſt remarkable is the Mont St. Bernard, anciently called Mons Penninus, a name given to the whole Appennine chain. The principal hill on the north ſide is the Gemmi, lying towards the frontiers of the canton of Bern, which in winter is impracticable, and its deſcent towards the Valais and Leuck, ſteep and narrow, and formerly dangerous. To remedy this inconvenience, in the year 1736, ſeveral rocks were blown up, the road in moſt places widened to the breadth of ſeven feet, and walls raiſed in the moſt ſteep and looſeſt parts, ſo that at preſent travelling is much more ſafe and commodious. The Valais is a country of extraordinary fertility. The harveſt begins in May, and holds till the latter end of October; the corn in the bottom of the chief vally being harveſted firſt, next that in the ſide vallies, and laſt of all, that on the hills, which yield grain at an uncommon height. The low lands excel the upper in winter products, and theſe again the former in ſummer fruits. Excluſive of the beſt kinds of grain, ſuch as wheat, barley, and rye, this country abounds alſo in good wine, particularly in a fine muſcadel, with plenty of apples, pears, plumbs, cherries, cheſtnuts, mulberries, ſmall-nuts, ſaffron, &c. and about Sion grow alſo almonds, figs, pomegranates, and other of the more delicate fruits. Both hills and vallies breed great numbers of cattle, and afford plenty of deer, hares, and other game. The mountains are ſuppoſed to contain lead, copper, and ſilver mines; but the produce would not anſwer the expence of working them. Here is likewiſe pit-coal. The Valais is noted for two hot baths of celebrated virtue, as namely thoſe of Brug, or Gleuſe, and Leuck, the latter of which is commonly known by the appellation of the Valais bath. Beſides theſe it has ſeveral other mineral waters. It is reckoned an uncommon thing to meet with a Valeſan, who is without a large wen. They are in general below the middle ſize, and moſt of them are carried off by an aſthma. The cauſe of theſe evils, is thought to be the clayiſh ſandy water. In the upper tythings, the prevailing language is the German, but the inhabitants of Sion, in the Upper Valais, with all in the Lower, ſpeak a corrupt French; though in both parts, eſpecially in the chief burgh, they apply themſelves to the German, French, Italian, and Latin; being all indiſpenſably neceſſary to them in their intercourſe with the cantons of Bern and Uri, Savoy, Piedmont, and the Milaneſe; therefore a ſtranger cannot but be ſurpriſed at the fluency with which the meaneſt people here ſpeak thoſe four tongues. The religion is the Roman Catholic. The ancient inhabitants of this country were the Lepontii, Viberi, with the Seduni, and Veragri, who ſold their liberty dear to Sergius Galba, general of Julius Cæſar. In the middle ages it came to be called Valeſia, and in 1032, under the emperor Conrad II. devolved to the German empire, as a part of the ſecond Burgundian kingdom. In the year 1035, that prince made over the Lower Valais, to the counts of Savoy. The inhabitants of the Upper Valais, reſolutely maintained their liberties, as well againſt the dukes of Zaringen, who in the year 1157, were by Frederick I. appointed guardians of the biſhopric of Sion as againſt the biſhops of that ſee, who aſſumed the title of counts of the Valais, and after that drove out the families of the Barons Tour and Raren, who had uſurped a dangerous authority among them. In 1475, the biſhop of Geneva fell on the Upper Valais with a body of 18,000 men, conſiſting of Lower Valeſians and Savoyards; but the Upper Valeſians being aſſiſted with 3000 troops by Bern, Friburg, and Solothurn, their allies, defeated the biſhop, and even made a conqueſt of the Lower Valais, which ever ſince that time has been ſubject to them. In the ſame year alſo, they formed a perpetual alliance with Bern, which was renewed in 1643; and in 1529, with the whole Helvetic body. In 1533, they entered into a more particular union with the ſeven popiſh cantons. The republic of the Upper Valais, conſiſts of ſeven parts, called Zehnden or Zenten, the ſame as tythings. In ſix of theſe the government is democratical, but that of the ſeventh, namely the city of Sion, is ariſtocratical. Each tything ſends a repreſentative to the general diet, called the Landrath, which aſſembles twice a year, viz. in May and December, in the Majoria houſe at Sion. The ſummons for it being iſſued by the Landeſhauptmann. This Landrath has the management of the public concerns, both civil and military, beſides appeal of proceſſes brought before the tythings, and gives audience to envoys, &c. Over each tything is a chief called a meyer or caſtellan, with a particular regency and juriſdiction; but the tything court is compoſed of the tything judge, aſſiſted by twelve aſſeſſors and judges, who act both in civil and criminal caſes. The military officers of each tything are under the direction of a banneret and captain. The Lower Valais is divided into diſtricts or bailiwicks, ſubject to the Upper Valais. Sion is the capital of the country.

VALDIVIA, a river of South America, in Chili, which runs into the South Pacific Ocean, near the town of Valdivia.

VALDIVIA, or Baldivia, a ſeaport of South America, in the country of Chili, ſituated on a bay of the Pacific Ocean, to which it gives name, built in the year 1552, by Peter Valdivia, who gave it his name. There are many gold mines here; and the Spaniards have erected ſeveral ſtrong forts, and leſſer batteries to defend its entrance, as it is ſuppoſed to be the key of the South Seas. It is encloſed with walls, built of earth, and defended by twelve pieces of cannon, which are ſixteen pounders. To the entrance of the harbour, there are at leaſt 100 pieces of cannon on each ſide. The whites of Peru and Chili, baniſhed for their crimes, are ſent hither to ſupport it. The Dutch made themſelves maſters of it, in 1643, but were obliged to abandon it, leaving all their cannon, thirty or forty pieces, baggage, and ſtores; on advice that ſuccours were arriving to oppoſe them from Peru. The viceroy ſends 30,000 crowns a year, to ſupport the garriſon. Valdivia has a military governor, nominated by the king. Here is alſo a good body of troops, both for garriſoning the place, and the forts built to defend the entrance of the river and harbours in it. This government has undergone ſome viciſſitudes in point of ſubordination, being ſometimes independent of the preſidents of Chili, and immediately ſubject to the viceroy of Lima: and at other times a part of the former. At laſt, on weighing the difficulties for providing for any ſudden exigence, or having a watchful eye over its neceſſary concerns at ſo great a diſtance as Lima, it was annexed to the juriſdiction of the preſident of Chili, as being nearer at hand to ſee that the forces are always on a good footing, and conſtantly in a proper poſture of defence. Valdivia receives from the treaſury of Lima, an annual ſupply of 70,000 dollars, 30,000 in ſpecie, the value of 30,000 in clothes for the ſoldiers, and 10,000 in ſpecie, which is paid to the king's officers at Santiago, in order to purchaſe flour, charqui, graſſa, and other neceſſaries for the garriſon at Valdivia. Theſe remittances are conveyed in ſhips, which ſail from Valparaiſo: 60 leagues S. Conception. Long. 55. 55. W. Ferro. Lat. 39. 40. S.

VALDORF, or Waldorf, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Ravenſberg: 3 miles SW. Bielefeld.

VALDROME, a town of France, in the department of the Drome, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Die: 6 leagues SSE. Die.

VALEDIA, a ſea-port town of Africa, in the kingdom of Fez, ſituated on the coaſt of the Atlantic, in a ſtony plain: here is a very ſpacious natural baſon, ſurrounded by rocks, capable of containing above 1000 ſhips, but the entrance, which is entirely open to the weſt, is extremely difficult and dangerous. The coaſt is lined with rocks, near thirty feet in height, which anciently muſt have been waſhed by the ſea, the Moors living in the caverns, hollowed out by the water. At the bottom of the rocks, the ſands heaped up by time have formed a plain, laid out into gardens and cultivated. The town is little more than a circle of walls, containing but few inhabitants: 9 leagues SSW. Mazagan.

VALEGGIO, a town of Italy, in the Veroneſe: 14 miles SW. Verona. —This town is on the Mincio: it was taken by the French, June 1, 1796.

Valença, a town of Portugal, in the province of Entre Duero e Minho, on the ſouth ſide of the Minho, oppoſite Tuy in Spain, and ſaid to have been founded by the ſoldiers of Viratius. It contains two pariſh churches, an hoſpital, two convents, and about 900 inhabitants: 16 miles W. Oporto, and 30 WNW. Bragança. Long. 10. 13. E. Ferro. Lat. 42. N.

Valença de Alcantara, a town of Spain, in the province of Eſtremadura, on the borders of Portugal. In the year 1705, it was taken by the Portugueſe: 8 leagues SW. Alcantara.

Valença de Duero, a town of Portugal, in the province of Beira, ſituated about half a league from the Duero: 4 leagues W. St. Joao de Peſqueira.

VALENCE, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Lot and Garonne: 4 leagues SE. Agen, and 7½ E. Nerac. Long. 18. 33. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 6. N.

VALENCE, a town of France, and capital of the department of the Drôme, on the left ſide of the Rhône. Before the revolution, the ſee of a biſhop, and capital of the principality called Valentinois. An univerſity was brought hither from Grenoble, in the year 1454: 16½ poſts N. Avignon, and 71 SSE. Paris. Long. 22. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 57. N.

VALENCE EN ALBIGEOIS, a town of France, in the department of the Tarn, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Alby: 4 leagues NE. Alby, and 7 SSW. Rhodez.

VALENCE,

VALENCIA, a province of Spain, bounded on the north by Aragon and Catalonia, on the eaſt and ſouth-eaſt by the Mediterranean, on the ſouth-weſt by Murcia, and on the weſt by New Caſtile, about 220 miles in length from north to ſouth; the breadth is unequal, from 20 to 45. Valencia is, in proportion to its extent, one of the beſt peopled provinces of Spain: it contains 7 principal cities, 64 great towns, upwards of 1000 villages, and about 800,000 inhabitants; it has four ſeaports, the moſt conſiderable of which is that of Alicant; the ſoil is extremely fertile although divided by mountains. Theſe contain mines of Sinopica or blood-ſtone, iron, and alum. There are alſo found quarries of marble, jaſper, plaſter, lapis calaminaris, and potters clay, of which different kinds of earthen veſſels are made. This province annually produces nearly 1,000,000 weight of ſilk; 100,000 arrobas of hemp, 130,000 arrobas of oil, and 3,000,000 cantaros of wine; ſo that its active commerce with France, England, and Holland, is conſiderable; it is calculated at 10,000,000 of piaſtres per annum, which make about 40,000,000 of French livres; above 600,000l. ſterling. This eſtimate, however, appears to be rather exaggerated. Valencia is watered by 35 rivers, all of which run toward the eaſt. It was formerly inhabited by the Celtiberians, the Turdetani, the Luſoni, &c. &c. Valencia was erected into a kingdom, in the year 788, by Abdalla, governor of Valencia, who revolted from the king of Cordova, but was however obliged to pay an annual tribute of 17,000 maravedis. This kingdom continued till the 13th century, when the laſt king Zahen was diſpoſſeſſed of his capital, and compelled to leave his dominions with 50,000 Moors.

VALENCIA, a city of Spain, and capital of the province ſo called. Its ancient name is unknown; but it is ſaid to have been taken and fortified by Scipio, deſtroyed by Pompey, and rebuilt by Sertorius. It was taken from the Romans by the Goths, and from the latter by the Moors, who at twice, poſſeſſed it 230 years; for it was taken in 1094, by the famous Cid-Rui-Diaz-de-Vivar, and bore, during four years, the name of Valencia of the Cid. The Moors retook it, but it was finally conquered in 1238, by the king Don Jayme, and embelliſhed as well as enlarged by Don Pedro IV. king of Aragon. It is about half a league in circumference, and the walls are built for ornament rather than defence. Mariana the hiſtorian ſays, that in Valencia cheerfulneſs enters at the doors and windows: the deſcription he gives of this city is in many inſtances devoid of truth, and ſuch that the author proves himſelf more a poet than an hiſtorian. Several geographers who have had explicit faith in Mariana, have even exaggerated his account of Valencia, and ſaid the houſes here are all palaces, on which account the name of Bella was given to the city, an epithet difficult to reconcile with narrow, crooked, and unpaved ſtreets, impaſſable after rain; and in which there are but two or three houſes built with taſte, and a few churches diſtinguiſhed by their architecture. It is the ſee of an archbiſhop, and an univerſity, inſtituted in the year 1470. Here is a tribunal of inquiſition, with a royal audience, in which the governor, the captain-general of the province, and a royal agent, preſide: 170 miles ESE. Madrid. Long. 16. 18. E. Peak of Teneriffe. Lat. 39. 27. N.

VALENCIA, a town of South America, in the government of Terra Firma, and province of Venezuela: 6 miles W. Caraccas.

VALENCIENNES, a city of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the North, ſituated on the Scheldt, which runs through the town in ſeveral branches, and here becomes navigable. It is ſuppoſed to have derived its name from the emperor Valentinian I. who taken with the temperature of the climate, and charming ſituation of the place, laid the foundation of a town, about the year 367, endowing it with many privileges and immunities, and particularly of being an aſylum for debtors and criminals. This privilege, which extended over the greater part of the town, was called banlieu; but it has ſince been limited, to prevent abuſe from fraudulent bankrupts and aſſaſſins. Before the revolution, it belonged to Hainaut, and contained ſeveral churches and convents. The town-houſe is an ancient building of free-ſtone, founded in the 14th century; the ſquare or grand place is handſome, but the ſtreets are in general narrow, dark, and crooked. The form of its municipal government was conſidered ſo good as to ſerve for the model of ſeveral republics, particularly Venice and Nuremberg, which ſent deputies to collect the laws. Near the town is a coal-mine. Valenciennes was one of the firſt towns which revolted againſt Philip II. king of Spain; it took part with the States and the Proteſtant religion, and refuſed to relieve a garriſon ſent by Margaret of Parma; in conſequence of which it was beſieged, in the year 1567, by John de Noircames, baron of Selles, and at the end of three months ſurrendered at diſcretion: thirty-ſix of the principal ringleaders were puniſhed, and the town deprived of its privileges. It was afterwards ſeveral times taken and retaken, by the duke of Alba and the States-General. In the year 1656, it was beſieged by the French, under the command of marſhals Turenne and la Ferte, but they were compelled to raiſe the ſiege after the loſs of 4000 men killed and wounded, in ſeveral aſſaults. In the year 1677, it was beſieged by Louis XIV. in perſon, and after ſeventeen days, taken by aſſault. It remained to France by the peace of Nimmegen, which happened in the following year, when a new and handſome citadel was built, at the expence of the citizens, and other fortifications added. In the year 1793, Valenciennes was inveſted by the allies, under the conduct of the duke of York, and the governor Ferrand ſummoned to ſurrender, which he refuſed. During the beginning of June, a very briſk fire was kept up from the fortreſs; and on the 5th the French attacked the advanced poſts, but were repulſed. In the courſe of the ſiege a difference of opinion aroſe, between the Engliſh engineer, colonel Moncrief, and M. Ferraris, the chief engineer of the emperor. The Britiſh officer was for planting batteries immediately under the wall of the city, inſtead of approaching it by regular parallels. M. Ferraris, however, contended, that the work of the great Vauban was not to be treated with ſo little reſpect, and his opinion was adopted by the council of war. On the morning of the 14th of June, the trenches were opened. The Britiſh commander then ſummoned the garriſon; but receiving an unſatisfactory anſwer, the artillery began to play upon the town with great vigour, and in the courſe of the night above 500 red-hot balls were poured in upon it. Towards the beginning of July, the beſiegers were able to bring 200 pieces of heavy artillery to play without intermiſſion on the town, and the greater part of it was reduced to aſhes. The moſt ſingular fact in the hiſtory of this ſiege is, that a conſiderable part of the war was carried on under-ground, mines and counter-mines innumerable having been formed both by the beſiegers and beſieged. The principal of theſe, on the ſide of the former, were, one under the glacis, and one under the horn-work of the fortreſs; theſe mines were completed and charged on the 25th of July, and in the night between nine and ten o'clock were ſprung, with the moſt complete ſucceſs. The Engliſh and Auſtrians immediately embraced the opportunity to throw themſelves into the covered way, of which they made themſelves maſters. The die was now caſt, and on the 26th, the duke of York again ſummoned the place, which ſurrendered on capitulation the ſucceeding day; the duke of York taking poſſeſſion of it in behalf of the emperor of Germany. The following year, however, in conſequence of the ſucceſſes of the French arms, Valenciennes ſurrendered to the republicans, on capitulation, on the 26th of Auguſt. The garriſon were made priſoners of war, but to be conducted to the firſt poſt of the Imperial and Dutch armies, on condition that they were not to ſerve againſt the republic, till regularly exchanged. Conſiderable ſtores of every kind, with 200 pieces of cannon, 1,000,000 pounds of gunpowder, and 3,000,000 of florins in ſpecie, and 6,000,000 and a half of livres, were found in Valenciennes; 1000 head of horned cattle, and great quantities of oats and other corn were alſo included within the fortreſs. So earneſt indeed had the emperor been to retain this important place, that he is ſaid to have expended 3,000,000l. in repairing and improving the fortifications. What is moſt to be lamented is, that upwards of 1000 unhappy emigrants were ſurrendered on this occaſion, to the vengeance of their enraged countrymen. The principal manufactures are lace, cambrick, and woollen mitts, camlets, &c.: 4½ poſts E. Douay, and 120 NNE. Paris. Long. 21. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 21. N.

VALESTRA, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Modena: 12 miles SW. Modena.

VALETTA, or Citta Nuova, a city of Malta, and capital of the iſland, which in the year 1566, was built by the grand-maſter Frederick John de Valetta, on a hill in form like a neck of land extending itſelf into the ſea, and was called by his name. Its walls are of large ſquare ſtones, dug out of the rock, and planted with ſeveral batteries. On the point towards the ſea, ſtands the caſtle of St. Elmo, a fortreſs which defends both the harbours: one of which, called Marſa Maſcietto, lies at the entrance from the ſea to the right of the town, and incloſes a ſmall iſland, on which ſtand both a fort and a lazaretta. The other harbour, on the left ſide, is ſimply called Marſa, or The Great Harbour, being the largeſt, ſafeſt, and moſt commodious in this iſland, and having ſome bays. Its entrance, beſides the caſtle of St. Elmo, is guarded by Fort Ricaſoli, which ſtands on the Punta del Orſa, to the left. The town of Valetta lies on its right, and on its left the towns il Borgo, or Vittorioſa, and Senglea. In Valetta is a handſome palace, where the grand maſter reſides, and before it is a ſpacious area for exerciſes. Each of the ſeven nations, or tongues of this order, has its peculiar hall. The principal church is dedicated to St. John the Baptiſt. The Jeſuits had a college here; beſides which are ſeveral convents and nunneries, a large hoſpital, and a building where Turkiſh ſlaves are kept. The number of the inhabitants is computed to be about 2000.

VALLIES (Four, Diſtrict of), otherwiſe called The Diſtrict of Pignerol, a province of Piedmont, bounded on the north by the marquiſate of Suſa, on the weſt by France, on the ſouth by the marquiſate of Saluzzo, and on the eaſt by Carmagnola: the four vallies are thoſe of Peruſia, Lucerna, St. Martin, and Angrogna. The length of the province is about 24 miles, and its breadth from 8 to 11. The principal towns are Pinerolo, Lucerna, Peruſia, St. Martin, and Feneſtrelle. Theſe vallies are watered by the Cluſon, and ſeveral other ſmaller rivers; they are all ſurrounded with mountains and ſharp rocks, in which are ſound white hares, foxes, pheaſants, partridges, wolves, and bears; and in the moſt lofty of the neighbouring Alps is found the marmottes, a creature ſomething larger than a rabbit, but more of the nature of the badger: the chamois and the bouquetin, an animal ſomething like a goat, or chamois, but more fleet than either. Among the tame animals is the jumart, produced by a bull and a mare, or a bull and a ſhe-aſs. The vallies are fertile in paſturage, and the mountains in fruit, particularly cheſtnuts. Theſe vallies are famous for the cruel perſecution of the inhabitants, who were called Waldenſes, on account of their religion, about the year 1665. But now they enjoy in peace the worſhip they embraced, though they have a Catholic church in each pariſh. The number of inhabitants is reckoned about 8000, of which 7000 are ſuppoſed to be Proteſtants.

VALPARAISO, a ſea-port town of South America, on the coaſt Chili, ſituated on a bay of the South Pacific Ocean. This town wa firſt very mean, conſiſting only of a few warehouſes, built by the inhab tants of St. Jago, for laying up their goods till ſhipped off for Calla the harbour of Valparaiſo being the neareſt port of that city, from whic it is only 20 leagues diſtant. The only inhabitants at that time were th few ſervants left by their reſpective maſters for taking care of the wa hou houſes, and managing their mercantile affairs. But in proceſs of time, the merchants themſelves, together with ſeveral other families, removed from St. Jago, in order to be more conveniently ſituated for trade; ſince which it has gradually increaſed, ſo that at preſent it is both large and populous; and would be ſtill larger, were it not for its inconvenient ſituation, ſtanding ſo near the foot of a mountain, that a great part of the houſes are built on its acclivity, or in its breaches. Valparaiſo, beſides its pariſh church, has a convent of Franciſcans, and another of Auguſtines; but very few religious, and the churches belonging to them ſmall and mean. It is inhabited by families of Spaniards, and caſts both of Mulattoes, and Meſtizos. Here is a military governor nominated by the king, who having the command of the garriſons in the ſeveral ports, and of the militia of the place and its dependencies, is to take care that they are properly diſciplined. The proximity of this port to St. Jago, has drawn hither all the commerce formerly carried on at that city. To this it owes its foundation, increaſe, and preſent proſperity. All the Callao ſhips which carry on the commerce between the two kingdoms, come hither. In this port they take in wheat, tallow, Cordovan-leather, cordage, and dried fruits, and with theſe return to Callao; and a ſhip has been known to make three voyages in one ſummer, between November and June. Valparaiſo is abundantly ſupplied with proviſions from St. Jago, and other places in its neighbourhood. Among the ſeveral kinds of game, there is here ſuch a plenty of partridges in their ſeaſon, which begins at March, and laſts ſeveral ſucceeding months, that the muleteers knock them down with their ſticks, without going out of the road, and bring great numbers of them to Valparaiſo. But few of theſe or any other birds are ſeen near the town. It is the ſame with regard to fiſh, very little being to be caught either in the harbour or along the coaſt, in compariſon of what may be taken in the other parts. The harbour is every where free from rocks and ſhoals, except to the north-eaſt of the Breach de los Angelos, where, about a cable's length or two from the land, is a rock, which muſt be the more carefully avoided, as it never appears above water, but ſometimes has not a depth ſufficient for a ſhip of any burden to paſs over it: 225 miles N. Conception, and 75 NW. St. Jago. Long. 72. 16. W. Greenwich. Lat. 33. 3. S.

VALTANAS, a town of Spain, in the province of Leon: 15 miles E. Valencia.

VALTESCHAND, or Walteſchand, a town of the State of Overiſſel: 4 leagues NE. Covorden.

VALTELINE, a lordſhip of the Griſons, ſituated at the entrance of Italy, at the foot of the Alps; bounded on the north by the Griſons, on the eaſt by the county of Bormio and the Breſſan, on the ſouth by the Bergamaſco and the Milaneſe, and on the weſt by the county of Chiavenna and the Milaneſe: this country, which is called by the Griſons Veltlin, or Veltlin, and by the inhabitants Valle Tellina, is a vally incloſed between two chains of lofty mountains, about fifty miles in length, and from eight to twenty in breadth. It is exceedingly fruitful, and throughout its whole extent watered by the Adda, which, after receiving all the ſtreams iſſuing from the foreſt, diſcharges itſelf into the Como Lake. In ſome parts the heat is intenſe, but in others more moderate, and on the hills and the greateſt part of the adjacent vallies the air is moſtly cool. Of this variation in its temperature, the neceſſary conſequence is a variation in the products of the earth. The levels in this vally, through which the Adda purſues its courſe, and the breadth of which in ſome parts is not leſs than a mile, exhibit a delightful variety of corn-fields, meadows, vineyards, and orchards of cheſtnuts, and other fruits. The vineyards on the mountains towards the north produce the beſt wine in the whole country, and above them are corn-fields, meadows, and paſture-lands. The hills on the ſouth ſide are covered with fine woods of cheſnuts, fields, meadows, and rich paſtures, in which graze numerous herds of cattle. This country abounds alſo in excellent red wine, of a moſt delicious flavour, and of ſo good a body, that it will keep for a whole century, improving both in taſte and wholeſomeneſs, and gradually turning paler, till at length its redneſs totally diſappears. Great quantities of this wine are exported. The apples and pears in moſt places are not much eſteemed; but the peaches, apricots, figs, and melons, exquiſite. Here are likewiſe plenty of lemons, citrons, almonds, pomegranates, cheſtnuts, and other delicious fruits. Its ſoil alſo would produce all kinds of grain and pulſe; but the levels being interſperſed with ſwampy places, which have hitherto remained without culture, and the wine-trade chiefly engroſſing the attention of the inhabitants, it does not yield a ſufficiency for the inhabitants without importation. Some parts grow hemp, and in the levels, particularly on the higher grounds and the mountains, are fine paſtures. Bees and ſilk-worms are bred here in vaſt numbers. The Adda yields plenty of fiſh, and is noted for its trout, which often weigh from fifty to ſixty pounds. The whole of their mine-works here conſiſt in a few iron founderies. This country is without ſo much as one city, but has ſome conſiderable towns, with many thriving villages. Its language is a corrupt kind of Italian. The Roman Catholic is the only religion. Their clergy are under the juriſdiction of the biſhop of Como. The whole country is divided into three diſtricts, or terzeros, called Sopra, Mezzo, and Sotto, or Upper, Middle, and Lower. Tirano is the capital of the firſt, Sondrio of the ſecond, and Morbegno of the laſt. The Valteline, together with the counties of Chiavenna and Bormio (which had long been the conſtant ſource of hoſtility between the biſhops of Como and Coire) came, in the year 1336, under the dominions of Azzo Viſconti, ſovereign of Milan, who quietly tranſmitted them to his ſucceſſors. Upon the death of John Viſconti, one of Azzo's ſucceſſors, his territories were divided between his nephews Galeazzo and Barnabas. Upon the demiſe of Galeazzo, his ſon, John Galeazzo, ſecured the perſon of his uncle Barnabas, and having confined him in the caſtle of Trevio until his death, which happened in 1395, annexed his dominions to his own, and became by this union the greateſt and moſt powerful prince in Italy. Maſtino, ſon of Barnabas, took ſhelter, upon his father's impriſonment, with Hartman, biſhop of Coire, and died in exile, without recovering any ſhare of his inheritance. Previous to his death, he formally ceded all his right and title over the Valteline, Chiavenna, and Bormio, to the biſhop of Coire, as a mark of gratitude for his protection. To this ceſſion, at that time of no avail, the Griſons owe the poſſeſſion of theſe provinces. The claim lay dormant for above half a century, until ſome diſcontents ariſing in the Valteline, in 1487, the Griſons made an irruption into that country, in ſupport of the biſhop's rights; but their arms not being at that time attended with ſucceſs, they purchaſed a peace by renouncing all pretenſions to the Valteline. They renewed, however, their claim in 1512, when Ludovico, called the Moor, duke of Milan, was taken priſoner by Louis XII. and the whole Milaneſe, compriſing the Valteline, occupied by that monarch. Upon this revolution, the Griſons, in conjunction with the biſhop of Coire, entered the Valteline, and having expelled the French troops, took poſſeſſion of the country; they were received with joy by the inhabitants, who did homage to their new ſovereigns, and in return obtained from them the confirmation of all their privileges. A compromiſe was immediately entered into between the biſhop of Coire and the three leagues, to ſhare between them the ſovereignty of this country. In the following year, Maximilian Sforza, raiſed to the ducal throne of Milan upon the expulſion of the French, ceded, in perpetuity, the poſſeſſion of the Valteline, Chiavenna, and Bormio, to the biſhop of Coire, and the Griſons; and this ceſſion was ratified by Francis I. in the treaty of peace which he concluded with the Swiſs and their allies, the Griſons, in 1516, when he obtained poſſeſſion of the Milaneſe. In 1530, the republic of the Griſons acquired the whole dominion of the Valteline, to the excluſion of the biſhop of Coire, under pretence that the latter had not furniſhed his quota of men and money in the war with James of Medici, in defence of theſe ceded countries: accordingly, they compelled the biſhop to ſell his ſhare of the ſovereignty over the Valteline, Chiavenna, and Bormio, for a yearly income of 575 florins, to be paid to the biſhop and his ſucceſſors out of the cuſtoms of Chiavenna. From that period theſe provinces were poſſeſſed by the Griſons without moleſtation, until the rival intereſts of France and Spain, the intrigues of the Pope, religious enthuſiaſm, the zeal of party, and the exactions of the Griſon governors, kindled an inſurrection, which commenced with a maſſacre of the Proteſtants, and raged for a ſeries of years with the moſt ſavage and unremitting fury.

VEERE, or Vere, or Tervere, a ſea-port town of the State of Zealand, ſituated on the northern coaſt of the Iſle of Walcheren, communicating with Middelburg, by means of a canal: the name given it ſignifies, in the language of the country, Paſſage; and was probably acquired by its being the place from whence they ordinarily paſs over to North Beveland: its ancient name was Kamp Vere. The place is regularly fortified towards the land with ſtrong baſtions, and a broad ditch; and towards the ſea with a ſtrong wall. The harbour is very good, but lies much expoſed to inundations. The arſenal is one of the beſt in Zealand, and furniſhed with all manner of ſtores for a conſiderable fleet. This is the third walled town in the Iſle of Walcheren, and has the ſixth place in the aſſembly of the States of Zealand. It has three gates towards the land, and one towards the ſea, where veſſels come from Dort, Ziriczee, and other places. This city was firſt encompaſſed with walls, in the year 1368; and in 1552, the emperor, Charles V. made it a marquiſate for Maximilian, earl of Boſſu, who ſold it to Philip II. king of Spain. In the year 1572, it was taken by the prince of Orange; and in the year 1581, it was given him by the States, or, as others ſay, it was purchaſed for 1,456,000 guilders. In this family it continued till the death of king William, when it fell to the prince of Orange. It was taken from the late prince by the States, and reſtored to him again upon the revolution in 1747, when he was declared ſtadtholder to the province. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the herring-fiſhery, which is their harveſt. There is little to be obſerved in the town but the ſtadthouſe, begun in the year 1704; and the great church, the ſteeple of which is low and unfiniſhed: 4 miles N. Middelburg. Long. 20. 9. E. VENHUYSEN, a town of Holland: 4 miles SW. Enckhuyſen.

VENICE, a city of Italy, and capital of a republic. This city makes a very grand appearance at a diſtance, as ſeeming, from its being built on a multitude of iſlands, to float on the ſea; or rather, with its ſtately buildings and ſteeples, as it were, riſing out of it. The number of theſe iſlands is uncertain; ſome reckoning 60; others 72; and others again making them amount to 138; but the latter muſt comprehend, in their calculation, all thoſe places which have gradually been raiſed in the Laguna, and by driving piles in the ground, fitted for building on. The Laguna, or marſhy lake, which lies between the city and the continent, and five Italian miles in breadth, is too ſhallow for large ſhips; but, by the attention of the republic, is prevented from becoming part of the continent, and from being ever frozen, ſo as to bear an army. Towards the ſea, the acceſs to the city is alſo difficult; but the ſafe and navigable parts are indicated by piles; which, at the approach of an enemy's fleet, can be cut away. Beſides, as a conſiderable number of galleys and men of war may be fitted out very expeditiouſly for ſea from the docks, which contain vaſt quantities of naval ſtores, the city is ſtrong without fortifications. The fiſh, which are caught even at the very doors of the houſes, may be reputed a good preſervative againſt famine. The ſeveral canals, leading to the city among the ſand banks and marſhy ſhallows, are, though at a vaſt expence, kept clear of the mud and ſlime the flood brings with it. The return of the ſea is ſomething later here than every ſixth hour, and it generally riſes between four and five feet, keeping the water between the iſlands of the city in continual motion. Some of theſe canals being very narrow, the mud is not ſo effectually carried off as to prevent ill ſmells in hot weather. The great canal, which winds through the city, and divides it into two parts, is 1300 paces long. The beſt way of going up and down the city is in gondolas, which, indeed, ſtrike the eye with a mournful appearance, being all lined either with black cloth or ſerge, or painted black. Over the ſeveral canals, are laid 450 (ſome ſay upwards of 500) bridges, great and ſmall, and the better part of them ſtone: the higheſt and longeſt is the Rialto, which, in the midſt of the city, croſſes the great canal at its narroweſt part, where it is but 40 paces broad. This bridge conſiſts only of one ſingle arch, whoſe foundation takes up 90 feet, reſting on 12000 elm-piles, and every where incruſtated with marble. It is ſaid to have coſt the republic 250,000 ducats. In the upper part, it is 37 common paces broad, with two rows of ſhops, forming as it were three ſtreets, of which that in the middle is the wideſt. At each end is an aſcent of 56 ſteps. The city may, indeed, every where be traverſed on foot; but the ſtreets are very narrow, and the free-ſtone pavement very ſlippery in wet weather. The many ſmall bridges, with their ſteps, are alſo not a little troubleſome. The whole city is ſaid to be ſix Italian miles in circumference, and to make the tour of it in a gondola takes up ſomewhat more than two hours. Venice contains 70 pariſh churches, beſides others, 54 convents of monks, 26 nunneries, 17 rich hoſpitals, 18 oratories, 40 religious fraternities, with their chapels: among which are ſix called Scuole Grandi, 53 ſquares, 165 marble, and 23 half ſtatutes. The buildings, indeed, are all of ſtone; but the greater part make ſo mean a figure, that this city, in point of beauty and elegance, can in no wiſe ſtand the teſt with many others. St. Mark's ſquare, it is true, is very fine, and ſo are the ſeveral ſtately marble palaces that border upon the great canal, though moſt of them are of Gothic architecture. In the churches and convents, the moſt admirable part are the paintings; and indeed Venice, highly renowned for fine paintings, far ſurpaſſes, in this very reſpect, even Rome itſelf. Venice, from the fertility of its neighbourhood, and the facility of carriage, enjoys a conſtant plenty of all kinds of proviſions. The ſpring-water being very indifferent in moſt places, almoſt every houſe has a ciſtern into which the rain water is conveyed from the roof, and clarified by being filtrated through ſand. Water is alſo brought from the river Brenta, and preſerved in ciſterns. Among the diverſions of Venice, the carnival is accounted the chief. It uſually begins the ſecond day of Chriſtmas, and continues till Shrove-Tueſday; conſiſting chiefly of maſquerades and ridottos. The Venetians are paſſionately fond of maſquerades; during the carnival, St. Mark's place is the general rendezvous. The other diverſions are plays and operas; maſquerades are alſo permitted at other times, particularly about Aſcenſion-day, at which time there is a fair at St. Mark's place, which begins the Sunday before that feſtival, and laſts till Whitſuntide. Among the moſt rational and agreeable diverſions of this city, are the concerts. The trade in cloth, eſpecially ſcarlet, ſilk goods, and looking-glaſſes, is ſtill very conſiderable. Here alſo gold and ſilver-ſtuffs are manufactured; which, though not ſo beautiful as thoſe of France, have a very good ſale in the Levant. The Brocatellas, (a kind of ſtuff like brocade) made of coarſe ſilk, are much uſed for carpets. The invention of public banks is owing to the Venetians; theſe erected in the ſeveral ſtates of Europe being modelled after theirs. The bank of Venice belongs to the ſtate, and pays no intereſt for any funds lodged in it. Venice is divided into ſix parts, called Seſtierie, Seſtieria. S. Marco contains the piazzo di S. Marco, with the adjacent buildings. This ſquare, the pride of the city, forms a right angle, the ſhorteſt ſide of which, two hundred and forty paces long, and ſeventy-five broad, reaches along the ducal palace. The ducal palace, towards the water-ſide and St. Mark's place, is entirely Gothic; but on the ſide of the ſmall canal, and in the court, of modern architecture, and moſtly of marble. It not only ſerves for the reſidence of the Doge, but alſo for the meeting of the council. The fineſt ornaments of the council-chamber and other apartments, are the paintings of famous ancient maſters. In the palace, is a little arſenal, where a conſiderable number of loaded muſkets are always kept in readineſs, that, in caſe of an inſurrection of the people, the Doge and the nobility may have recourſe to this defence; and it is for this purpoſe, that the council-chamber has a communication through a door with this armoury: every three months the pieces are loaded afreſh. In one ſide of the palace, towards the canal, Rio di Palazzo, dark priſons, ſtrongly ſecured with iron grates, preſent themſelves to view. The lower gallery, or arched walk, on the ſide of St. Mark's ſquare, together with the oppoſite hall, is called Broglio. Here, at a certain hour of the day, the nobles take their walks, and, at this time, no Venetian, of an inferior rank, muſt be ſeen on it, though a foreigner, as ſuppoſed unacquainted with the cuſtom, is not deſired to quit the place. That part of St. Mark's ſquare, between theſe two buildings and the piazza, receives an additional ornament from two pillars of oriental granate, on one of which ſtands St. Mark's lion in braſs, and on the other, a marble ſtatue of St. Theodore. Between theſe is the place for the public execution of malefactors, through which no nobleman is ever ſeen to paſs. A galley completely rigged and armed, lies cloſe to the Broglio, for the defence of the ducal palace on any ſudden emergency. Contiguous to the north part of the Doge's palace, is St. Mark's church, which is alſo ſtiled the Doge's chapel. Its materials juſtly entitle it to be called magnificent, being, both on the out and inſide, covered with fine marble; but the architecture is entirely Gothic. The beſt part of it are the Moſaic paintings, and the four braſs horſes, formerly gilt, ſtanding over the great door, and ſaid to have been brought here from Conſtantinople. They are univerſally allowed to be maſter-pieces, which very few of the kind can equal. The church-treaſury is, for the greater part, old faſhioned, but very rich in gold and jewels. In it is kept a very famous manuſcript of the goſpel of St. Mark, pretended to be autographical; but the dampneſs of the place where it lies, has ſpoiled it to ſuch a degree, that no part of it is any longer legible, and it is not ſo much as certain whether it be written in Latin or Greek. In the Seſtieria di Caſtello, is the ſo much celebrated arſenal or dock, two Italian miles and a half in circuit, walled and moated in, with twelve towers along its walls; and within the incloſure a great variety of buildings, in which every thing requiſite for a land or ſea armament is kept in readineſs. Theſe buildings conſiſt of an armoury, ſtore-houſes for iron-work, oars, cordage, bullets, tar, canvaſs, guns, &c. a rope-houſe, a ſaltpetre-houſe, ſmith's forges, a foundery, baſons and ſlips for ſhip-building, &c. Within it lie the men of war, frigates, gallies, and other veſſels, with the Bucentauro, which is alſo laid up here. In the Seſtiera de Canale Regio is the theatre; and in this quarter the Jews live, to the amount of fifteen hundred. They muſt wear a ſcrap of red cloth in their hats, by way of diſtinction from Chriſtians. Seſtiera di S. Pavolo contains the exchange, the bank, &c. On the invaſion of Italy, in the fifth century, by the Huns, under their king Attila, and the general deſolation that every where appeared, great numbers of the people, who lived near the Adriatic, took ſhelter in thoſe iſlands where now ſtands the famous city of Venice; and which iſlands, about the year 421, particularly Rialto, had, in ſome meaſure, been built upon by the Paduans, for the advantage of commerce. Here having ſettled their ſmall places or ſtates, they were at firſt governed by conſuls; afterwards by tribunes, and formed a kind of republic, the council of which was repreſented by the perſons of theſe magiſtrates. Theſe iſlands became ſtill better inhabited on the ſucceeding incurſions of the Goths and Longobardi into Italy; multitudes from Rome and other large cities repairing thither, ſo that this ſtate became ſoon able to make ſome head againſt theſe bold invaders. At length the chiefs of the iſlands and the Longobardi came to an agreement, whereby the former were to remain unmoleſted. This was the commencement of the city and ſtate of Venice. About the beginning of the eighth or the end of the ſeventh century, the former government of theſe iſlands was aboliſhed, and an unlimited power conferred on Paulucio Anafeſto, with the title of duke. Under this ſovereignty the ſtate greatly increaſed, till the people, juſtly becoming weary of the ills of domeſtic deſpotiſm, choſe, in the year 1171, another duke, but curtailed his power, by aſſigning him a council of two hundred and forty perſons, compoſed of commons as well as nobles. Duke Ziani ſided with Pope Alexander III. againſt the emperor Frederick, and obtained over him ſuch a ſignal victory at ſea, that the Pope preſented him with a ring, which he was to drop into the Adriatic, as a ſign of his marriage with, and perpetual ſovereignty over it. The Venetians, who had already extended their dominions into Iſtria, Dalmatia, Syria, Lombardy, and other places, made a very conſiderable acquiſition, in the beginning of the 13th century, by poſſeſſing themſelves of the principal iſlands in the Archipelago and Mediterranean, particularly that of Candia. From this time they alone carried on, at an immenſe profit, the trade for Eaſt-India goods, which they imported from Alexandria in Egypt, to which place they were brought acroſs the Red Sea, and by the way of Suez. Under duke Marino Moroſini, was introduced the preſent form of electing the Doge; and it was at this juncture that jealouſy and envy fomented the war with Genoa, which, after continuing 130 years, was at laſt put an end to by a treaty, in 1381. During this war, duke Peter Gradonigo, in the year 1296, ordained that the nobility alone ſhould be capable of ſitting in the grand council. Thus the government became ariſtocratical. In the 14th century, the Venetians extended their poſſeſſions in Lombardy; and, in 1473, the laſt king of Cyprus appointed the ſtare of Venice his heir. Towards the end of the 15th century, the Venetian commerce, and, conſequently, power, began to decline, when the Portugueſe diſcovered a route by ſea to the Eaſt-Indies, which opened the trade to all nations. In the 16th century, the pope, the emperor, France and Spain, joining in a league againſt them, they were diſpoſſeſſed of all their towns and places in the kingdom of Naples, the eccleſiaſtical ſtate, and the Milaneſe. They received another ſevere blow from the Turks, who drove them out of the kingdom of Cyprus. In the 17th century, a ſharp conteſt aroſe between the ſtate, the clergy and the pope, in which, however, they had the advantage. They were alſo long engaged in troubleſome wars with the Turks, loſing Candia, and gaining part of Dalmatia and all Morea; but even the greater part of theſe have been loſt in the wars of the preſent century. Thus has the republic of Venice continued now upwards of 1,300 years, amidſt many foreign wars and inteſtine commotions. Its grandeur was chiefly owing to trade and liberty; and ſince the decline of the former, its ſtrength of conſequence muſt have ſuffered a conſiderable diminution. The power is lodged in the hands of the nobility, who are ſaid to be near 2,000, including thoſe whom public employments in the provinces oblige to reſide out of Venice. On the birth of a nobleman's ſon, his name is entered in the golden book, otherwiſe he forfeits his nobility. Every noble is, indeed, a member of the ſenate; and, on this account, it is a received maxim, that they all are equal in dignity. But the difference, notwithſtanding, between the intereſt and authority of families, is very conſiderable. To the firſt claſs belong the ancient houſes, whoſe anceſtors choſe the firſt duke, and who, from thence, are called Le Caſe Eletterali. Theſe are the Contarini, Moroſini, Badovari, Tiepoli, Michieli, Sanudi, Gradenighi, Memmi, Falieri, Dandali, Polani, and Barozzi; and on them, preferable to others, are conferred the higher offices; the Giuſtinani, Cornari, Bragadini and Bembi, pretend to an equality with the foregoing, being very little inferior to them in point of antiquity. Next follow eight houſes almoſt as ancient; among which the moſt diſtinguiſhed are Quirini, Delfiri, Soranzi, Zorzi and Marcetti. The ſecond claſs has its origin from the Serrar del Conſiglio; duke Gradenigo having paſſed a law that the council ſhould perpetually conſiſt of the families which then compoſed it, and ſome others which he ennobled. This produced a ſecond claſs of nobility, who, accordingly, were then regiſtered in the golden book. It conſiſts of upwards of eighty families, and ſome of great wealth and reputation, as the Mocenighi, Capoli, Foſcarini, Foſcari, Grimani, Gritti, Goſſoni, Loredani, Donati, Malipierri, Nani, Piſani, Peſcari, Priuly, &c. with theſe are alſo included thoſe families that were raiſed to nobility after the Genoeſe war, on account of their large contributions towards carrying it on with vigour. Many of this degree are now extinct, and the principal among the ſurviving, are the Treviſani, Vandramini, Renieri, Giuſti and Paſqualighi. The third and laſt claſs is compoſed of the Cittadini, or citizens, whoſe nobility was purchaſed for 100,000 Venetian ducats, a reſource of the republic for raiſing money in neceſſitous times. Crowned heads, German and other princes, have not thought it any degradation to be made nobles of Venice. The habit of the nobility, whilſt at Venice, is a black furred gown reaching to their heels, with a belt about three inches broad, and plated with ſilver. Inſtead of hats they have long caps. The head of the republic is the doge, or duke, who, on the demiſe of the former, is choſen in the following manner: all the nobility above thirty years of age meet in the palace of St. Mark, where an equal number of balls to thoſe preſent are put into an urn. Thirty of theſe are gilded, and the others ſilvered over. Every noble, in his turn, takes out a ball; and they who have drawn the thirty gilt balls, retire into a chamber to continue the election. But that there may be but one perſon of a family among the electors, the relations of him who draws a golden ball immediately withdraw from the council; and the ſame number of white balls are taken out of the urn. The thirty electors again draw from another urn, in which are twenty-one ſilvered, and nine gilded balls: they who draw the gilded, chooſe forty other electors of quite different families, though they may nominate themſelves; and every one of the four firſt has a right of nominating five; but the five others can name only four each.

Theſe electors are again, by lots, reduced to 12, who name 25: the firſt nominating three, and each of the other, two. Theſe 25 draw lots a ſecond time to be reduced to nine; and of theſe nine each chooſes five others, and, from the total 45, 11 are ſeparated again by lot, who chooſe 41 others; the eight firſt nominating four, and the three laſt only three. Theſe 41 are, according to the form in all preceding elections, confirmed by the grand council; and, being ſhut up in a chamber of the ducal palace, there remain till they have choſen a new doge. To the due and legal election of a doge, it is required that out of the 41 he ſhould have 25 votes. His election is followed by a kind of coronation; the ducal cap, the forepart of which projects, as a mark of the unlimited power of the republic, being placed with great ceremony on his head. This is performed at his public entrance into St. Mark's church, where he is received, by the illuſtrious Signoria, on the great ſteps, called Laſcala de Giganti, and afterwards conducted to the upper ſtep, where the cap is placed on his head. The doge has been very juſtly defined to be, in habit and ſtate, a king; in authority, a counſellor; in the city, a priſoner; and out of it, a private perſon. He is not ſo much as to ſtir from the city without the council's permiſſion. At preſent his privileges conſiſt in the following principal particulars: That the coin be ſtamped with his name, but not his image. That all the credentials of the republic's miniſters to foreign courts, be made out in his name, though without either his ſignature or ſeal, and his family is not to be ſubject to any ſumptuary laws. His yearly income is 12,000 Venetian ducats. Of this ſum he muſt ſpend one half on the four grand entertainments which he is obliged to give every year; and, to live up to his dignity, he muſt alſo ſpend conſiderably of his own fortune. Among the reſtrictions, are the following: during his life, none of his children, or brethren, can hold any of the great honorary offices, nor be ſent on embaſſies. He is not ſo much as to aſk the Pope for any benefice, nor to accept of any when offered, the purple only excepted. He is not to marry the ſiſter or relation of a prince, without the conſent of the great council. He cannot reſign, but may be depoſed. He is not to receive any preſent whatever from a foreign prince. In ſtate affairs, he cannot tranſact the leaſt matter without the council. During his life, he is ſubject to the council of ten, who keep a watchful eye over his whole adminiſtration, and, at any time, can come and ſearch his moſt private apartments. In general, his authority, eſſentially conſidered, is no greater than that of a private perſon, unleſs he be of ſuch abilities as to influence the whole council; then, indeed, his authority bears the ſway; but it ſeldom happens that ſuch perſons are choſen. On his death, a formal enquiry is made, whether he has abuſed his power, whether, from a care of his own concerns, he neglected thoſe of the public; whether he lived agreeably to his dignity, &c. If found guilty of any thing alledged to his charge, his heirs are fined in proportion to the nature of the crime. However, the ducal dignity is ſolicited, and the perſon duly elected is not to decline it. On aſcenſion-day, the doge, or, in caſe of illneſs, the vice-doge, who is always one of the ſix conſiglieri, performs the annual frivolous ceremony of marrying the Adriatic Sea, in a barge pompouſly guilt, and carved, called the Bucentauro, on board of which are alſo the ſignoria and all foreign miniſters. The patriarch having poured into it a quantity of holy water, which is ſaid to prevent or allay any ſtorms, the doge, through an aperture near his ſeat, drops into the ſea a golden ring, of a few dollars' value, ſaying theſe words; Deſponſamus te, mare, in ſignum veri perpetuique dominii; That is, We eſpouſe thee, O ſea, in token of a real and perpetual dominion over thee. In the grand council, all nobles of the age of 25 years, may take their place, though ſome younger find means to obtain admittance. It uſually meets on Sundays and holidays, in the large hall of the ducal palace, and, when all the nobility are preſent, conſiſts of near 2000 perſons. The ſenate, or pregadi, are a committee of the grand council, by whom they are alſo choſen. This ſenate has the management of the moſt ſecret and important ſtate affairs, as the making alliances and peace, declaring war, ſending ambaſſadors, coining money, filling up offices, impoſing taxes, &c. Next is the collegium, in which all public inſtruments directed to the ſtate and doge, are read, audiences given to foreign miniſters, and other matters of importance tranſacted. It conſiſts of the doge, ſix counſellors, &c. the three Capidella quarantia criminale (or preſidents of the quarantia, or court of forty), the ſix ſavi-grandi (or the chief officers of ſtate), the five ſavi di terra firma (or the military officers), the five ſavi degli ordini, (who, though conductors of ſea affairs, are here little more than mute ſpectators). Of theſe three great aſſemblies, the preſidentſhip is lodged in the ſignoria, or il conſiglietto, compoſed of the doge and his ſix counſellors, who are, as it were, the wardens of the people, one being choſen from every Seſtieria, or ſixth part of the city. The procurators of St. Mark have not only the inſpection of the church of St. Mark, its library, and the records of the republic, but likewiſe manage all affairs relating to the poor, together with wills, guardianſhips, redemption of chriſtian ſlaves, and bringing over-rigid creditors to a reaſonable compoſition. Their number never exceeds nine: their office is of great authority and during life, and it is out of them that the doge is generally choſen. Titular, or extraordinary procurators of St. Mark, are more numerous; the republic gladly ſelling theſe titles in a public ſcarcity of money. Il conſiglio di dieci, is a high penal court, which conſiſts of ten counſellors, the doge, who is preſident, and his ſix conſiglieri. With regard to the ſtate of religion and the clergy in the countries of the republic, the eſtabliſhed religion is the Roman Catholic; but Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, are allowed the public exerciſe of their worſhip, and proteſtants, obſerving privacy, remain unmoleſted. At the head of the church-government is the patriarch of Venice, the chief eccleſiaſtic in the republic. He is always a noble Venetian, and choſen by the ſenate; and though confirmed by the Pope, muſt, in all other reſpects, be independent of the papal chair. The territories of the republic are under governors choſen out of the nobility, who are changed at the expiration of a certain term of years. The commander in chief of an intire province, is called proveditore generale, or governatore. In a large town is a podeſta and caſtellano; and the military affairs are managed by a capitano. Appeals from the inferior courts in the town are carried to the quarantia civile at Venice, or civil court of 40 perſons. The annual revenue of the republic is computed at 8,200,000 ducats, and is under the direction of three governatori dell'Entrate. In war-time, both the nobles and the other ſubjects, even the doge, contribute proportionably to their incomes towards defraying the public expences. The ſtates of Italy ſubject to the Venetians, are the Dogado, the Paduan, the Poleſine di Rovigo, the Veroneſe, the Vicentin, the Breſſan, the Bergamaſco, the Cremaſco, the Trevigiano, the Feltrin, the Belluneſe, the Cadorin, great part of Friuli and Iſtria; to theſe may be added a part of Dalmatia, the iſlands of Corfu, Zante, Cephalonia, Paxu, Antipaxu, and ſome others. The number of inhabitants in the city of Venice is eſtimated at 160.000, and, of the whole ſtate, at 2,500,000. Venice is ſituated 216 miles N. Rome. Long. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 28. N.

VENIZY, a town of France, in the department of the Yonne, and chief place of a canton in the diſtrict of St. Florentin: 1 league N. St. Florentin.

VENLO, a town of the duchy of Guelderland, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Meuſe, takes its name from the two Flemiſh words Veenen and Loo, which ſignify a low meadow. Before the year 1343, it was only a ſmall town, when Renand II. duke of Gueldres, fortified it, and gave it the title and privileges of a city. It has only one pariſh church, which is dedicated to St. John. In the year 1512, Margaret of Auſtria, aunt to the emperor Charles V. was conſtrained to raiſe the ſiege after fourteen weeks, by the brave reſiſtance of the citizens, who, with their governor Comte de Swartzenburg, ſupported the party of Charles d'Egmont, duke of Gueldres. Venlo ſoon after ſurrendered to the emperor upon honourable terms; but did not long continue under Spain, for the Hollanders ſeized it in the year 1568, at the beginning of their revolt. In the year 1586, the prince of Parma having taken Grave, came to inveſt Venlo, which ſurrendered on capitulation. The prince left a garriſon of Italians and Germans; but the citizens, hating the former, contrived with the latter to drive them away; and when they had done this, they drove away the Germans likewiſe. They continued nevertheleſs in obedience to Spain, particularly in 1597, againſt the troops of the Prince of Orange, who endeavoured to ſurpriſe the town by means of ſome boats filled with ſoldiers, which entered in the night, but were repulſed, with great loſs. The Dutch made themſelves maſters of it in 1632, and kept it till 1637, when it was retaken by the cardinal infant. This city was beſieged in 1702, by the army of the allies, under the command of the prince of Naſſau Sarbruck. Fort St. Michael, ſituated on the other ſide of the Meuſe, was carried, ſword in hand, the 18th of September, and the greater part of the French ſoldiers found there put to death. The city capitulated on the 23d, and the garriſon, which conſiſted of 1160 men, marched out by the breach, on the 26th, and was conducted to Antwerp. In the year 1715, it was ceded to the States-General, by the barrier treaty. In this town was made the firſt trial of bombs, about the year 1558; and they were firſt uſed by Alexander Farneſe, duke of Parma, at the ſiege of Watchtendonck not long after: 12 miles NNE. Ruremond, and 25 NW. Duſſeldorp. Long. 23. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 51 27. N.

VENOSA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Baſilicata, the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Matera. It contains 7 churches, and 7 convents: 9 miles NNW. Acerenza, and 35 WNW. Matera. Long. 33. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 40. 58. N.

VERA, a river of European Turkey, which runs into the Gulf of Salonichi, near the mouth of the Vardar.

VERA CRUZ, a ſeaport of North America, in the government of Mexico, and province of Tlaſcala, with a ſecure harbour, defended by a fort, upon a rock of a neighbouring iſland, called St. John d'Alva, in the Gulf of Mexico. This is a place of very great extent, and perhaps one of the moſt conſiderable in Spaniſh America for trade, it being the natural centre of the American treaſure, and the magazine of all the merchandize ſent from New Spain, or of that tranſported hither from Europe. It receives a prodigious quantity of Eaſt-India goods over land from Acapulco, brought from the Philippine Iſles. Upon the annual arrival of the flota here from Old Spain, a fair is opened, which laſts many weeks, when this place may be ſaid to be immenſely rich. Its ſituation is unhealthy, from the bogs round it, and the barrenneſs of the ſoil. Vera Cruz having been taken and plundered ſeveral times by the Buccaneers, the Spaniards have built forts, and placed centinels along the coaſt; their ordinary garriſon conſiſting only of 60 horſe and two companies of foot: 60 leagues ESE. Mexico, and 38 ESE. Pueblo de los Angelos. Long. 79. 40. W. Ferro. Lat. 19. 5. N.

VERA CRUZ (Old), a ſeaport of North America, in the government of Mexico, and province of Tlaſcala. This is the port where Cortez landed in the year 1518: 5 leagues N. Vera Cruz, and 35 E. Puebla de los Angelos.

VERA PAZ, a province of North America, in the government of Mexico, bounded on the north by the province of Chiapa, on the eaſt by the bay and province of Honduras, on the ſouth by Guatimala, and on the weſt by Soconuſco, about 40 leagues in length, and 24 in breadth. In one part of the country the air is healthy, in the other not. The country is ſubject to earthquakes, thunder, and nine months rain. The ſoil is mountainous, yielding little corn, but abounding in foreſts of cedar, &c. in which are many wild beaſts. The principal commodities are drugs, cocoa, cotton, wool, honey, &c.

VERA PAZ, or Coban, a town of North America, and capital of the province of Vera Paz, in the government of Mexico, ſituated on a river, which runs to the Bay of Honduras. Long. 73. 28. W. Ferro. Lat. 15. 50. N.

VERABADURGAM, a town of Hindooſtan, in the Myſore country: 8 miles WSW. Caveripatam.

VERAGUA, a province of North America, in the government of Mexico, bounded on the north by the gulf of Mexico, on the eaſt by the province of Darien, on the ſouth by the Pacific Ocean, and on the weſt by Coſta Rica. This coaſt was firſt diſcovered by Columbus, in the year 1503, to whom it was granted, with the title of duke. To the river now called Veragua, he gave the name of Verdes-aguas, on account of the green colour of its water; or, according to others, becauſe the Indians called it by that name, in their language. But however that may be, it is from this river that the province derives its name. In 1538, the captains Gaſper d'Eſpinoſa and Diego de Alvirez, renewed the diſcovery by land; but, being repulſed by prince Urraca, were obliged to content themſelves with a ſettlement in the neighbourhood; and even here the Spaniards were not able to maintain their ground againſt the frequent incurſions of the Indians; ſo that finding the abſolute neceſſity of a ſtronger ſettlement, they built the city Santa Fé, on the ſpot where it now ſtands.

VERAL, a river of Spain, which runs into the Aragon.

VERCELLI, a city of Italy, and capital of a conſiderable lordſhip, which had once its particular lords. It is ſituated in a place where the Seſſia receives the Cerva. Its ancient name was Vercellæ. After the decline of the Roman empire, it became a republic; from that ſtate it fell under dukes of Milan, and laſt of all was given as a marriage portion to Amadeus III. duke of Savoy. It was well fortified by Charles Emanuel II. and furniſhed with a ſtrong garriſon. In the year 1638, it was taken by the Spaniards, who kept it 22 years. In the year 1704, the garriſon ſallied out, and ſurpriſed the French, at Oleggio; but the ſame year was taken by the duke of Vendôme, after a brave defence. The duke of Savoy attempted to retake it, without ſucceſs, and the French deſtroyed the fortifications, before they reſtored it. It is the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of the archbiſhop of Milan. There are two churches which are called cathedral, and twelve others, two abbies, nineteen convents of both ſexes, three provoſtſhips, two priories, three poorhouſes, and five hoſpitals; the inhabitants are about 20,000: 30 miles SW. Milan, and 38 NE. Turin. Long. 26. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 17. N.

VERCHOURALSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Upha, on the Ural: 120 miles SE. Upha. Long. 77. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 36. N.

VERDEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and capital of a county of the ſame name, on the Allier, which divides itſelf here into two branches, the ſmaller of which lies near the town, and is at preſent only frequented by the ſhips going up and down the Allier. About the year 1210, Verden was ſurrounded with a rampart, and afterwards divided into the Old and South Town, each of which had a magiſtracy of its own; but, in the year 1667, this difference was wholly removed, and both parts united into one body, under the ſame magiſtracy. In the town are four churches and a Latin ſchool: 56 miles SSW. Hamburg, and 40 NW. Hanover. Long. 26. 36. E. Ferro. Lat 52. 58. N.

VERDEN, a duchy of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, bounded on the north and weſt by the duchy of Bremen, and on the eaſt and ſouth by the duchy of Lunenburg; about 24 miles in length, and nearly as much in breadth. This duchy conſiſts for the moſt part of heath and high dry land, as alſo of foreſts: but on the rivers Weſer and Aller, is good marſhland. The Aller waters almoſt all of the ſoutherly, but the Weſer a part only of the weſterly boundaries of the country. Verden was formerly a biſhopric, founded by Charlemagne. Suitbert, the firſt biſhop thereof, was an Engliſhman; but John Frederick, the laſt biſhop, was of the royal houſe of Denmark, and afterwards, under the name of Frederick III. arrived to be king of Denmark and Norway. At the peace of Weſtphalia, in the year 1648, the crown of Sweden obtained the biſhopric as a duchy, at which time lieutenant general Patkul was alſo inveſted with the prefecturate of Verden, and count Konigſmark with that of Rotenburg. In the year 1712, the Danes invading the duchy of Bremen, the inhabitants of Brunſwick-Lunenburg poſſeſſed themſelves of the duchy of Verden, on account of the plague raging in the former; and, together with a part of the duchy of Bremen, it was brought within the line made againſt its farther ſpreading. In the year 1715, by virtue of the alliance concluded at Wiſmar, it was ceded, together with Bremen, by the king of Denmark, to the electoral houſe of Brunſwick-Lunenburg, ſuch ceſſion being alſo made again, in the year 1719, by the crown of Sweden. The rate of the empire is five horſe and fifteen foot, or monthly 120 florins, and to the chamber-court, for each term, 81 rixdollars 14½ kruitzers. This duchy has the ſame regency with the duchy of Bremen. The inhabitants are Lutherans.

VERDUN, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Meuſe. Before the revolution, the capital of a province, called Verdunois, and the ſee of a biſhop, ſuffragan of Treves. It is large, populous, and conſiſts of three parts, the Upper, Lower, and New Town. Excluſive of its fortifications, this place is farther defended by a fine citadel. The biſhop, before the city and diſtrict were annexed to the crown of France, was a prince of the empire, and afterwards ſtyled himſelf ſuch, as alſo the earl of Verdun. Excluſive of the cathedral in this city, are one collegiate and nine pariſh churches, ſix abbies, and one college. Verdun was formerly an imperial city. In the year 1552, it put itſelf under the protection of France, and in 1648, fell abſolutely under its power. The proper biſhopric of Verdun, or the diſtrict over which the biſhop had a juriſdiction, ſubordinate to France, was compoſed of 106 pariſhes. This town was ſummoned by the duke of Brunſwick, on the 31ſt of Auguſt, 1792, ſoon after the ſurrender of Longwy; M. Beaurepaire, the governor, was deſirous of defending the town to the laſt moment; but the municipal officers were determined in favour of a capitulation, and there was imminent danger that the ſoldiers would be attacked by an enemy within, as well as without. The governor, therefore, after much oppoſition, finding himſelf completely out-voted, drew a piſtol, and ſhot himſelf dead upon the ſpot. The conſequence was, that the garriſon capitulated, and the Pruſſian troops entered, on the 2d of September, but did not hold it long, for the garriſon placed there ſurrendered on capitulation, to general Dillon, on the 12th of October, in the ſame year: 11 leagues NW. Toul, and 8 N. Bar-le-Duc. Long. 23. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 9. N.

VERMONT, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north by Canada, on the eaſt by New Hampſhire, from which it is the whole diſtance ſeparated by the river Connecticut, on the ſouth by Maſſachuſetts, and on the weſt by New York: 135 miles from north to ſouth, and from 30 to 65 in breadth from eaſt to weſt. The eaſt range of the Green Mountains, running north and ſouth, interſect it nearly in the centre. Early in the American war, the inhabitants claimed of congreſs, to be conſidered as an independent ſtate; and after ſome degree of oppoſition, their claim was allowed by an act of congreſs; and on the 4th of March, 1791, Vermont was acknowledged as the fourteenth ſtate. The climate is good, but the winters are generally long and cold, laſting from the beginning of November to the middle of April. It is watered by a great number of ſmall rivers, beſides the Connecticut and lake Champlain, which, towards the north, ſeparates it from the State of New York. The paſtures are excellent, and on the arable land are raiſed wheat, maize, barley, oats, flax, and hemp; and moſt of the trees found in New England, grow here. It is divided into ſeven counties: Bennington is one of the moſt conſiderable, at leaſt populous, towns. The number of inhabitants in the year 1790, was 85,539.

VERONA, a city of Italy, and capital of the Veroneſe, the ſee of a biſhop, ſituated on the Adige. It is fortified in the ancient manner, and defended by three caſtles; two of which, namely, St. Felix and St. Pietro, ſtand on a hill; and the third, called Il Caſtello Vecchio and a kind of citadel, lies in a plain along the river Adige, which runs through the city, and over which are four ſtone bridges; whereof the principal, near the laſt-mentioned caſtle, is 348 feet long. The city makes a better appearance by its delightful outlets than within, moſt of the ſtreets being narrow, crooked, and dirty, and the houſes but mean. The number of its inhabitants is now computed to amount to near 50,000, but formerly was much greater. The beſt ſtreet is that called the Corſo, which is pretty long. The cathedral is an old building. One of the fineſt churches is that of St. Georgio, belonging to the Benedictines. The palace in which the ſociety, or academy, of Philharmonics aſſemble, as all the ſociety of the Philati, in order to the revival and improvement of martial exerciſes, is remarkable, particularly on account of the great collection of all the ancient inſcriptions and monuments in the Hetrurian, Punic, Egyptian, Greek, and Latin languages, either found or brought here for a great many years paſt. The largeſt ſquare in the city is the Piazza d'Armi, in which is a marble ſtatue, repreſenting the city of Venice. In the Palazzo della Regione, or the Guildhall, are the ſtatues of five illuſtrious natives of Verona, namely, Catullus, Æmilius Marcus, Cornelius Nepos, the elder Pliny, and Vitruvius; but the moſt valuable piece of antiquity here, is the celebrated Roman amphitheatre, which ſo far exceeds all others, the ſteps, or ſeats, on which the people ſat, being ſtill entire; though, in reality, but little of it appears ancient, having been carefully repaired, from time to time, at the city's expence. The learned count Maffei computed, that it held 22,184 ſpectators: the outward wall and the upper ſtory are wanting. Near this city is a delightful place, called Campus Martius, at preſent uſed for the annual fair; it is conſtructed in a quadrangular form, with four gates, and in the centre, along the ſtands and booths, which are placed in a direct line, one may ſee all the four gates. The trade of this city is not improved as it might be, by ſupplying other countries with the medicinal plants growing on Monte Balbo, olives, oil, wine, and very good linen, ſewing ſilk, and woollen ſtuffs. The Scaligeri were lords of this city for 170 years; and one of them, for his greater ſecurity, and to keep the city in awe, built the Caſtello Vecchio, and the large ſtone bridge. In 1787, Galeaſſo Maria, firſt duke of Milan, drove out the Scaligeri, and uſurped the ſovereignty of this city; but in the year 1409, the Venetians became maſters of it: 60 miles W. Venice, and 18 NNE Mantua. Long. 28. 34. E. Ferro. Lat. 45. 24. N.—On the 3d of June, 1796, this city was taken by the French.

VERONESE, a province of Italy, ſo called from its capital, Verona, bounded on the north by the Trentin, on the eaſt by the Vicentin, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by the Mantuan, and on the weſt by the lake of Garda; about 50 miles in length, and 25 in breadth. The ſoil is fertile, and produces plenty of ſilk, corn, wine, oil, and the moſt delicious fruits. The Veroneſe was anciently a Roman colony; afterwards it made a part of Lombardy. After divers revolutions, it became the property of the Houſe of Eſte, from whence it fell to the dukes of Milan; and in the year 1409 to the Venetians.

VERREZ, a town of Piedmont, in the duchy of Aoſta, ſituated at the foot of a hill, on a ſtream of water, which divides into three branches, traverſing the town on both ſides, and the centre. The inhabitants have no other ramparts than the neighbouring mountains, and no other foſſes than the beds of the rivers, made by nature: the houſes are about 150 in number. In the moſt elevated part is a ſquare fortreſs, built on a ſharp rock, ſurrounded with a wall of ſtone, a parapet, and a good rampart, which ſurrounds the fortreſs and the gate of entrance, ſo that no one can arrive at this gate till they have paſſed the rampart and a drawbridge upon the foſſe. When the bridge is up, the fortreſs is ſuppoſed to be impregnable, being ſurrounded on all ſides with frightful precipices, while the acceſs is only by narrow paſſes in the vally, which a ſmall garriſon can obſtruct, and annoy the enemy far and near: 15 miles SSE. Aoſta, and 35 N. Turin.

VERRIERES, a town of France, in the department of the Vienne, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Mont Morillon: 4½ leagues SE. Poitiers, and 4 W. Mont Morillon.

VERRUA, a town of Italy, in the principality of Piedmont, on a high hill, near the Po, oppoſite Creſcentia: the fortifications were once very ſtrong, and the caſtle was called impregnable. It was taken by the Spaniards in the year 1539; but, it is ſuppoſed, through the treachery of the commander. It was retaken by ſurpriſe, in 1542, by the marquis of Pianeſſe. A French garriſon was placed here, through the influence of Chriſtina of France, the duke of Savoy's mother. But eleven years after, it was reſtored to Savoy. In the year 1734, this town was beſieged by the French, under the duke of Vendôme, and made a brave defence for ſix months, till the beginning of April, 1705; nor did the governor ſurrender before he had blown up moſt of the fortifications. The French loſt, it is ſuppoſed, near 20,000 men.

VIENNA, a city of Germany, capital of the archduchy of Auſtria, and ſee of an archbiſhop, ſituated on the right ſide of the Danube, where it receives a ſmall river, called Vien, which paſſes through the city and ſuburbs; near the place where ſtood the ancient Vindebona. The ſituation is pleaſant, for to the eaſt and north the country around is entirely level, but to the weſt and ſouth are ſeen a range of mountains, which are thick planted with trees and vines; and the Danube, which is here very wide, divides itſelf in that part of the town into ſeveral arms, forming many iſlands, which are ſtocked with wood. The circumference of that which is properly the fortified city of Vienna is not large, and only contains about 60,000 ſouls: but the ſuburbs are therefore the more ample; and, according to the eſtimate of a late traveller, the city and ſuburbs together contain 250,000 inhabitants. In the city itſelf there are numerous and beautiful palaces: but the ſtreets are not ſpacious, and are, in part, crooked. Thoſe people of faſhion who have no country ſeats, or who are prevented by their public employments from leaving Vienna, generally reſide in the ſuburbs during ſummer. The ſecond floor of all burghers' houſes is allotted for the reſidence of the officers of the imperial court, and the owners can only purchaſe an exemption by paying a ſum of money for the erection of barracks. It is divided into four quarters, which contain fifteen ſquares or public places, that of the court is large and beautiful; in it, between two fountains, is a ſuperb monument, built by the emperor Leopold; in the high market-place is a marble monument, repreſenting the marriage of Joſeph and the virgin, erected in the year 1732. Vienna contains 50 churches or chapels, and 21 convents: the metropolitan church is a dark Gothic building, richly adorned on the outſide with ſculpture, and within with 38 altars, moſtly of beautiful marble; a great number of relics, jewels, &c. and an ancient vault in which the archdukes are interred. Here is the mauſoleum of Frederick III. which coſt 40,000 ducats, and a monument in honour of prince Eugene of Savoy. Near it is the palace of the archbiſhop. In a chapel belonging to the Capuchins, the princes of the royal family are buried, without pomp, with hardly their names over their tombs. The univerſity of Vienna was inſtituted in the year 1365, from a college founded about a century before, and is divided into four faculties and four nations, Auſtrian, Saxon, Hungarian, and Rheniſh. The library is not very numerous; it is open two or three hours morning and afternoon. The imperial library contains about 5000 or 6000 volumes, printed in the 15th century, rare manuſcripts, and a very extenſive and valuable collection of prints, and is well furniſhed with uſeful modern books. It is open three or four hours every morning to the public. The imperial cabinet is very rich in medals, and ſtill more ſo in natural hiſtory. The ſuburbs are far larger than the city itſelf: they lie round it, but are removed to the diſtance of 500 or 600 common paces from the works of the fort. The line which encloſes them, and extends on both ſides to Leopoldſtadt, was, in the year 1794, thrown up againſt the Hungarian rebels, and afterward lined with bricks, the gates and entries to it being always kept by regular guards. Theſe ſuburbs ſtand, for the moſt part, under the juriſdiction of the town-council, to whom an appeal lies from the ſentence of the judge and his aſſeſſors, with which each ſuburb is provided. Of them Leopolſtadt is the largeſt and chiefeſt. It lies next the town, on an iſland in the Danube, being formerly called the Jews-town; but the emperor Leopold, in the year 1670, having driven that people from thence, it took its name from him. It contains one pariſh church, two cloyſters, the old imperial favorita, a citadel which, in the year 1683, was miſerably laid waſte by the Turks, and but a ſmall part of it repaired; together with the adjoining extenſive au-garden, and many conſiderable fine houſes and gardens. The garriſon of Vienna conſiſts of one regiment of foot. Proviſions are brought to Vienna from the different parts of Auſtria and other countries belonging to the emperor, in the greateſt plenty and variety. A modern traveller ſays, that he has ſeen a ſcore of wild hogs and a dozen ſtags in the game-market at the ſame time, and hares, literally, by cartloads, with abundance of pheaſants and partridges. Every kind of bird ſeems to be an article of food, and none rejected; hawks, jays, magpies, are brought to market, and even the bullfinch and robin are not ſpared. The livers of geeſe are eſteemed a great delicacy, and in the fiſh-market are found with ſturgeon, carp, pike, tench, and trout, tortoiſes, frogs, and ſnails. The manufactures of Vienna are numerous, and the trade extenſive. Vienna owes its firſt aggrandizement to Henry I. duke of Auſtria, who, about the year 1142, made it the place of his reſidence; it was then a town, and in the year 1158, was ſurrounded with walls. In the year 1198, it obtained its municipal privileges, and was better fortified. In the year 1477, it was beſieged, without ſucceſs, by the Hungarians, and in the year 1529 and 1683, by the Turks. In the year 1241, it was taken by Frederic II. duke of Auſtria; in the year 1277, by the emperor Rodolphus I.; and in the year 1485, by Matthias, king of Hungary: 175 miles S. Prague. Long. 34. 8. VIRGIN GORDA, or Spaniſh Town, one of the Virgin Iſlands, in the Weſt Indies, which belongs to the Engliſh. Long. 63. 48. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 20. N.

VIRGIN ISLANDS, a cluſter of iſlands in the Weſt Indies, ſituated to the eaſt of Porto Rico; they are upwards of twenty in number, but for the moſt part deſert and barren, and extend 20 leagues in length, and upwards of 12 in breadth: but they are every way dangerous to navigators, though there is a baſon in the midſt of them of ſix or ſeven leagues in length, and three or four in breadth, in which ſhips may anchor, and be ſheltered and landlocked from all winds, and called The Bay of Sir Francis Drake, from his having paſſed through them to St. Domingo. The Engliſh and Danes divide moſt of them; but the Spaniards claim thoſe near Porto Rico. The iſland of Virgin Gorda, on which depend Anegada, Nicker, Prickly Pear, and Moſkito Iſlands, Cammanoes, Dog Iſlands, the Fallen City, with the Round Rock, Ginger Cooper's, Salt Iſland, Peter's Iſland, and Dead Cheſt, belongs to the Engliſh; and they have alſo Tortola, on which depend Joſt, Van Dyke's, Little Van Dyke's, Guano, Beef, and Thatch Iſlands. To the Danes belong St. Thomas's Iſland, on which Braſs, Little Saba, Buck Iſland, Great and Little St. James, and Bird Iſland, are dependent; with St. John, to which belong Lavango, Cam, and Witch Iſlands; and they have alſo Santa Iſland, or St. Croix. Theſe iſlands lie at about Lat. 18. 20. N. and the courſe through them, by due attention, is perfectly ſafe, at weſt-by-north, and weſt-north-weſt, as far as to the weſt end of the fourth iſland.

VIRGINIA, a town of Ireland, in the county of Cavan, ſeated on Lough Ramor, in which are ſeveral iſlands: 40 miles from Dublin.

VIRGINIA, one of the United States of America, bounded on the north by Pennſylvania and Maryland, on the eaſt by Maryland, the Cheſapeak, and the Atlantic Ocean, on the ſouth by North Carolina, on the weſt by Kentucky, and on the north-weſt by the river Ohio, which ſeparates it from the Indians; about 300 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 180 from north to ſouth: ſeveral ridges of mountains croſs this country from north to ſouth, a little inclining weſterly as they advance towards the ſouth; they extend from the ſtate of New York as far as Georgia, under different names: in Virginia, they are called the Blue Mountains, North Mountains, Warmſpring or Jackſon's Mountains, Allegany Mountains, and Laurel Mountains; the moſt eaſterly at leaſt one hundred miles from the Atlantic; the ſoil of the land, free from the mountains, is in general tolerably good, and capable of bearing the different kinds of corn and pulſe, cotton, flax, and hemp; and in the marſhy land rice has been lately cultivated. Before the revolution, the chief object was tobacco, but ſince that time corn has more engaged the attention of the Virginia farmers. In the ſouth-weſt parts of the ſtate, near the Kanhaway rivers, are mines of lead: mines of copper alſo have been found, and mines of iron; and in ſeveral places, coals. Marble is found in conſiderable quantities, and limeſtone; and many medicinal ſprings have been diſcovered in different parts. The principal rivers are James River, York, Potomack, Roanoke, and Kanhaway Great and Little. Virginia is divided into 82 counties. There are but few towns of conſequence in the ſtate, the principal are Williamſburgh, Norfolk, Alexandria, and Richmond. The number of inhabitants, in the year 1790, amounted to 747,610. By the declaration of rights, in May 1776, a free toleration of religious worſhip is allowed to all: the principal denominations of Chriſtians are epiſcopalians who are the moſt ancient ſettlers, preſbyterians, methodiſts, and baptiſts. Before the war with England, the Virginians imported almoſt the whole of their clothing, of which they now manufacture three-fourths; the manufacture of iron and lead are both very conſiderable, but agriculture ſeems to be the principal employment. In the year 1586, Sir Walter Raleigh procured ſeveral merchants and gentlemen to advance large ſums of money towards carrying on the deſign he had formed, of making farther diſcoveries in the Weſt Indies; and, in the year following, he obtained letters-patent from the queen, to poſſeſs, plant, and enjoy for himſelf and ſuch perſons as he ſhould nominate, themſelves, and their ſucceſſors, all ſuch lands, territories, &c. as they ſhould diſcover not in the poſſeſſion of any Chriſtian nation. In the April following, the merchants and gentlemen, by Sir Walter's directions, fitted out two ſmall veſſels, under the command of captain Philip Amidas, and captain Arthur Barlow, two of Sir Walter's ſervants, who knowing no better courſe, ſailed away to the Canaries; from thence to the Caribbee Iſlands, and croſſing the Gulf of Mexico, made the coaſt of Florida. They were ſo ignorant of navigation, that, by the computation of able ſeamen, they went above 1000 leagues out of their way. Their voyage, however, was proſperous, and they anchored in an inlet by the Roanoke. They landed upon certain iſlands on the coaſt, between Cape Fear and the Bay of Cheſapeak. They ſaw none of the natives till the third day after their landing, when they eſpied three in a canoe. One of them went aſhore, and waited without any ſigns of fear till the Engliſh rode to him. He ſpoke much to them in his own language, and then went boldly aboard their veſſels. They gave him a ſhirt, a hat, wine and meat, with which he was much pleaſed. Having attentively viewed every thing, he went away; and within half an hour, he had loaded his canoe with fiſh, which he brought and divided between the ſhip and the bark. The next day ſeveral canoes came, and in one of them the king's brother. His name was Granganameo; the king was called Wingina, and the country Wingandacoa. The king himſelf, at that time, lay at his chief town ill of the wounds which he had lately received in a battle. Granganameo, leaving his canoes at ſome diſtance, went to the point of land where the Engliſh had gone to the Indian the day before. Having ſpread a mat, he ſat down upon it; and when the Engliſh came to him well armed, he ſhowed no fear, but made ſigns to them to ſit down, ſtroaking his own head and breaſt, and then their's, to expreſs his love. The natives were a proper well-proportioned people, very civil in their behaviour, and highly reſpectful to Granganameo; for none of them ſat down, or ſpoke a word in his preſence, except four; on whom the Engliſh alſo beſtowed preſents. But Granganameo took them all from them, and made ſigns that every thing belonged to him. After ſome ſmall traffic, he went away, but returning in two days, he ate and drank very merrily with them. Not long after, he brought his wife and children on board. After this, there came down from all parts great numbers of people, with leather, coral, and divers kind of dyes. But when Granganameo was preſent, none durſt trade but himſelf, and thoſe who wore red copper on their heads, as he did. He would have given a bag of pearls for a ſuit of armour; but the Engliſh refuſed, as not regarding them, that they might thereby the better learn where they grew. He was very juſt to his promiſe, for they often truſted him, and he never failed to come within his day to the place which he promiſed. He commonly ſent the Engliſh every day a brace of bucks, rabbits, hares, and fiſh; and ſometimes melons, walnuts, cucumbers, peas, and divers kinds of roots. And the Engliſh, to try the ſtrength and goodneſs of the ſoil, put ſome of their peas into the ground, which grew wonderfully, and were found, in ten days' time, fourteen inches high. They returned to England about the middle of September, carrying with them two of the natives, Manteo and Wancheſe; and their diſcovery was ſo welcome there, that the queen herſelf named the country Virginia. The advantageous accounts which theſe firſt adventurers gave of the fertility, pleaſantneſs, and wholeſomneſs of the country, induced Sir Richard Grenvil himſelf to make a voyage thither the next year: and he accordingly ſet out from Plymouth, the 9th of April, with ſeven ſhips. Having made the uſual circuit of the Canaries and Weſt Indies, where they took two rich Spaniſh prizes, and forced a profitable trade, they fell in with the continent of America, near Cape Fear, and were in great danger of being loſt upon it. But having happily eſcaped, they came to an anchor off the iſland of Wococon, the 26th of May. They immediately ſent to the iſle of Roanoke to Wingina the king: and Mr. Arundel went to the main, with Manteo, who proved, throughout their whole ſtay, very faithful and uſeful to them. Soon after, the general, Sir Richard Grenvil, went himſelf to the main, with a ſelect body of men, and ranging about, diſovered ſeveral Indian towns. At one of them the Indians ſtole a ſilver cup, for which they burnt their town, and deſtroyed their corn, and ſo returned to their ſhips at Wococon. At Hatteras, whither they went ſoon after, Grauganameo, the king's brother, came aboard the admiral, with Manteo. This is the laſt viſit he made to the Engliſh, for ſome time this year he died, and in him they loſt a ſincere and hearty friend. Sir Richard Grenvil having only made that ſmall excurſion on the continent, returned to England: but he left behind him 108 perſons, as a colony, to keep poſſeſſion of, and inhabit the country. Of theſe he conſtituted Mr. Ralph Lane governor, a military man of note, who was afterwards knighted, and applying himſelf to the ſea-ſervice, was of eminent command in the Engliſh navy. With them remained captain Philip Amidas as admiral, one of the commanders-in-chief in the firſt adventure, Mr. Thomas Harriot, captain Stafford, Mr. Kendal, with ſeveral others of name in the expedition. This colony choſe Roanoke, an iſland at the mouth of Albemarle Sound, for the place of their habitation, and their chief employment was to reconnoitre and view the country. Their fartheſt diſcovery to the ſouthward, was Secotan, an Indian town, by their reckoning, 80 leagues from Roanoke, lying up between the rivers Pampticoe and Neus, in North Carolina. Diſputes with the Indians and other circumſtances induced Mr. Lane and the reſt to return to England, in the year 1586. Sir Walter Raleigh was not idle at home: he provided a ſhip of 100 tons, and loaded her with plenty of all things neceſſary for the ſettlement; but it being Eaſter before ſhe departed, Mr. Lane and his company had ſhipped themſelves for England in Sir Francis Drake's fleet, a few days before her arrival. Having, therefore, ſpent ſome time in ſeeking them up the country without effect, they returned that ſummer to England, with all their proviſion. About a fortnight after the departure of this ſhip, Sir Richard Grenvil arrived with three ſhips more, well provided; but he neither found that ſhip according to his expectation, nor could hear any news of the colony, which he, himſelf, had left there the year before. Therefore, after travelling up and down to ſeek them, finding their habitation abandoned, and being unwilling to loſe the poſſeſſion of the country, he landed 50 men on the iſland of Roanoke, plentifully furniſhed with all proviſions for two years, and ſo returned to England. The next year three ſhips were ſent, under the command of Mr. John White, who was appointed governor of the colony, with 12 aſſiſtants, as a council. To theſe Sir Walter Raleigh gave a charter, and incorporated them by the name of the governor and aſſiſtants of the city of Raleigh, in Virginia, with expreſs directions to ſettle at Cheſapeake; which, however uſeful and important, they, nevertheleſs, diſobeyed and neglected. Having taken the old route by the Weſt Indies, they had like to have been caſt away upon Cape Fear, through the error or deſign of Simon Ferdinando. He had been with the captain Amidas in the firſt expedition; and being made pilot in this, was ſuſpected of a deſign to ruin the whole voyage; but being prevented by the vigilance of captain Stafford, they arrived all ſafe at Hatteras the 22d of July. Soon after, there aroſe a diſpute between the governor and his aſſiſtants, or council, concerning a perſon to be ſent to England to ſolicit ſupplies: all refuſed, except one, who was thought very unequal to the buſineſs; at laſt they unanimouſly pitched upon the governor, as the fitteſt perſon; and having ſigned a paper, teſtifying his unwillingneſs to leave the colony, they at length prevailed upon him, with much importunity, to undertake it. Leaving, therefore, above a hundred perſons on one of the iſlands of Hatteras, to form a plantation, he departed, and after many croſſes and difficulties, got firſt to Ireland, and from thence went to England. At this time the nation was in great commotion, and apprehenſion of the Spaniſh invaſion; however, having laid a plan of operations, and made proper diſpoſitions for the defence of the nation, Sir Walter found leiſure to fit out a ſmall fleet for the relief of the colony, at Biddeford, early the next year, which was put under the command of Sir Richard Grenvil, and only waited for a fair wind; but the alarm of the vaſt and formidable armament, made by the king of Spain, entreating all ſhips of force, then in any readineſs, received orders from the ſtate, to ſtay in their harbours, for the defence of their own country; and Sir Richard Grenvil was perſonally commanded not to depart out of Cornwall; however governor White laboured ſo ſtrenuouſly with them, that he obtained two ſmall barks, and put to ſea from Biddeford, the 22d of April, 1588; but theſe veſſels, though of little force, being more intent on a gainful voyage, than the relief of the colony, ran in chaſe of prizes: till at laſt, one of them meeting with two ſhips of war, was, after a bloody fight, overcome, boarded, and rifled; in this maimed, ranſacked, and ragged condition, ſhe returned to England in a month's time; and in about three weeks after, the other alſo returned, without performing her intended voyage, to the diſtreſs, and, as it proved, the utter deſtruction of the colony in Virginia, and to the great diſpleaſure of their patron at home: theſe diſappointments gave much vexation to Sir Walter Raleigh, who had, by this time, expended, as we are authentically aſſured, no leſs then 40,000l. upon the enterpriſe, for which, and other reaſons, Sir Walter Raleigh made an aſſignment to Thomas Smith, with other merchants and adventures of London, and to governor White, and other gentlemen, for continuing the plantation of Virginia; but the new aſſignees were not ſo diligent and careful of the buſineſs, as they ought to have been; for it was a year after before any thing was undertaken by them for the relief of the colony: then Mr. White, with three ſhips, ſet ſail from Plymouth; and paſſing by the Weſt Indies, they ſtaid ſome time there, to perform ſome exploits, as they called them, which was to attack and plunder the Spaniards, among whom they got a conſiderable booty. Neither did the colony at all advance before the arrival of lord Delaware, in the year 1610, from which time it gradually began to flouriſh.

VIRIEU, a town of France, in the department of the Iſere: 2 leagues SSE. la Tour du Pin, and 3½ N. Meirans.

VISEGLIA, ſee Biſeglia.

VISET, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Liege, ſituated on the eaſt ſide of the Meuſe, in the marquiſate of Franchimont. It was ſurrounded with walls in the year 1338, by Adolphus de la Mark, biſhop of Liege. In the year 1376, when John d'Arckel was biſhop of Liege, he had a great quarrel with his chapter; the town of Viſet, which took part with the chapter, was attacked by the biſhop's people; but the citizens, aſſiſted by the Liegeois, repulſed them, took the biſhop's grand ſtandard, and obliged his troops to retire in confuſion. In the year 1396, it was taken, pillaged, and burned, by the Germans. John de Heinſberg, the fifty-ſecond biſhop, granted it many privileges, in the year 1429; among others the liberty of chooſing their own magiſtrates: 6 miles S. Maeſtricht, and 8 N. Liege.

VISSEHOVEDE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Verden: 19 miles E. Verden.

UIST (North), one of the Weſtern Iſlands of Scotland, about 20 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 8 to 16 north to ſouth; 15 miles weſt from the iſland of Skye. The word Uiſt is ſaid to be taken from the Scandinavian word viſt, which ſignifies weſt, and was given by the Danes, when in poſſeſſion of theſe countries, on account of its weſterly ſituation. Along the whole of the weſt coaſt, and round the north end of this iſland (being almoſt the only parts of it that are cultivated) the country is low and level for the moſt of a mile and a half from the ſhore to the moor. In this part of the country the ſoil is ſandy, eſpecially near the ſhore, and at ſome diſtance from it, between that and the moor, is a thin black ground, covering either a hard gravel, or ſolid rock, interſperſed in ſome places with flats and meadows. The reſt of the country conſiſts of a barrēn, ſoft, deep moor ground, and mountains of no great height, covered with heath: the cultivated part of the country is extremely pleaſant and beautiful in ſummer and autumn, yielding, in favourable ſeaſons, the moſt luxuriant crops of barley, and the richeſt paſture of white and red clover; but though, in the warm ſeaſon of the year, no country in the highlands can exhibit a more delightful proſpect, yet, in the winter and ſpring, the ſcene is totally changed; the face of the country then is quite naked and bare, there being no trees nor high grounds to ſhelter it from the inclemency of the weather. The graſs is ſo ſoft and tender, that the winter rains and ſnow take away its ſubſtance; ſo that cattle, during theſe ſeaſons, feed partly upon corn and ſtraw, and partly upon the ſea-weed, thrown, in time of bad weather, in great quantities, upon the ſhore. That part of the coaſt waſhed by the Atlantic is inacceſſible to veſſels of any burden; and even to ſmall boats, but in very good weather, on account of the rocks, ſhoals, and breakers that ſurround it. In bad weather, when the wind blows upon this part of the coaſt, the ſea ſwells to a prodigious height, and rolls with inexpreſſible violence againſt the ſhores, exhibiting a proſpect awfully grand beyond deſcription. The coaſt on the eaſt ſide of the country is bold, except where it is interſected by inlets of the ſea, which form ſafe and commodious harbours. The harbour fartheſt to the northward is called Cheeſebay, of eaſy acceſs from the SE. where veſſels may ride with ſafety at all ſeaſons of the year. South of this lies the harbour of Lochmaddie, much frequented by ſhips trading from Ireland and the weſt of England and Scotland to the Baltic. It extends five or ſix miles into the country, and, on account of the great number of iſlands it contains, is ſubdivided into ſeveral harbours, which are all ſafe and commodious. Though there may be about 2000 cows, yet the number exported yearly, will not exceed 300, owing to the numbers that die of want and of diſtempers to which they are here more liable than in any part of the highlands. The number of horſes may amount, at leaſt, to 1600. There are no farms fit for ſheep; but every tenant endeavours to rear as many as will furniſh him with a little mutton, and wool for clothing; they never thrive ſo well as to enable the tenant to export any. The number of ſheep in the whole pariſh may amount to near 5000, of a very ſmall unmixed breed, covered with fine ſhort wool, of which about fifteen fleeces go to a ſtone. In no country can the climate be more variable than in this. There are many inſtances of froſt, ſnow, ſleet, and deluges of rain, in the courſe of the ſame day; high gales of wind are frequent throughout the year, but particularly the vernal and autumnal equinoxes are attended with ſtorms that ſometimes prove fatal in their effects upon cattle and corn. The number of inhabitants is about 2220; and in the whole iſland there are ſix places of public worſhip. Long. 4. 12. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 52 42. N.

UIST (South), one of the Weſtern Iſlands of Scotland, about 20 miles from north to ſouth, and from 6 to 8 wide about 20 miles weſt from the iſland of Sky. This iſland is of an oblong form, ſeparated from the iſland of North Uiſt, to the eaſtward and northward, by an arm of the ſea, which ebbs at low water; it is alſo ſeparated from the iſland of Barra, to the ſouthward and weſtward, by a channel, or ſound, nearly eight or nine miles broad, which never ebbs; towards the weſt ſide, the ſoil is totally light and perfectly ſandy, and the moſt part of it rendered quite uſeleſs, by the ſeverity of the conſtant ſtorms that blow from the weſt, with the force of the ſea, during the winter and ſpring ſeaſons. Farther back there is one continued chain of ſwamp and lakes, abounding with the greateſt variety of the fineſt trouts; and ſtill to the eaſtward there are ſteep and lofty mountains, covered with heath and verdure, fit enough for paſturing black cattle, horſes, ſheep, and goats, during the ſummer and autumn months. As the ſoil to the weſt ſide is for the moſt part light and ſandy, it of courſe muſt be barren of itſelf, without the force of manure. There are delightful fields to be ſeen covered with the fineſt natural graſs in ſummer: yet, in the winter ſeaſon, many of theſe very ſpots are covered over with drifted ſand, in ſuch a manner that the leaſt trace of verdure cannot be ſeen for many months. Were it not for the immenſe quantity of floating ſea-ware that is thrown a-ſhore during the winter ſtorms, the inhabitants never could manure the ground, ſo as to raiſe a tolerable crop of any kind. Barley, oats, rye, and potatoes, with fiſh, are the chief productions for the ſupport of the inhabitants. It ought to be obſerved alſo, that the produce of the country does not more than ſerve the people for nine months in the year. Kelp is the ſtaple commodity, of which 1100 tons are, on an average, manufactured in the iſland. About 440 or 480 head of cows and young oxen are annually exported; the number of ſheep is about 7000; the horſes are ſmall, but full of ſpirit, and hardy; their number about 800. There are a few goats, ſome deer and rabbits, with abundance of game, and birds of the aquatic kind, and birds of prey, as eagles, hawks, and falcons. The coaſts abound with fiſh, and numbers of whales are ſeen at particular ſeaſons of the year. The number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 3450, of which 500 are Proteſtants, and the reſt Roman Catholics. Long. 4. 10. W. Edinburgh. Lat. 57. 15. N.

UNDERWALDEN, or Unterwalden, a canton of Swiſſerland, bounded on the north by Lucern and Waldſtatter Lake, on the eaſt by mountains which ſeparate it from Uri, on the ſouth by Bern, and on the weſt by Lucern. It meaſares about 8 leagues each way, and is divided into two vallies, Upper and Lower, by a foreſt, called Kernwald, which croſſes the canton from north to ſouth. Theſe vallies are called in German Unterwald ob dem Wald, and Unterwald nid dem Wald; that is, Underwald over the Foreſt, and Underwald under the Foreſt. Each of them forms a ſeparate regency. The canton itſelf is ſmall, but abounds in fruit and cattle. The mountains are covered with rich paſtures, and the fields in the fertile vallies, in one year, yield ſeveral advantages: for in ſpring time, when the ſnow is off the ground, they are full of cattle; afterwards, the cattle being driven up the Alps, the herbage ſhoots again in ſuch a manner as often to be mowed twice in the ſummer, and in autumn the cattle on their return from the Alps, meet again with plenty of fodder in them, till the ſnow ſets in a-new. All the lower parts of the country produce an exuberance of very fine fruits, and with wood this canton is ſo well provided, that without any detriment to it, ſeveral ſpots might be aſſorted and improved into meadow or arable land. Of wheat it has little or none, and grows no wine. The Underwalders are univerſally Roman Catholics, and have ever enjoyed the like liberties with the people of Uri and Schweitz. In conjunction alſo with them, in the year 1308, they ſhook off the Auſtrian yoke: Arnald de Melchtal, a native of this canton, was one of the four heroes who firſt reared the ſtandard of Swiſs liberty; and in 1315, they entered into a perpetual alliance with the ſaid ſtates. Among the confederate body, they are reckoned the ſixth, but among the ſix landern or leſſer cantons, the third. The government of this canton is purely democratical, the landeſgemeine being the depoſitary of the whole ſupreme power, and in which all males above ſixteen have a right of admittance. As the country, however, conſiſts of two vales, each of them forming a ſeparate republic, ſo they have both their own particular landeſgemeine, and officers; but in the general affairs of the thirteen cantons they form only one. Of all the people of Swiſſerland, thoſe of Underwald are the moſt honoured and moſt loved by the other cantons: their courage and love of liberty, being joined by a ſtrict concord, and an amiable ſimplicity of manners. Sarnen is the principal place of the Upper Vale, and Stanz of the Lower and of the whole canton.

UNITED PROVINCES, a name given to the Seven Proteſtant States of the Netherlands, which threw off the yoke of Spain, and became independent: ſee Holland and Netherlands.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The extenſive country poſſeſſed by the United States, is bounded on the north by Canada and New Brunſwick, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Atlantic, on the ſouth by Florida, and on the weſt by the Miſſiſippi. The States are at preſent fifteen in number, viz. New Hampſhire, Maſſachuſetts, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Iſland, New York, New Jerſey, Maryland, Delaware, Pennſylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia. Beſides theſe, there are the diſtricts of Maine, the Tenaſſee government, and the territory north-weſt of the Ohio, which in proceſs of time may become States: the two firſt, in all probability, within a ſhort ſpace; the latter is inhabited by different nations of Indians. The whole country is computed to contain 640 millions of acres, 51 millions of which are ſuppoſed to be covered with water: and it may be juſtly obſerved that no quarter of the globe is ſo well ſupplied with rivers, great and ſmall ſprings and lakes, as the American States; and a communication by water from one extremity to the other is more eaſy than in Great Britain, France, or Spain, and a great multitude of bays and excellent harbours are found on the coaſt of every maritime ſtate. With little exception, theſe States were ſettled by colonies from Great Britain, and till the year 1776, they were ſtyled Britiſh Colonies, or Britiſh Provinces of America. On the 4th day of July, in that year, the people by their repreſentatives in congreſs aſſembled, made a ſolemn declaration of independence, and renounced all allegiance and ſubjection to the king of Great Britain; at the ſame time alſo, they publiſhed articles of confederation, and perpetual union, calling themſelves The United States of America.

UNKA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland: 85 miles N. Calmar.

UNKENACH, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 6 miles W. Schwanaſtatt.

UNNA, a river which riſes in Boſnia, on the borders of Croatia: 28 miles S. Bihacs, and runs into the Save, 16 miles NW. Gradiſca.

UNNA, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Mark. This place is in rank the ſecond town of the county, and lies in a fine plain, on a rivulet named the Kottelbecke, being environed with walls and ditches. In it is a Lutheran pariſh church, and an hoſpital church, which the Calviniſts uſe for their worſhip, but in which alſo on Saturdays worſhip is performed by a Lutheran preacher; as alſo a nunnery, together with a chapel, and a Lutheran ſchool. This town is poſſeſſed of a very extenſive and profitable territory. Formerly it conſtituted one of the Hanſe-towns. So early as the year 1032, Unna was a conſiderable village, and, together with its extent of territory, belonged to the archbiſhop of Cologn. In the year 1250, it was environed with walls, and endowed with the immunities of a town: 23 miles S. Munſter, and 8 E. Dortmund.

UNNARY, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland: 43 miles W. Wexio.

UNREST, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea, near the coaſt of Java: 3 leagues W. Batavia.

UNSER FRAU, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 1 mile N. Weitra.

UNST, the moſt northerly of the ſmaller Shetland Iſlands, about 8 miles long and 4 broad, in compariſon with the other Shetland iſles, is reckoned level, yet its ſurface is diverſified by ſeveral extenſive and moderately high hills. The ſea-coaſt being broken and indented by ſo many bays and creeks, its extent cannot be eaſily aſcertained, nor has any accurate meaſurement of it been yet attempted. Several iſlets are ſcattered here and there around it. All the ſhores expoſed to the main ocean, but eſpecially the lands, are conſiderably high and rocky. The higheſt of the head lands riſes to the height of 60 or 70 fathoms. The ſhores of the bays and harbours, again, are low, ſhelving, and ſandy. Unſt abounds in iron-ſtone, which, however, has not yet been applied to any uſeful purpoſe. It affords large veins of jaſper; ſome pieces of which are beautifully variegated with black and green ſhades and ſpots. Rock cryſtal, remarkable for its purity and hardneſs, has likewiſe been found here. Through the ſparry rocks, cubical bits of ſulphur, of a bright gold colour, are often found; a ſpecies of rough ſtone, of a long grain, a greyiſh colour, in appearance ſomewhat ſimilar to decayed wood, fit for building, and very ſuitable for lintels, is likewiſe found. Great plenty of white ſpar, or, perhaps, quartz, rounded by the action of the waves, is thrown up on the ſea-beach. Some ſpecimens of a greyiſh ſlate have been tried; but no quarries of it are wrought. Lime-ſtone abounds in the ſouth part of the iſland. Black oats, bere, potatoes, cabbages, and various garden-roots and greens, which grow in great perfection, are the moſt common vegetables in that iſland. Artichokes too, of a delicate taſte, are produced here, with ſome ſmall fruit, and moſt of the garden flowers that grow in the north of Scotland. There is little or no ſown graſs; but the meadows are rich in red and white clover; and, in the ſeaſons of vegetation, are enamelled with a beautiful profuſion of wild flowers. The paſture-grounds in the commons are generally covered with a ſhort, tender, flowering heath. Some curious and rare plants have been diſcovered in this iſland, by ſome gentlemen ſkilled in botany. The common people gather ſcurvy-graſs, trefoil, and ſome other plants that grow in the iſland, for their medical qualities. The roots of the tormentil are uſed in tanning hides. The quadrupeds of this iſland, which, indeed, are common through the reſt of the Shetland Iſles, are black cattle, horſes, ſheep, hogs, rabbits, dogs, cats, ſeals, and otters. The oxen weigh from 300 lb. to 500 lb. The whole number of cows and oxen in the iſland is not fewer than 2000; of theſe 1150 are milk cows. The horſes are well known for their ſmall ſize and hardineſs; They are called Shelties; their number is about 1000. The ſheep amount to about 6600. Rats, mice, frogs, toads, and adders, are unknown. The coaſt abounds with fiſh, and fiſhing is an important branch of buſineſs among the iſlanders, about 80 tons being taken, on an average, yearly. The manufacture of kelp was firſt attempted in the year 1780; but the bays are, in general, too ſhallow, and the ſhores too much expoſed to afford a large quantity of ſea-weeds for the purpoſe. The number of houſes is about 300, and, of inhabitants, about 1688. Long. 2. 5. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 61. 7. N.

This place enjoys the privilege of granting protection to all ſlaves, and its burghers and merchants, together with their wares, are toll-free throughout all the Auſtrian countries. It ſuffered ſeverely by two great fires, and was mortgaged for a long number of years, firſt to the elector of Bavaria, and afterwards to the counts of Salburg; but was again redeemed, and in 1718, a ſecond time obtained ſeat and voice in the province, from which it was excluded during the mortgage. Near it, in the year 1626, the rebellious Bavarians were defeated: 27 miles SSE. Paſſau, and 110 W. Vienna. Long. 31. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 48. 1. N.

VOGLAMARCK, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 3 miles SW. Voglabruck.

VOGTLAND, a country of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, ſituated between the territory of Erzgeburg, Bohemia, the electorate of Saxony, and the principality of Culmbach. It is very hilly, and abounds in woods, but the former cannot be ſaid to be altogether unfruitful, as producing either trees and plants, or being improved by tillage. In ſome parts likewiſe they yield copper, iron, lead, and ſilver, with other minerals, ſuch as alum. Here is alſo no want of any kind of proviſions; the fields affording grain and eſculent herbs; the fine paſtures in the vallies, droves of excellent cattle, the woods plenty of veniſon and game, and the waters a variety of fiſh. The principal rivers are the Elſter and the Saal. The name of the Vogtland ſignifies the country poſſeſſed by the ancient advocates of the empire, who were predeceſſors to the preſent counts of Reuſſen. But the counts of Reuſſen at preſent enjoy only a part of it. The greateſt part of this country belongs to the electoral houſe of Saxony. The marggraves of Brandenburg Culmbach are poſſeſſed of the lordſhip of Hof, and the lordſhip of Ronneburg is veſted in the houſe of Saxe Gotha. What the name and dignity of a vogt imported in thoſe ancient vogts of the empire is not yet agreed among the learned. One of the moſt probable conjectures is, that this dignity of a vogt was an hereditary office belonging to the empire, and the vogts themſelves ſubordinate to the palatinate of the Rhine, as arch-vogt of the empire. No leſs uncertainty is concerning the epocha of this title, though it appears to have been uſed in the 11th century, the ancient ſtatutes of the town of Weyda having been given to it in 1027, by Henry, vogt of Weyda. Towards the middle of the 14th century, this title was diſcontinued.

VOLGA, a river of Ruſſia, formed by two ſtreams, one iſſuing from Lake Seliger, in the government of Tver, the other from a ſmaller lake, eight miles weſt from Lake Seliger, which unite together, Long. 51. 20. Lat. 56. 40. It then takes a ſouth-eaſt courſe to Zobtov; it then changes to north-eaſt, paſſes Staritza, Tver, and Mologa, near which laſt place it changes its courſe to ſouth-eaſt, paſſes Jaroſlavl, Koſtrom, Penza, and Kazan; after which its courſe is more ſouth, paſſing by Spaſk, Simbirſk, Samara, &c. At Samara it inclines a little to the weſt, paſſing by Slizan, Chvalinſk, Volſk, Curdom, Saratov, Kamliſchin, Tzaritzin, &c. at Tzaritzin it takes its courſe ſouth-eaſt, and paſſing by Tchernoiyar, and a number of other town, forts, &c. it enters the Caſpian Sea, at Aſtrachan. This is ſuppoſed to be the largeſt river in Europe, and a canal is made from it to the Neva, which opens a navigable communication between the Caſpian Sea and the Baltic.

VOLGANSK, a town of Ruſſia, in the government of Charkov, on the Donetz: 40 miles NE. Charkov.

VOLHYNIA, a palatinate of Poland, bounded on the north by the palatinate of Brzeſc, on the eaſt by Kiov, on the ſouth by the palatinate of Kaminiec, and on the weſt by the palatinates of Chelm and Belcz; about 180 miles in length, and from 80 to 120 in breadth. This country is ſo fertile as to ſupply the inhabitants with a large ſurplus of grain: roſemary, aſparagus, &c. grow wild in the woods, and can hardly be diſtinguiſhed from thoſe cultivated in the gardens. Volhynia was annexed to Poland in a diet held at Lublin in 1569. The Tartars, beſides a great booty, carried off 30,000 perſons out of this country, to be ſold as ſlaves, in the year 1618. It is now added to Ruſſia.

VOLKENMARCK, or Volkel Markt, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Carinthia, on the north ſide of the Drave: 12 miles E. Clagenfurt, and 10 SW. St. Andre. Long. 32. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 44. N.

VOLLENHOVEN, a town of Overiſſel, and capital of a diſtrict, ſituated near the Zuyder See, the capital of a country ſo called. It is not large, but carries on a conſiderable trade. Philip II. king of Spain, when maſter of the province of Overiſſel, eſtabliſhed a ſovereign council here for all the province, who were the judges of all cauſes, without appeal. Their juriſdiction was, nevertheleſs, very injurious, for they never pronounced ſentence without the intervention of the governor of the province, who generally reſided at Vollenhoven for that purpoſe. This town at its commencement belonged to Godfrey de Rhenen, biſhop of Utrecht, who in the year 1178, built a ſtrong caſtle to defend the country from the incurſions of the Friſons; this caſtle afterwards ſerved as a priſon of ſtate, for the dioceſe of Utrecht: 31 miles W. Covorden, and 28 N. Deventer. Long. 23. 19. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 42. N.

VOLTANA, a town of Spain, in the kingdom of Aragon: 5 miles NW. Ainſa.

VOLTERRA, a town of Italy, in the duchy of Tuſcany. This was one of the ancient twelve cities of Etruria, now a lonely, mean place, though it reckons 25 churches, chapels, and oratories, and about 20 convents and religious fraternities. It ſtands on a mountain, but the air is unwholeſome, entire villages in the neighbourhood lie in ruins, and uninhabited, and the country all round is overrun with weeds and buſhes, which unqueſtionably contributes to render the abode unhealthful. It has rich copper mines, but not worked: 29 miles ESE. Leghorn, and 29 SW. Florence. Long. 28. 35. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 23. N.

VOLTOEGA, a town of Spain, in the province of Catalonia: 5 miles W. Vique.

UPSAL, a town of Sweden, in the province of Upland, ſituated on the river Fyris, which divides it into two parts; that part which lies on the eaſt ſide of the river being properly the city, and that on the weſt being called Fierding. Upſal was anciently the chief ſeat of the ſovereigns of Sweden, where they held their ſupreme tribunal. The greateſt ſacrifices offered in all the northern provinces, were brought hither in the time of Paganiſm, and the moſt eminent Heathen prieſts reſided here. Upſal is the ſee of an archbiſhop. All the buildings are of wood, the cathedral and a few ſtone houſes excepted, and the roofs of them are nothing but the bark of birch trees, covered with turf. Here are three churches, among which the cathedral is the principal. The kings of Sweden are generally crowned here. A ſchool was firſt inſtituted at Upſal, in the year 1246, which was raiſed to an univerſity, in the year 1476; but in 1582, it was removed to Stockholm. However, the univerſity was eſtabliſhed a ſecond time at Upſal, in the year 1592; Guſtavus I. and Guſtavus Adolphus endowed this univerſity with ſome lands; it has alſo been enriched by conſiderable legacies of ſeveral private perſons, beſides the royal ſalaries. The edifice called Academia Guſtaviana, which is three ſtories high, was built by Guſtavus Adolphus, in the year 1622. It has a round tower, or rather cupola, at the top, in which is a curious anatomical theatre, founded in the ſame year, by profeſſor Rudbeck. It has alſo a very valuable library, containing near 1000 manuſcripts, amongſt which the moſt remarkable is the Codex Argenteus, ſuppoſed to be Ulphila's Gothic tranſlation of the four evangeliſts; but it ſeems rather to be written in the language of the ancient Francs. The aſtronomical obſervatory was planned by the celebrated Celſius; and the phyſic garden was laid out chiefly by the famous Linnæus. The royal academy of ſciences was inſtituted in the year 1728. The Swediſh geographers place their firſt meridian, from which they compute the longitude, at Upſal. About the cloſe of the 11th, or the beginning of the 12th century, a biſhop's ſee was eſtabliſhed here, which, at the deſire of Charles VII. was made archiepiſcopal, by pope Alexander III. Stephanus, who was conſecrated in the year 1162, was the firſt archbiſhop of Upſal: 35 miles N. Stockholm. Long. 17. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 59. 51. N.

The air is reckoned unwholeſome: one of the chief productions is ſilk; game and fiſh are plentiful. Urbino was formerly governed by its own dukes, of whom the laſt, Francis Maria, of Rovere, dying in the year 1631, without male iſſue, the Pope took poſſeſſion of his territory. The ſaid duke had by will in, 1626, confirmed the Pope's claims, and already, in effect, made over the country. Victoria, daughter of his ſon Ubaldi, and ſpouſe to Ferdinand II. great duke of Tuſcany, inherited the allodial eſtates: and hence it is that Poggio Imperiale, and other places in this country, belong to the duke of Tuſcany. In the year 1764, the Pope purchaſed the rights claimed by the duke of Tuſcany.

URBINO, a city of Italy, and capital of a duchy of the ſame name, near the head of the Foglio, the ſee of an archbiſhop, and reſidence of a legate. It is ſituated on a hill, at the union of two rivers. The univerſity or academy is one of the moſt ancient in Italy. It contains a noble college, and 16 convents. The ducal palace, which at preſent belongs to the Pope, was built by duke Frederic, who furniſhed it with many ancient ſtatues of marble and bronze, excellent paintings, and a library of curious and rare books. The library was conveyed to Rome, by pope Alexander VII. In the churches are ſeen ſome works of the celebrated painters Raphael and Frederic Barocci; as likewiſe of Genga, Vincent St. Geminian, and Timotheus d'Urbino, pupils of Raphael. Raphael was a native of Urbino: 54 miles E. Florence, and 115 N. Rome. Long. 30. 15. E. Ferro. Lat. 43. 48. N.

URI, a canton of Swiſſerland, bounded on the north by Schwitz, on the eaſt by Glaris, on the ſouth by the Italian bailiwick; and on the weſt by Underwalden, about 60 miles in length, and 28 in breadth. It conſiſts almoſt every where of high mountains, and deep vallies; the ſummits of the former of which are perpetually covered with ice and ſnow. The loftieſt among them, and indeed the higheſt in Europe, is that of St. Gothard. On the Alps in this canton, during the ſummer, are fattened many thouſand heads of cattle; and the cheeſe is famed for its goodneſs. The vales between the high mountains here in ſummer are very hot and fertile, when not expoſed to the northern winds; among the mountains too, are found numbers of beautiful cryſtals; the greateſt part of which are bought up, and ſent off to Italy to be wrought. In this canton are only market-towns, villages, and ſcattered houſes; and the inhabitants being inured to a rough and hard way of living, are hardy, vigorous and brave, and ſtrenuous aſſertors of that liberty, which was ſo dearly purchaſed by their patriotic anceſtors. They are all Roman Catholics. They were once as a free people, immediately under the juriſdiction of the empire; but Albert I. aiming at their entire ſubjection, placed a ſevere vogt over them, on which they became refractory. This governor, whoſe name was Geſzler, among other irritating procedures at Altorf, ſet up a hat on a pole, with orders that the ſame tokens of regard ſhould be paid to it as to his own perſon. This mark of ſlavery, William Tell openly refuſing to comply with, the governor determined he ſhould feel all the weight of his indignation; the other however eſcaping by flight, gave riſe to an union between Uri, Schwitz, and Unterwalden, for throwing off the Auſtrian yoke, which union was effected, in the beginning of the year 1308; and in 1315, theſe three cantons entered into a perpetual alliance. At that time Uri held the firſt place among the confederates, but at preſent only the fourth, though among the ſix leſſer cantons it is ſtyled the firſt. Its government is democratical, and every male of 16 years of age intitled to a vote in it. Altorff is the capital.

UTRECHT, one of the United Dutch States, which, excepting in one ſmall ſtrip of land to the northward, and bordering on the Zuyder Zee, is wholly environed by Holland and Guelderland: it enjoys a good air, and, in moſt parts, the ſoil is very fruitful; to the eaſtward, it is, indeed, a high and ſterile country, conſiſting either of ſandy hills, or ſmall eminences, which are, in general, over-run with woods; and weſtward the country perfectly reſembles Holland, being for the moſt part rich meadow, though in many parts full of turf grounds. In the ſtate of Utrecht, are 70 towns and villages. Its ſtates are compoſed of the clergy, the nobility, and the towns; of theſe the former are merely nominals. The ſecond claſs is compoſed of the nobility, who on account of their manors, are called to the aſſembly of the ſtates. The third claſs conſiſts of the deputies of the five towns of Utrecht, Amersſoort, Wyk, Rhenen, and Montfoort; but more particularly of the firſt; nay, in conſultations, that city even aſſerts that the other four towns have only one vote; and ſo far is certain, that Utrecht can control the ſentiments of the reſt; but the reſolutions taken by it, may not be traverſed by the others. This country, together with Overyſſel, once conſtituted the temporal dominion of the biſhop of Utrecht, the firſt of whom was Willibrord, who being collated at Rome in the year 696, by pope Sergius, founded the church of Wiltenburg or Utrecht: its prelate was elected by the five chapters of the latter, who were alſo not without ſome ſhare in the government; but Henry of Bavaria, the laſt biſhop, who held that office jointly with the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction, being a man of a turbulent ſpirit, drew on him frequent tumults, and at length the principal of his ſubjects entered into a ſecret league with Charles duke of Guelderland, who marched out an armed force againſt him; and the latter being unable to withſtand the duke, in 1528, ſold his whole dioceſe or temporal dominion, together with the abſolute ſovereignty thereof, to the emperor Charles V. who annexed it as a lordſhip to the eſtates of the houſe of Auſtria, under which it continued till the reign of his ſon, Philip II. when, in 1579, by its alliance with the other Netherland provinces, who aſſerted their liberty, it became a free ſtate. The above-mentioned biſhop Henry of Bavaria, had three ſucceſſors as biſhop of Utrecht, of whom Frederick Baron Schenk of Tautenburg, was in 1559, by king Philip II. created archbiſhop, and the biſhops of Leiwarden, Deventer, Groningen, Haarlem, and Middleburg made his ſuffragans; but ſince the above, all the biſhops of Utrecht have forfeited all ſhare in the temporal government. The college of the deputies of this ſtate conſiſts of twelve members, each claſs of the ſtates ſending four; the chamber of accounts is under the direction of four commiſſioners; and the provincial court of juſtice is compoſed of a preſident, ſix ordinary and three extraordinary aſſeſſors; to the aſſembly of the States-General it ſends three deputies, that is to ſay, one from each claſs of its ſtates. The Calviniſt congregations are divided into three claſſes, namely, into thoſe of Utrecht, Amersſoort, and Rhenen, with Wyk, and the number of miniſters here, is ſeventy-nine; the ſynod is held once a year at Utrecht. The Roman Catholics have above thirty churches in this ſtate. The Lutherans, the Remonſtrants, and the Anabaptiſts, are but few.

UTRECHT, a city, and capital of a ſtate ſo called; in Latin, Ultrajectum, Trajectum Inferius, Trajectum Utricenſium, Antonina Civitas, which laſt name was given it from Antoninus, a Roman ſenator, by whom it was built, in the time of Nero; and Trajectum ad Rhenum, to diſtinguiſh it from Maeſtricht, which was called Trajectum ad Moſam. It is a handſome, large, and rich city, ſituated on the ancient Rhine. The Wiltes ruined it, and left nothing but the caſtle, which they called Wiltenbourg. In the year 718, Clotaire, king of France, rebuilt it, and firſt called it Utrecht, from the word Trecht, which ſignifies paſſage, becauſe it was the grand paſſage over the Rhine, before that river had changed its bed. It was enlarged, and ſurrounded with walls about the year 934, by Balderic de Cleves, the fifteenth biſhop. Its figure is oval, and is about 1¼ league in circumference, beſides four large fauxbourgs; but though fortified with ſome baſtions and half-moons, it is not ſtrong. The emperor Charles V. when he became maſter of the ſigniory and city of Utrecht, in the year 1529, built a château, which he called Vrebourg, or the Château of Peace; and in the year 1546, celebrated a chapter of the order of the Golden Fleece, in the cathedral church, when Maximilian king of Bohemia, and afterwards emperor, Coſmo duke of Florence, Albert duke of Bavaria, Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, and eighteen other lords, were inſtalled knights. The dôme, or the cathedral church, it is ſaid, was firſt built in the year 630, by king Dagobert I. and St. Willebrord made it an abby church, and ſoon after it became a cathedral. It was rebuilt by Adelbolde, the nineteenth biſhop, and by him conſecrated in the year 1024, in the preſence of the emperor, Henry II. the duke of Brabant, the comtes of Holland, Gueldres, Cleves, and Cuyck, and twelve biſhops. In the year 1224, it was again begun to be rebuilt by Henry de Vianen, the thirty-eighth biſhop, and finiſhed by his ſucceſſors. The height of the tower is 388 feet, and from the top, in a clear day, fifteen or ſixteen cities may be ſeen. The cathedral was at firſt dedicated to St. Thomas, afterwards to St. Martin. The church of Notre-Dame, commonly called Buur-Kerck, and Engliſh church, has a ſmall library, which contains ſome ancient manuſcripts; the other pariſhes are St. James, St. Nicholas, and St. Gertrude. It has likewiſe hoſpitals for orphans, foundlings, &c. Before the reformation it had many religious houſes. The magiſtracy is compoſed of a grand bailly, two burgomaſters, twelve echevins, a treaſurer, an intendant of buildings, a preſident, three commiſſioners of finances, and a ſenator, which are changed every year on the 12th of October, and hold their aſſemblies in the town-houſe, which is a handſome ſtructure. On the 13th of January, 1577, the troops of the States-General beſieged the Spaniards in the caſtle, and obliged them to ſurrender; the count de Boſſu, who was then in the intereſt of the Hollanders, ordered the caſtle to be razed, on the fourth of September, in the ſame year. In the year 1672, the French made themſelves maſters of it; and his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty entered it in ſtate, in the month of July, accompanied by the duke of Orleans, and the duke of Monmouth; but on the 13th of November, the duke of Luxemburg, who had been appointed governor, abandoned the city and the whole province, after having compelled them to pay 450,000 livres. The principal ſtreets are cut through with canals, two of which run through the whole city, namely, the Vaert, and the new Gracht, over which there are 35 bridges. Theſe are the principal canals of the town, and the buildings on the banks of the new Gracht are magnificent. The market-place is very large, and the centre of ſeveral handſome ſtreets. The houſes are of brick, and many of them ſtately; they have in general good cellars, which they cannot have in the ſtate of Holland, the ground there being too marſhy. Without the town there are beautiful rows of trees, to which the Engliſh have given the name of the Mall, by reaſon of their having ſome reſemblance to St. James's Park. This place was the ſeat of an archbiſhop, before it fell into the Proteſtants' hands, and had four collegiate churches, two commanderies, and ſeveral abbies, which have been all ſecularized by the States, and applied to other uſes. As it ſtands in a very healthful air, it is frequented by perſons of diſtinction, who have very fine houſes in this city. The univerſity is very famous, and attracts a great number of foreigners, among the reſt ſome Engliſh, who reſort hither for their education. It was originally only a public ſchool, founded by David of Burgundy, biſhop of Utrecht; but, in the year 1636, it was converted into an univerſity by the States. The univerſity is ſubject to the magiſtrates of the city, and has not a great many privileges to boaſt of. The ſtudents wear their ordinary dreſs, and board in private houſes in the town, for there are ſcarcely any endowed colleges in Holland. Here the ſtates of the province aſſemble to take cognizance of the affairs of the whole province. There is a public library, well ſtocked with books in all branches of learning. The town-houſe is a very noble building. The painters' hall abounds with fine pieces: they have alſo a phyſic-garden, but of no great note. The town is famous for the treaty of union, ſigned in 1579, between the Seven Provinces, which laid the foundation of the republic; as likewiſe for the treaty of peace, ſigned here in 1713, between France and the Grand Allies. Utrecht gave birth to pope Adrian VI. whoſe houſe they always ſhew to foreigners, and to the celebrated Ann Mary Schurman, ſo much admired in the laſt century for her learning: 18 miles SSE. Amſterdam. Long. 22. 32. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 6 N.—On the 12th of December, 1794, this city was taken by the French, after an obſtinate battle with the allies, in which the Britiſh guards and Heſſians ſuffered very much.

The markets are Thurſday and Friday, the latter for the ſale of woollen cloth, of which great quantities are manufactured in the town and neighbourhood: 8 miles S. Leeds, and 184 N. London.

WALA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Weſtmanland: 26 miles N. Stramſholm.

WALACHIA, a province of European Turkey, bounded on the north by Moldavia and Tranſylvania, on the eaſt by Beſſarabia, on the ſouth by Bulgaria, and on the weſt by the bannat of Temeſvar and Tranſylvania; about 280 miles from eaſt to weſt, and 150 from north to ſouth, where wideſt; but in ſome places hardly 60: by the inhabitants it is called Romulia, and by the Hungarians Havaſalfoldgye. The air is temperate, the ſoil very fruitful, particularly in grain, wine, and melons; graziery here, too, is very conſiderable; but its principal reputation is for excellent horſes. The country is watered by a conſiderable number of large and ſmall rivers, the greateſt part of which run from north to ſouth, diſcharging themſelves immediately into the Danube, or in conjunction with other rivers. The principal of theſe are the Alaut, which riſes in the mountains of Tranſylvania, and divides Walachia into two unequal parts, namely, the Weſt and Eaſt; the Jalonitz, which has alſo its ſource in the borders of Tranſylvania; and the Sereth or Strech, the boundary on the ſide of Moldavia. The Walachians, conſidered as inhabitants of the country, are deſcended from the old Roman colony ſettled here by the emperor Trajan. They profeſs the Eaſtern Greek religion; and as in writing they uſe the ſame letters with the Ruſſians, ſo they agree with them in all their religious ceremonies. The commonalty are moſt wretchedly ignorant; and even the higheſt attainments which the eccleſiaſtics themſelves aim at, ſeldom go beyond reading and ſinging well. Buchoreſt is a kind of univerſity to them, whither they go to learn a polite deportment, the elegancies of the Walachian language, and ceremonies of the church. The perſons of rank among the Walachians are ſo fond of the Italian language, that they apply themſelves to it more than their mother-tongue, and generally ſend their ſons to ſtudy at the univerſity of Padua. Great numbers of Mahometans live alſo intermixed with the Walachians. The Romans, after their deciſive victory over Decebalus, king of Dacia, made themſelves maſters of his kingdom. Trajan ſent hither ſeveral Roman colonies, who not only cultivated the land, but built them towns, which they embelliſhed with fine edifices. His ſucceſſor, however, in the empire, tranſplanted the greateſt part of them into Mæſia and Thracia, where, mingling with the Bulgarians, Thracians, Servians, and Ligurians, they came to ſpeak a new language or jargon. Theſe kingdoms, which lie on the Danube, afterwards conſtituted part of the dominions of the emperors of the Eaſt. In proceſs of time, the Walachians moved farther north, to the borders of Podolia and Ruſſia, where they applied themſelves to agriculure and the breeding of cattle. The converſion of the Bulgarians and their neighbours to Chriſtianity, was followed in the 19th century, by that of the Walachians, who embraced the Grecian doctrines. Towards the beginning of the 12th century, a numerous colony of Walachians, under the conduct of one Nigers or Negrovot, for the ſake of paſturage, religion, and other motives, quitting Burzeland, and the other parts of Tranſylvania, paſſed on towards the ſouth, and ſettled in the modern Walachia, founding the towns of Tergoviſto, Buchoreſt, Longenau, and Piteſto St. Georgi. They chooſe their own princes, whom they ſtyle waywodes or deſpots. The kings of Hungary, becoming powerful, made ſeveral attempts on the Walachians; and, in the 14th century, obliged them to pay tribute. But in the years 1391, and 1394, they were greatly haraſſed by the Turks, who, in the year 1415, alſo laid the whole country waſte with fire and ſword, compelling Dan, the waywode, to pay them an annual tribute. It was in the year 1608, before the Walachians could rid themſelves of this burden, when they put themſelves under the protection of the emperor of Germany. But the treaty of Carlowitz reſigned them up again to the Turkiſh dominion. In the beginning of the preſent century, they ſuffered various calamities by the plague, war, and the many revolutions among its princes. At the treaty of Paſſarowitz, in 1718, the weſtern part of Walachia, as far as the river Alaut, was ceded to the emperor, but loſt again in the year 1739. Walachia is governed by a waywode or prince. ſtyled alſo the hoſpodar, who is a vaſſal of the Ottoman Porte, and whoſe yearly tribute generally amounts to fifty-eight or ſixty thouſand ducats.

WALDBURG, a caſtle of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, which gives name to a county, ſituated between the Iler and the Danube. The barons of Waldburg were at firſt hereditary ſtewards of the dukes of Swabia, but in the year 1518, obtained from the elector-palatine the ſurvivorſhir of the high office of hereditary ſteward of the empire, and, for the firſt time officiated as ſuch at the diet of the empire held at Ratiſbon in the year 1594. At length this title of their office, Erbtruchſe, or Truchſeſs, became alſo their proper name. The title of count was conferred on them by Ferdinand II. in the year 1618, or rather renewed, the lord-ſteward Gebhard having long before bore the title of count, but this his deſcendants dropped. James and George, ſons to the lord-ſteward John, in the 15th century, founded the two lines of Scheer and Wolffegg, which are ſtill exiſting. The aſſeſſment of the family of Truchſeſs, in the matricula of the empire, amounts to 312 florins. The family of Truchſeſs, together with their ſervants and vaſſals, are by charters of ſeveral emperors and kings, particularly of the emperor Frederick III. in the year 1464, exempted from being tried by a foreign court: 7 miles N. Wangen, and 35 SSW. Ulm.

WALDECK, a county of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Paderborn, on the eaſt by Heſſe, and prefecturate of Fritzlar, in the electorate of Mentz, on the ſouth by Heſſe, and on the weſt by the duchy of Weſtphalia. The length is computed at 24 miles, and its breadth 20. The county abounds in grain and cattle, having alſo large woods, and the mountains in it contain lead, iron, and copper, and even ſome gold, which is eſteemed equal in value to that of Hungary. Of the gold which is gathered out of the Eder, the princes have cauſed medals to be ſtruck, and a magnificent ſideboard to be made. Some parts alſo afford marble, alabaſter, ſlate, and turf. This county contains 13 towns and a market village. The greater part of the inhabitants are Lutherans, and the reſt Calviniſts, with ſome Roman Catholics intermixed. The manufactures are coarſe cloth, barragon, callimanco, dimity, ratine, and other ſtuffs; as alſo paper, and great quantities of iron ware, for exportation. The houſe of Waldeck is very ancient, being derived from the counts of Schwalenburg. It was formerly divided into the lines of Wildung and Eiſenberg, the latter of which, in the year 1682, was created a prince of the empire; but this title became extinct in the firſt prince, George Frederick, who dying without heirs in the year 1716, the emperor conferred it on count Frederick Anthony Ulrick, of the Wildung line, but the females continue only counteſſes. The prince of Waldeck has not yet obtained a ſeat and vote in the college of princes, The matricula aſſeſſment for Waldeck is 4 horſe and 18 foot, or 120 florins per month; and to the chamber at Wetzlar this county pays 67 rixdollars 74 kruitzers. The county of Waldeck is thought to bring in above 100,000 rixdollars per annum to the prince, and that not improbably, it being one of the moſt conſiderable counties in the whole empire, and preferable even to not a few principalities. The prince's circular contingency is two companies of foot, but he generally maintains three more.

WALES (Principality of), a country conſtituting a part of Great Britain: is bounded on the north and weſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the eaſt by the Engliſh counties of Cheſter, Salop, Hereford, and Monmouth, and on the ſouth by the river Severn and the Briſtol Channel; about 150 miles from north to ſouth, and from 50 to 80 in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. The country is mountainous, but not barren, producing all the neceſſaries of life; the air is good, the cattle and ſheep are numerous, but ſmall: in the mountains are found ores of various metals, freeſtone, limeſtone, and coal. It is divided into North and South Wales, each containing ſix counties. To North Wales belong Angleſea, the counties of Caernarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery. In South Wales are the counties of Brecknock, Caermarthen, Cardigan, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor. The county of Monmouth, which formerly belonged to Wales, was detached from the principality, and annexed to England, in the reign of Henry VIII. The preſent inhabitants are deſcendants from the ancient Britons, who were driven out of England by the Saxons, and they have preſerved their ancient language; and, in many inſtances, the manners of their anceſtors. Previous to the arrival of the Britons, Wales was inhabited by people named Demetes, Ordovices, and Silures. The Britons, indignant of the Saxon yoke, found an aſylum among the mountains of Wales, and forming themſelves into different ſtates, were long governed by independent kings, till in the reign of Edward I. the laſt prince Lewellin, being vanquiſhed and ſlain in the year 1283, it was united to England: the Welch, though unable to reſiſt the ſuperior force of Edward, ſubmitted to the Engliſh dominion with extreme reluctance; and it was not till ſome ages elapſed, that the animoſity which had long ſubſiſted between the two nations was totally extinguiſhed. To accelerate that period, and render the conqueſt more ſecure, Edward had recourſe to acts of barbarous, but not ineffectual policy. Senſible that nothing contributed to keep alive the enthuſiaſm for national honour ſo much as the bards of the country, whoſe employment it was to rehearſe at all feſtivals the glorious deeds of their anceſtors, Edward ordered them to be put to death. A ſubſequent expedient practiſed by him for the purpoſe of reconciling the Welch to his government, was of a nature far more conciliating. It is ſaid, that, aſſembling the natives of the country, he promiſed to give them for their prince a Welchman by birth, and one who could ſpeak no other language. This popular addreſs being received with acclamations of joy, he inveſted in the principality his ſecond ſon, Edward, then an infant, who had been born at Caernarvon. The death of his eldeſt ſon, Alphonſo, happening ſoon after, young Edward alſo became heir of the Engliſh monarchy, and united both nations under one government. Since that time, the eldeſt ſon of the king of England has always been created prince of Wales.

WALES (New), a name given to a part of North America, ſituated to the ſouth-eaſt and ſouth-weſt of Hudſon's Bay, and divided into North and South: the former name is loſt in the more general term of Labrador. New South Wales is ſituated to the north-weſt of Canada, and extends along the ſouth borders of Hudſon's Bay 150 leagues: from Long. 85. to Long. 95. W. Greenwich. Lat. 54. to 58. N.

WALES (New South), a name given to the eaſtern part of New Holland, diſcovered by Captain Cook in the year 1770, who ſailed along the coaſt a courſe, if laid down in a ſtraight line, of no leſs than 27 degrees of latitude, amounting to near 2000 miles. New South Wales is of larger extent than any other country in the known world that does not bear the name of a continent, its ſquare ſurface being greater than that of Europe. To the ſouthward of 33° or 34° the land in general is low and level; farther northward it is hilly, but in no part can be called mountainous; and the hills and mountains, taken together, make but a ſmall part of the ſurface, in compariſon with the vallies and plains. It is, upon the whole, rather barren than fertile; yet the riſing ground is chequered by woods and lawns, and the plains and vallies are in many places covered with herbage: the ſoil, however, is frequently ſandy, and many of the lawns, or ſavannahs, are rocky and barren, eſpecially to the northward, where, in the beſt ſpots, vegetation was leſs vigorous than in the ſouthern parts of the country; the trees were not ſo tall, nor was the herbage ſo rich. The graſs in general is high, but thin, and the trees, where they are largeſt, are ſeldom leſs than forty feet aſunder; nor is the country inland, as far as could be examined, better clothed than the ſea-coaſt. The banks of the bays are covered with mangroves, to the diſtance of a mile within the beach, under which the ſoil is a rank mud, that is always overflowed by a ſpring-tide: farther in the country a bog was ſometimes met with, on which the graſs was very thick and luxuriant, and ſometimes with a vally, that was clothed with underwood: the ſoil in ſome parts ſemed to be capable of improvement, but the far greater part is ſuch as can admit of no cultivation. The coaſt, at leaſt that part of it which lies to the northward of 25° S. abounds with fine bays and harbours, where veſſels may lie in perfect ſecurity from all winds. Captain Cook ſays, " if we may judge by the appearance of the country while we were there, which was in the very height of the dry ſeaſon, it is well watered; we found innumerable ſmall brooks and ſprings, but no great rivers; theſe brooks, however, probably become large in the rainy ſeaſon. Thirſty Sound was the only place where freſh water was not to be procured for the ſhip, and even there one or two ſmall pools were found in the woods, though the face of the country was every where interſected by ſalt-creeks and mangrove land. Of trees there is no great variety. Of thoſe that could be called timber, there are but two ſorts; the largeſt is the gum tree, which grows all over the country; it has narrow leaves, not much unlike a willow, and the gum, or rather reſin, which it yields, is of a deep red, and reſembles the ſanguis draconis; poſſibly it may be the ſame, for this ſubſtance is known to be the produce of more than one plant. It is mentioned by Dampier, and is perhaps the ſame that Taſman found upon Diemen's Land, where he ſays he ſaw 'gum of the trees, and gum lac of the ground.' The other timber-tree is that which grows ſomewhat like our pines. The wood of both theſe trees is extremely hard and heavy. Beſides theſe, here are trees covered with a ſoft bark that is eaſily peeled off, and is the ſame that in the Eaſt-Indies is uſed for the caulking of ſhips. They found here the palm of three different ſorts. The firſt, which grows in great plenty to the ſouthward, has leaves that are plaited like a fan: the cabbage of theſe is ſmall, but exquiſitely ſweet; and the nuts, which it bears in great abundance, are very good food for hogs. The ſecond ſort bore a much greater reſemblance to the true cabbage-tree of the Weſt-Indies; its leaves were large and pinnated, like thoſe of the cocoa-nut; and theſe alſo produced a cabbage, which, though not ſo ſweet as the other, was much larger. The third ſort, which, like the ſecond, was found only in the northern parts, was ſeldom more than ten feet high, with ſmall pinnated leaves, reſembling thoſe of ſome kinds of fern: it bore no cabbage, but a plentiful crop of nuts, about the ſize of a large cheſnut, but rounder: we found the hulls of theſe ſcattered round the place where the Indians had made their fires, and took it for granted that they were fit to eat; thoſe, however, who made the experiment paid dear for their knowledge of the contrary; for they operated both as an emetic and cathartic with great violence. Still, however, there was no doubt but that they were eaten by the Indians; and judging that the conſtitution of the hogs might be as ſtrong as their's, though our own had proved to be ſo much inferior, we carried them to the ſtye; the hogs ate them, indeed, and for ſome time without ſuffering any inconvenience; but in about a week they were ſo much diſordered that two of them died, and the reſt were recovered with great difficulty. It is probable, however, that the poiſonous quality of theſe nuts may lie in the juice, like that of the caſſada of the Weſt Indies; and that the pulp, when dried, may be not only wholeſome but nutricious. Beſides theſe ſpecies of the palm and mangroves, there were ſeveral ſmall trees and ſhrubs altogether unknown in Europe; particularly one which produced a very poor kind of fig; another that bore what they called a plum, which it reſembled in colour, but not in ſhape, being flat on the ſides like a little cheeſe; and a third that bore a kind of apple, which, after it had been kept a few days, became eatable, and taſted like a damſon. Here is a great variety of plants to enrich the collection of a botaniſt, but very few of them are of the eſculent kind. A ſmall plant, with long, narrow, graſſy leaves, reſembling that kind of bulruſh which in England is called the cat's-tail, yields a reſin of a bright yellow colour, exactly reſembling gambooge, except that it does not ſtain; it has a ſweet ſmell, but its properties we had no opportunity to diſcover, any more than thoſe of many others with which the natives appear to be acquainted, as they have diſtinguiſhed them by names: the roots and leaves of a plant were found reſembling the coccos of the Weſt-Indies, and a kind of bean; to which may be added a ſort of parſley and purſlain, and two kinds of yams, one ſhaped like a radiſh, and the other round and covered with ſtringy fibres: both ſorts are ſmall, but ſweet; and we never could find the plants that produced them, though we often ſaw the places where they had been newly dug up; it is probable that the drought had deſtroyed the leaves, and we could not, like the Indians, diſcover the ſtalks. Of fruits, we found in the ſouthern parts of the country one reſembling a cherry, except that the ſtone was ſoft; and another not unlike a pine-apple in appearance, but of a very diſagreeable taſte, which is well known in the Eaſt Indies, and is called by the Dutch pyn-appel boomen. Of the quadrupeds the chief are the dog and kangaroo, and a ſpecies of the opoſſum. Of batts, which hold a middle place between the beaſts and the birds, we ſaw many kinds. The ſea and other water-fowl of this country are gulls, ſhaggs, ſoland geeſe, or gannets, of two ſorts; boobies, noddies, curlieus, pelicans of an enormous ſize, and many others. The land-birds are crows, parroquets, cockatoos, and other birds of the ſame kind, of exquiſite beauty; pigeons, doves, quails, buſtards, herons, cranes, hawks, and eagles. The pigeons flew in numerous flocks, ſo that, notwithſtanding their extreme ſhyneſs, our people frequently killed ten or twelve of them in a day: theſe birds are very beautiful, and creſted very differently from any we had ever ſeen before. Among the reptiles, here are ſerpents of various kinds, ſome noxious and ſome harmleſs; ſcorpions, centipedes, and lizards. The inſects are but few. The principal are the muſquito and the ant. Of the ant there are ſeveral ſorts; ſome are as green as a leaf, and live upon trees, where they build their neſts of various ſizes, between that of a man's head and his fiſt. Theſe neſts are of a very curious ſtructure; they are formed by bending down ſeveral of the leaves, each of which is as broad as a man's hand, and gluing the points of them together ſo as to form a purſe; the viſcus uſed for this purpoſe is an animal juice, which nature has enabled them to elaborate. Their method of firſt bending down the leaves, no opportunity preſented itſelf of obſerving; but thouſands were ſeen uniting all their ſtrength to hold them in this poſition, while other buſy multitudes were employed within, in applying the gluten that was to prevent their returning back. To ſatisfy ourſelves that the leaves were bent, and held down by the efforts of theſe diminutive artificers, we diſturbed them in their work, and as ſoon as they were driven from their ſtation, the leaves on which they were employed ſprung up with a force much greater than could be thought they were able to conquer by any combination of their ſtrength. But though our curioſity was gratified at their expence, the injury did not go unrevenged, for thouſands threw themſelves upon us, and gave us intolerable pain with their ſtings, eſpecially thoſe which took poſſeſſion of the necks and hair, from whence they were not eaſily driven: the ſting was ſcarcely leſs painful than that of a bee; but except it was repeated, the pain did not laſt more than a minute. Another ſort are quite black, and their operations and manner of life are not leſs extraordinary. Their habitations are the inſide of the branches of a tree, which they contrive to excavate by working out the pith almoſt to the extremity of the ſlendereſt twig; the tree at the ſame time flouriſhing, as if it had no ſuch inmate. A third kind we found neſted in the root of a plant, which grows on the bark of trees in the manner of miſtletoe, and which they had perforated for that uſe. This root is commonly as big as a large turnip, and ſometimes much bigger; when it was cut, it was found interſected by innumerable winding paſſages, all filled with theſe animals, by which, however, the vegetation of the plant did not appear to have ſuffered any injury. We never cut one of theſe roots that was not inhabited, though ſome were not bigger than a hazle-nut. The animals themſelves are very ſmall, not more than half as big as the common red ant in England. They had ſtings, but ſcarcely force enough to make them felt; they had, however, a power of tormenting in an equal, if not a greater degree; for the moment we handled the roots, they ſwarmed from innumerable holes, and running about thoſe parts of the body that were uncovered, produced a titillation more intolerable than pain, except it is increaſed to great violence. A fourth kind was likewiſe found, which were perfectly harmleſs, and almoſt exactly reſembled the white ants of the Eaſt-Indies. The architecture of theſe is ſtill more curious than that of the others. They have houſes of two ſorts; one is ſuſpended on the branches of trees, and the other erected upon the ground: thoſe upon the trees are about three or four times as big as a man's head, and are built of a brittle ſubſtance, which ſeems to conſiſt of ſmall parts of vegetables kneaded together with a glutinous matter, which their bodies probably ſupply; upon breaking this cruſt, innumerable cells, ſwarming with inhabitants, appear in a great variety of winding directions, all communicating with each other, and with ſeveral apertures that lead to other neſts upon the ſame tree; they have alſo one large avenue, or covered way, leading to the ground, and carried on under it to the other neſts or houſes that are conſtructed there. This houſe is generally at the root of a tree, but not of that upon which their other dwellings are conſtructed: it is formed like an irregular-ſided cone, and ſometimes is more than ſix feet high, and nearly as much in diameter. The ſea in this country is much more liberal of food to the inhabitants than the land; and though fiſh is not quite ſo plentiful here as they generally are in higher latitudes, yet we ſeldom hauled the ſeine without taking from fifty to two hundred weight. They are of various ſorts; but, except the mullet, and ſome of the ſhell-fiſh, none of them are known in Europe: moſt of them are palatable, and ſome are very delicious. Upon the ſhoals and reef there are incredible numbers of the fineſt green turtle, and oyſters of various kinds, particularly the rock-oyſter and pearl-oyſter, gigantic cockles, ſea cray-fiſh or lobſters, and crabs; of theſe, however, we ſaw only the ſhells. In the rivers and ſalt creeks there are alligators. The number of inhabitants in this country appears to be very ſmall in proportion to its extent. We never ſaw ſo many as 30 of them together but once, and that was at Botany Bay, men, women, and children, aſſembled upon a rock, to ſee the ſhip paſs by: when they manifeſtly formed a reſolution to engage us, they never could muſter above 14 or 15 fighting men; and we never ſaw a number of their ſheds or houſes together that could accommodate a larger party. It is true, indeed, that we ſaw only the ſea-coaſt on the eaſtern ſide; and that, between this and the weſtern ſhore, there is an immenſe tract of country, wholly unexplored: but there is great reaſon to believe that this immenſe tract is either wholly deſolate, or at leaſt ſtill more thinly inhabited than the parts we viſited. It is impoſſible that the inland country ſhould ſubſiſt inhabitants at all ſeaſons without cultivation; it is extremely improbable that the inhabitants of the coaſt ſhould be totally ignorant of arts of cultivation, which were practiſed inland; and it is equally improbable that, if they knew ſuch arts, there ſhould be no traces of them among them. It is certain that there was not ſeen one foot of ground in a ſtate of cultivation in the whole country; and therefore it may well be concluded, that where the ſea does not contribute to feed the inhabitants, the country is not inhabited. The only tribe with which Captain Cook had any intercourſe, was found where the ſhip was careened; it conſiſted of one and twenty perſons; 12 men, 7 women, 1 boy, and 1 girl; the women they never ſaw but at a diſtance; for when the men came over the river, they were always left behind. The men here, and in other places, were of a middle ſize, and in general well made, clean limbed, and remarkably vigorous, active, and nimble: their countenances were not altogether without expreſſion, and their voices were remarkably ſoft and effeminate. Their ſkins were ſo uniformly covered with dirt, that it was very difficult to aſcertain their true colour; we made ſeveral attempts, by wetting our fingers, and rubbing it to remove the incruſtation, but with very little effect. With the dirt they appear nearly as black as a negroe, and according to our beſt diſcoveries the ſkin itſelf is of the colour of wood ſoot, or what is commonly called a chocolate-colour. Their features are far from being diſagreeable, their noſes are not flat, nor are their lips thick; their teeth are white and even, and their hair naturally long and black, it is however univerſally cropped ſhort; in general it is ſtraight, but ſometimes it has a ſlight curl; we ſaw none that was not matted and filthy, though without oil or greaſe, and to our great aſtoniſhment free from lice. Their beards were of the ſame colour with their hair, buſhy and thick: they are not however ſuffered to grow long. A man whom we had ſeen one day with his beard ſomewhat longer than his companions, we ſaw the next with it ſomewhat ſhorter, and upon examination found the ends of the hairs burnt; from this incident, and our having never ſeen any ſharp inſtrument among them, we concluded that both the hair and the beard were kept ſhort by ſinging them. Both ſexes go ſtark naked, and ſeem to have no more ſenſe of indecency in diſcovering the whole body, than we have in diſcovering our hands and face. Their principal ornament is a bone which they thruſt through the cartilage that divides the noſtrils from each other: what perverſion of taſte could make them think this a decoration, or what could prompt them, before they had worn it or ſeen it worn, to ſuffer the pain and inconvenience that muſt of neceſſity attend it, is perhaps beyond the power of human ſagacity to determine: as this bone is as thick as a man's finger, and between five and ſix inches long, it reaches quite acroſs the face, and ſo effectually ſtops up both noſtrils, that they are forced to keep their mouths wide open for breath, and ſnuffle ſo when they attempt to ſpeak, that they are ſcarcely intelligible even to each other: Captain Cook's ſeamen, with ſome humour, called it their ſprit ſail-yard; and indeed it had ſo ludicrous an appearance, that till we were uſed to it, we found it difficult to refrain from laughter. Beſides this noſe-jewel, they had necklaces made of ſhells, very neatly cut and ſtrung together; bracelets of ſmall cord wound two or three times about the upper part of their arm, and a ſtring of plaited human hair, about as thick as a thread of yarn, tied round their waiſt; beſides theſe ſome of them had gorgets of ſhells hanging round the neck, ſo as to reach acroſs the breaſt. But though theſe people wear no clothes, their bodies have a covering beſides the dirt, for they paint them both white and red, the red is commonly laid on in broad patches upon the ſhoulders and breaſt; and the white in ſtripes, ſome narrow, and ſome broad; the narrow were drawn over the limbs, and the broad over the body, not without ſome degree of taſte. The white was alſo laid on in ſmall patches upon the face, and drawn in a circle round each eye; the red ſeemed to be ochre, but what the white was, we could not diſcover; it was cloſe grained, ſaponaceous to the touch, and almoſt as heavy as white-lead; poſſibly it might be a kind of ſteatites, but to their great regret they could not procure a bit of it to examine. They have holes in their ears, but we never ſaw any thing worn in them. Upon ſuch ornaments as they had, they ſet ſo great a value, that they would never part with the leaſt article for any thing we could offer; which was the more extraordinary, as the beads and ribbons were ornaments of the ſame kind, but more regular and of more ſhowy materials. They had indeed no idea of traffic, nor could we communicate any to them: they received the things that were given to them, but never appeared to underſtand the ſigns when a return was required. The ſame indifference which prevented them from buying what was offered, prevented them alſo from attempting to ſteal; if they had coveted more, they would have been leſs honeſt; for when we refuſed to give them a turtle, they were enraged, and attempted to take it by force, having nothing elſe upon which they ſet the leaſt value; for many of the things that were given them, were found left negligently about in the woods, like the playthings of children, which pleaſe only while they are new. Upon their bodies were ſeen no marks of diſeaſe or ſores, but large ſcars in irregular lines, which appear to be the remains of the wounds which they had inflicted on themſelves with ſome blunt inſtrument, and which we underſtood by ſigns to have been memorials of grief for the dead. They appeared to have no fixed habitations, for we ſaw nothing like a town or village in the whole country. Their houſes, if houſes they may be called, ſeemed to be formed with leſs art and induſtry than any we had ſeen, except the wretched hovels at Terra del Fuego, and in ſome reſpects they are inferior even to them. At Botany Bay, where they were beſt, they were juſt high enough for a man to ſit upright in, but not large enough for him to extend himſelf in his whole length in any direction: they are built with pliable rods about as thick as a man's finger, in the form of an oven, by ſticking the ends into the ground, and then covering them with palm-leaves, and broad pieces of bark; the door is nothing but a large hole at one end, oppoſite to which the fire is made, as we perceived by the aſhes. The only furniture belonging to theſe houſes is a kind of oblong veſſel, made of bark, by a ſimple contrivance of tying up the ends with a withy, which not being cut off, ſerves for a handle; theſe we imagined were uſed as buckets to fetch water from the ſpring, which we ſuppoſed to be at a conſiderable diſtance. They have however a ſmall bag, about the ſize of a moderate cabbage net, which is made by laying threads, loop within loop, ſomewhat in the manner of netting, uſed by our ladies to make purſes. Their fiſh-hooks are very neatly made, and ſome of them are exceedingly ſmall. For ſtriking turtle, they have a peg of wood, which is about a foot long, and very well bearded. Their lines are made from the thickneſs of a half-inch rope to the fineneſs of a hair, and are made of ſome vegetable ſubſtance, but what in particular we had no opportunity to learn. Their food is chiefly fiſh, though they ſometimes contrive to kill the kangaroo, and even birds of various kinds, notwithſtanding they are ſo ſhy that we found it difficult to get within reach of them with a fowling-piece. The only vegetable that can be conſidered as an article of food, is the yam; yet doubtleſs they eat the ſeveral fruits which have been mentioned among other productions of the country; and indeed we ſaw the ſhells and hulls of ſeveral of them lying about the places where they had kindled their fire. They produce fire with great facility, and ſpread it in a wonderful manner. To produce it, they take two pieces of dry ſoft wood, one is a ſtick about eight or nine inches long, the other piece is flat; the ſtick they ſhape into an obtuſe point at one end, and preſſing it upon the other, turn it nimbly by holding it between both their hands, as we do a chocolate-mill, often ſhifting their hands up, and moving them down upon it, to increaſe the preſſure as much as poſſible. By this method they get fire in leſs than two minutes, and from the ſmalleſt ſpark they increaſe it with great ſpeed and dexterity. The weapons of theſe people are ſpears or lances, and theſe are of different kinds: ſome that we ſaw upon the ſouthern part of the coaſt had four prongs, pointed with bone, and barbed, and the others with a ſingle point. The canoes of New Holland are as mean and rude as the houſes. Thoſe on the ſouthern part of the coaſt are nothing more than a piece of bark, about twelve feet long, tied together at the ends, and kept open in the middle by ſmall bows of wood: yet, in a veſſel of this conſtruction we once ſaw three people. In ſhallow water they are ſet forward by a pole, and in deeper by paddles, about 18 inches long, one of which the boatman holds in each hand, Mean as they are, they have many conveniencies; they draw but little water, and they are very light, ſo that they go upon mud banks to pick up ſhell-fiſh, the moſt important uſe to which they can be applied, better, perhaps, than veſſels of any other conſtruction. We obſerved, that in the middle of theſe canoes there was a heap of ſea-weed, and upon that a ſmall fire; probably that the fiſh may be broiled, and eaten the moment it is caught. The canoes that we ſaw when we advanced farther to the northward, are not made of bark, but of the trunk of a tree hollowed, perhaps, by fire. They are about 14 feet long, and being very narrow, are fitted with an outrigger to prevent their overſetting. Theſe are worked with paddles, that are ſo large as to require both hands to manage one of them. The only tools among them are an adze, wretchedly made of ſtone, ſome ſmall pieces of the ſame ſubſtance in form of a wedge, a wooden mallet, and ſome ſhells and fragments of coral. The utmoſt freight of theſe canoes is four people, and if more at any time wanted to come over the river, one of thoſe who came firſt was obliged to go back for the reſt. From latitude 32 deg. and ſomewhat higher, down to Sandy Cape, in latitude 24 deg. 46 min. we conſtantly found a current ſetting to the ſouthward, at the rate of about 10 or 15 miles a day, being more or leſs, according to our diſtance from the land, for it always ran with more force in ſhore than in the offing." Captain Cook obſerved only one high tide in 24 hours, which happened in the night. The difference between the perpendicular riſe of the water in the day and the night, when there is a ſpring-tide, is no leſs than three feet, which where the tides are ſo inconſiderable as they are here, is a great proportion of the whole difference between high and low water. Lat. 11. to 40. WALHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, in Thuringia, formerly an imperial palatine town: 3 miles WSW. Sangerhauſen.

WALHAUSEN, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Lucerne: 10 miles W. Lucerne.

WALHEIM, a town of Brabant. 4 miles N. Gemblours.

WALHOF, a town of the duchy of Courland. In the year 1626, the Poles were defeated near this town by Guſtavus, king of Sweden: 34 miles E. Mittaw.

WALHORN, a town of the duchy of Limburg: 3 leagues S. Aix-la-Chapelle.

WALILABO, a river of the iſland of St. Vincent, which runs into the ſea, 1 mile N. from Prince's Bay.

WALINCOURT, a town of France, in the department of the North, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of Cambray: 2½ leagues SSE. Cambray, and 2 NE. Le Caſtelet.

WALKENRIED, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and lordſhip of Clettenberg, with an abby, founded in the year 1127, by Adelheida, conſort to Volkmar, count of Klettenberg, and counteſs of Lotera. The doctrine of Luther was introduced in the year 1546; at the peace of Weſtphalia the abby was aſſigned to the duke of Brunſwick: 8 miles NW. Nordhauſen, and 44 NNW. Erfurt.

WALKENSEE, a town of Germany, in the circle and duchy of Bavaria, ſituated by the ſide of a lake of the ſame name: 18 miles SSE. Weilhaim.

WALKERTON, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia, on the Mattapony: 30 miles NE. Richmond.

WALKERSPACH, a river of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, which riſes north-weſt of a place of the ſame name, and runs into the Rems, in the duchy of Wurtemberg.

WALLE, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Verden: 4 miles N. Verden.

WALLEBERGA, a town of Sweden, in the province of Schonen: 38 miles S. Chriſtianſtadt

WALLENBURG, or Walenburg, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Bâle, and capital of a bailiwick: 12 miles S. Bâle, and 15 NNE. Soleure.

WALLENSEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Calenberg: 15 miles SE. Hameln.

WALLENSTADT, a town of Swiſſerland, near the eaſt end of Wallenſtadt Lake, in the county of Sargans, and principal place of a bailiwick. This place has a Schultheiſe, and council of its own; the firſt of whom is nominated by the landvogt out of three Burghers, preſented for his approbation. It is a great thoroughfare for goods to and from Italy. It is the place likewiſe where the Switzers and Griſons hold their conciliatory meetings on all claims made by either party: 37 miles ESE. Zurich, and 8 W. Sargans.

WALLACETOWN, a town of Scotland, in the county of Ayr, founded above 35 years ſince, and now containing about 260 families: 1 mile NE. from Ayr.

WALLENSTADT, a lake of Swiſſerland, ſurrounded with mountains and ſharp rocks, which render the navigation dangerous: 9 miles long, and 2 wide: 9 miles S. Utznach.

WALLERN, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, on the Inn: 4 miles S. Efferding.

WALLER SEE, a lake of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and archbiſhopric of Salzburg, of an oval form; 4 miles long, and 2 broad where wideſt: 4 miles N. Salzburg.

WALLERSTEIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, with a caſtle belonging to the counts of Oettingen, called Oettingen Wallerſtein: 4 miles N. Nordlingen, and 6 SW. Oettingen.

WALLETZ SEE, a lake of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Ucker Mark of Brandenburg: 1 mile W. New Angermunde.

WALLEY, or Wallia, a town of Africa, with an European factory, in the kingdom of Yani.

WALLINGFORD, a town of England, in the county of Berks, ſituated on the ſide of the Thames, a place of conſiderable note in the time of the Saxons and Danes; by the latter of whom it is ſaid to have been deſtroyed in the beginning of the eleventh century. In the reign of Edward the Confeſſor, it was counted a borough, and had a caſtle. A peace was concluded between Stephen, and prince, afterwards king Henry, at this place. There were formerly 12 churches, though three were only remaining at the time of Richard II. Here are two markets weekly, on Tueſday and Friday. The principal trade is making of malt. It is ſeparated from Oxfordſhire only by the river, over which is a bridge 300 yards in length. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 12 miles SSE. Oxford, and 46 W. London.

WALLIS'S BAY, a bay, or harbour, in the Straits of Magellan: 2 leagues WSW. from Cape Shutup.

WALLIS'S ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean. Long. 177. W. Greenwich. Lat. 13. 18. S.

WALLIS'S ISLANDS, two ſmall iſlands in the South Pacific Ocean, near the north coaſt of New Holland, diſcovered, and ſo named, by captain Cook: 2 miles NW. Poſſeſſion Iſland.

WALLKILL, a town of the United States of America, in New York: 90 miles N. New York.

WALLOE, or Valloe, a town of Denmark, in the iſland of Zealand: 3 miles S. Kioge.

WALLOP'S ISLAND, an iſland of the Atlantic, on the eaſt coaſt of Virginia. Long. 75. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 37. 48. N.

WALLSEY, one of the Shetland Iſlands, on the North Atlantic Ocean, ſituated near the eaſt coaſt of Shetland; about 6 miles in length, and 3 in breadth. Long. 2. 8. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 60. 35. N.

WALMIRSTADT, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Magdeburg, on the Ohra: 10 miles N. Magdeburg.

WALNEY, a narrow iſland in the Iriſh Sea, ſeparated from the coaſt of the county of Lancaſter, by a narrow channel; about 9 miles in length, but hardly one in breadth. It has two or three ſmall villages and a chapel. The ſouth end is about 16 miles WNW. from the mouth of the Lune.

WALO, a town of Sweden, in the province of Upland: 30 miles NE. Upſal.

WALPACK, a town of the United States of America, in Jerſey: 25 miles WNW. Morriſtown.

WALPERSDORFF, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria, on the Traſen: 4 miles N. St. Polten.

WALPING SEE, a lake of Pruſſia, in the province of Ermeland; 4 miles SW. Allenſtein.

WALPIT, a town of Flanders: 3 miles NNE. Courtray.

WALPO, or Walpon, a town of Sclavonia, which gives name to a county, ſituated on a river which runs into the Drave, defended by an ancient caſtle. In the year 1543, it was taken by the Turks, who placed in it a garriſon of 1000 men. In the year 1687, it was attacked by the Imperialiſts, without ſucceſs, but ſurrendered to general Dunewal a few days after the battle of Mohacs, in the ſame year: 20 miles NW. Eſzek.

WARSAW, a city of Poland, and capital of the palatinate of Maſovia, ſituated on the Viſtula, almoſt in the centre of the kingdom. It is ſurrounded with a moat and double wall, and conſiſts of Old and New Town, and two ſuburbs, Kraga and Praga. The general diets of Poland were uſually held here, as well as the provincial aſſembly, and court of judicature. Here are ſeveral elegant ſtone buildings and palaces, a great number of beautiful churches and convents, an hoſpital, and an arſenal. King Sigiſmund III. was the firſt who made this city the royal reſidence, and his ſucceſſors have reſided here ever ſince. In the year 1569, in order to gratify the Lithuanians, the diet was removed to Warſaw. In the year 1655, this city had a Swediſh garriſon, who brought hither conſiderable booty from ſeveral parts of Poland ; and a great number of military and civil officers, with ſome ladies of diſtinction of that nation, reſided here. But the Poles laid ſiege to it in the year 1656, and, after a moſt vigorous defence, obliged the town to ſurrender. By the articles of capitulation, the Swedes were permitted to leave the place ; but the beſt part of the plunder they had amaſſed together, fell into the hands of the Poles. However, Charles Guſtavus approaching with an army to the relief of the town, king John Caſimir marched againſt him, and a battle was fought near the ſuburb of Praga, which laſted three days. At laſt the Poles were obliged to retreat, leaving behind them their baggage and artillery, upon which the Swedes placed a ſmall garriſon in the town, and deſtroyed the fortifications. In the year 1702, Charles XII. of Sweden, made himſelf maſter of Warſaw, which happened to be then without a garriſon, and fixed his head-quarters at Praga. In the month of June, 1794, the king of Pruſſia laid ſiege to Warſaw; but on a rumour of diſturbances in his own dominions, his forces were, after a fruitleſs attempt for two months, withdrawn. The Ruſſians afterwards ſummoned Warſaw to ſurrender, and on being refuſed, after the junction of the different corps under Ferſen, Denfeld, Deniſow, and Suwarrow, they proceeded, on the 4th of November, to attack the ſuburbs of Praga. In the mean time, the generals, Madalinſki and Dambrowſki, threw themſelves into Warſaw, and prepared for reſiſtance. The ſuburb of Praga was defended by more than a hundred pieces of cannon, diſpoſed upon 33 batteries. Little intimidated by ſo formidable a force, the ferocious Suwarrow commanded his ſoldiers to mount to the aſſault in the ſame manner they had done at Iſmael, by climbing over the dead and wounded bodies of their comrades, as well as of their enemies. His farther commands were, that they ſhould fight only with the ſabre and bayonet. The Ruſſians ſprung to the charge with almoſt inconceivable impetuoſity; they eagerly began to climb the works, and the ſix Ruſſian columns, by ſingular good fortune, preſented themſelves at the ſame moment before the lines of Praga. Thus ſurrounded, the Poliſh generals found themſelves unable to oppoſe with 10,000 ſoldiers, which was the whole of their force, the united attack of 50,000 men: and, to add to their diſtreſs, the fire which they immediately commenced, from the darkneſs of the night, was ſo ill directed, as to paſs over the heads of the aſſailants. The cry raiſed by the ſucceſsful columns penetrated to the entrenchments on the other ſide of the Viſtula, and added to the conſternation of the Poles engaged with the other part of the Ruſſian force; and they endeavoured to find ſafety by retiring into Warſaw, over a bridge. In their retreat they were met by another body of Ruſſians, and a dreadful carnage enſued, in which a great part of the garriſon of Praga was miſerably ſlaughtered. After a ſevere conflict of eight hours, the reſiſtance on the part of the Poles ceaſed; but the maſſacre laſted for two hours longer, and the pillage laſted till noon on the following day. Five thouſand Poles were computed to have been ſlain in the aſſault, the remainder were either impriſoned or diſperſed. The citizens were compelled to lay down their arms, and their houſes were plundered by the mercileſs Ruſſians; who, after the battle had ceaſed nearly ten hours, about nine o'clock at night ſet fire to the town, and again began to maſſacre the inhabitants; 9000 perſons, unarmed men, defenceleſs women, and harmleſs infants, periſhed either in the flames or by the ſword, and nearly the whole of the ſuburb was reduced to aſhes. In the whole of this ſiege, it is computed that not leſs than 30,000 of the Poles were inhumanly put to death. It has been ſince given up to Pruſſia: 100 miles S. Konigſberg, and 152 SE. Dantzick.

WARTA, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Neiſſe: 5 miles E. Neiſſe.

WARTA, a river of Poland, which riſes in the palatinate of Cracow, and runs into the Oder at Cuſtrin, in the marquiſate of Brandenburg.

WARTBERG, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 7 miles NE. Steyregg.

WARTBURG, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Soleure: 16 miles NE. Soleure.

WARTEURG, or Wartenburg, a caſtle of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and principality of Eiſenach, in which Martin Luther was impriſoned eleven months, near Eiſenach.

WARTENBERG, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Boleſlaw: 4 miles NE. Nimes.

WARTENBERG, a lordſhip of Sileſia, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and ſurrounded by the principality of Oels, to which it once belonged, but was erected into a particular lordſhip in the year 1490; it has frequently changed proprietors, and lately belonged to the duke of Courland.

WARTENBERG, a town of Germany, in Lower Bavaria, on the Strong: 4 miles SE. Moſpurg, and 24 NE. Munich.

WARTENBERG, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a lordſhip of the ſame name, containing ſcarcely above 100 houſes. It was formerly much larger; but, in the year 1444, 580 houſes were deſtroyed by fire. The circle was afterwards contracted, and the town ſurrounded with a rampart, wall, and moat. The Roman Catholics, the Lutherans, and the Calviniſts, have each a place of worſhip: 14 miles NE. Oels, and 28 NNE. Brieg.

WARTENBURG, a caſtle of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which gives name to a county, the lands of which are not united together, but lie in detached parts. It was made an imperial county in the year 1707. The Roman month is ſeven florins, and the tax to the imperial chamber 18 rixdollars 70 kruitzers: the caſtle is ſituated 6 miles NE. Lautern.

WARTENBURG, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 1 mile NW. Voglabruck.

WARTENBURG, a town of Pruſſia, in the province of Ermeland: 54 miles S. Konigſberg, and 52 E. Elbing.

WARTHEBERG, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 13 miles SW. Steyr.

WARTHA, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Munſterberg, on the Neiſſe: 6 miles NE. Glatz, and 13 WSW. Munſterberg.

WARTENBERG, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Glogau: 18 miles NW. Gros Glogau, and 10 SE. Grunberg.

WARWICK, a town of England, in the county of Warwick, ſituated on the Avon, called by the Britons, Caer Guarvic and Caer Leon; all the ways leading to it, from the four cardinal points, are cut through a rock of free ſtone, on which it ſtands. The Romans had a fort here, which the Picts and Scots demoliſhed; and when repaired by Caractacus at the head of the Silures, it was taken and garriſoned by Oſtorius, after which it was again ruined; but Conſtantius, father of Uther Pendragon, rebuilt it. After this it ſuffered very much from the Saxons and Danes; but, in the year 911, Ethelfleda, a noble lady of the Mercians, reſtored it to the flouriſhing ſtate in which it was found by the Normans. That it was fortified with walls and a ditch, is manifeſt. It ſent members to parliament from the firſt; it is governed by a mayor, recorder, twelve aldermen, &c. On the 5th of September, 1694, this town was almoſt burned down, by an accidental fire, to the damage of near 100,000l. It was rebuilt with free-ſtone, dug on the ſpot. In its rocks are alſo made its wells and cellars, and the deſcent from it every way always keeps it clean. Its ſtreets, which are ſpacious and regular, all meet in the centre of the town, which is ſerved with water by pipes, from ſprings half a mile off. Though it is populous, it has but two pariſh churches; it had once ſix, and as many monaſteries. Here is a ſtrong caſtle, formerly the ſeat of the earls of Warwick. The rock it ſtands on is forty feet higher than the Avon, but on the north ſide it is even with the town. The markets are on Wedneſday and Saturday: 10 miles SSW. Coventry, and 93 NNW. London.

WARWICK, a town of the United States of America, in Rhode Iſland: 7 miles S. Providence.

WARWICK, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia: 6 miles S. Richmond.

WARWICK, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia, 65 miles ESE. Richmond. Long. 76. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 37. 8. N.

WARWICKSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north-eaſt by Leiceſterſhire, on the eaſt by Northamptonſhire, on the ſouth by Oxfordſhire and Glouceſterſhire, on the weſt by Worceſterſhire, and on the north-weſt by Staffordſhire: 50 miles in length, from north to ſouth, and 35 where wideſt, from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into five hundreds, which contain one city (Coventry), 13 towns and 160 pariſhes. It is ſituated near the centre of England; the air is healthy and mild; and ſome parts are eſteemed the moſt elevated in the kingdom. The ſoil is various; towards the ſouth-weſt, it is chiefly a fine red loam, with ſome ſand; and in ſome pariſhes a ſtiff clay. The ſouth-eaſt, bordering on Oxfordſhire and Northamptonſhire, conſiſts of a good ſtrong clay, with ſome rich paſtures, and ſome gravel. The north-eaſt contains good ſtrong clay and marl. To the north-weſt, the ſoil is marl and clay; coal-mines are found towards the north; and lime-ſtones in various parts. Mr. Wedge, in his view of the agriculture of this county, eſtimates the whole at 618,000 acres, of which but one-fourth, 154,530 acres, are conſtantly under a ſucceſſive round of tillage, and graſs ſeeds of different kinds. In every courſe of tillage, conſiſting of two, three, or four crops, a ſummer fallow for turnips or wheat, well manured, is generally made; of which 154,530 acres, about one-ſixth, 25,700 acres, may be every year wheat; about 30,000 acres every year fallow; of which 30,000 acres, about 15,000 acres may be turnips and vetches; about 41,500 acres every year barley, oats, beans, &c. and the remaining 57,330 acres of ſeeds, the greater part of which are grazed with cattle and ſheep; perhaps 45,000 acres grazed, and the remainder mowed. The remaining 463,470 acres, he ſuppoſes to conſiſt of gardens, meadows, paſture, wood, water, open fields, waſte lands, and roads. Of gardens (to about 24,000 houſes) about 4000 acres; of meadows, 82,000 acres; of paſture and feeding-land 150,000 acres; of woods, canals, and rivers, &c. 50,000 acres; of open field land 57,000 acres; and of waſte lands and roads 120,470 acres. Commerce and manufactures have been carried on to a great extent in this diſtrict; the toy and hardware trade, &c. of Birmingham and its vicinity; and the ribbon and tammy trade, &c. of Coventry and its neighbourhood, are well known. The canals that paſs through this county are, one from the Wedneſbury and Dudley coal and lime works to Birmingham, and from thence to Fazely and Fradley-Heath, to join the Staffordſhire grand trunk, from Fazeley to Atherſtone, Bedworth, and Coventry; one extending from that at Longford to Braunſton and Oxford; one from Birmingham to Worceſter; one branching out of the Worceſter, one way to Dudley, &c. and the other way to Stratford on Avon; and one from Birmingham to Warwick. There are large woods and much timber in the county of Warwick, particularly in what was formerly called the Foreſt of Arden, extending through a large portion of the middle part of it, which conſiſts of almoſt all the different kinds of foreſt-trees, but more eſpecially of oak. The principal rivers are the Avon and the Tame. The towns are Warwick, Alceſter, Atherſton, Birmingham, Coleſhill, Henley, Kineton, Nuneaton, Poleſworth, Rugby, Southam, Stratford upon Avon, and Sutton Colefield. Six members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. by the county, the city of Coventry, and the town of Warwick, two each. Warwick is the county town.

WASHINGTON, a town of North America, in Georgia, and county of Wilkes. 1½ mile from this town, is a medicinal ſpring, which riſes from a hollow tree, the inſide of which is covered with a coat of nitre, an inch thick; and the leaves around the ſprings are incruſted with a ſubſtance as white as ſnow. As the town has excellent accommodations, and is ſituated in a fine healthy part of the ſtate, it is thought that it will prove a pleaſant and ſalutary place of reſort for invalids; the ſpring having been found very beneficial in rheumatic caſes, and is ſaid to be ſo in all diſorders ariſing from humours in the blood: 13 miles SW. Peterſburg. Long. 82. 36. W. Greenwich. Lat. 83. 47. N.

WASHINGTON, a town of the United States of America, in Kentucky, on the Ohio: 66 miles ENE. Frankfort.

WASHINGTON, a city of North America, now building for the metropolis of the United States. It is ſeated at the junction of the rivers Potomac and the Eaſtern Branch, extending about four miles up each, including a tract of territory ſcarcely to be exceeded, in point of convenience, ſalubrity, and beauty, by any in the world. This territory, which is called Columbia, lies partly in the ſtate of Virginia, and partly in that of Maryland, and was ceded by thoſe two ſtates to the United States of America, and by them eſtabliſhed to be the ſeat of government, after the year 1800. The plan combines not only convenience, regularity, elegance of proſpect, and a free circulation of air, but every thing grand and beautiful that can be introduced into a city. It is divided into ſquares or grand diviſions, by ſtreets running due N. and S. and E. and W. which form the groundwork of the plan. However, from the capitol, the preſident's houſe, and ſome of the important areas in the city, run diagonal ſtreets, from one material object to another, which not only produce a variety of fine proſpects, but remove the inſipid ſameneſs which renders ſome other great cities unpleaſing. They were deviſed to connect the ſeparate and moſt diſtant objects with the principal, and to preſerve through the whole a reciprocity of ſight. Theſe great leading ſtreets are all 160 feet wide, including a pavement of 10 feet, and a gravel walk of 30 feet planted with trees on each ſide, which will leave 80 feet of paved ſtreet for carriages. The reſt of the ſtreets are, in general, 110 feet wide, with a few only 90 feet, except North, South, and Eaſt Capitol Streets, which are 160 feet. The diagonal ſtreets are named after the reſpective ſtates compoſing the Union, while thoſe running N. and S. are, from the capitol eaſtward, named Eaſt Firſt Street, Eaſt Second Street, &c. and thoſe W. of it are, in the ſame manner, called Weſt Firſt Street, Weſt Second Street, &c. Thoſe running E. and W. are from the capitol northward named North A Street, North B Street, &c. and thoſe S. of it are called South A Street, South B Street, &c. The ſquares or diviſions of the city, amount to 1150. The rectangular ſquares generally contain from 3 to 6 acres, and are divided into lots of from 40 to 80 feet in front, and their depth, from about 110 to 300 feet, according to the ſize of the ſquare. The irregular diviſions produced by the diagonal ſtreets are ſome of them ſmall, but generally in valuable ſituations. Their acute points are all to be cut off at 40 feet, ſo that no houſe in the city will have an acute corner. All the houſes muſt be of brick or ſtone. The area for the capitol (or houſe for the legiſlative bodies) is ſituated upon the moſt beautiful eminence in the city, about a mile from the Eaſtern Branch, and not much more from the Potomac, commanding a full view of the city, as well as a conſiderable extent of the country around. The preſident's houſe will ſtand upon a riſing ground, not far from the banks of the Potomac, affording a fine water proſpect, with a view of the capitol, and ſome other material parts of the city. Due S. from the preſident's houſe, and due W. from the capitol, run two great pleaſure-parks or malls, which interſect and terminate upon the banks of the Potomac, and are to be ornamented at the ſides by a variety of elegant buildings, houſes for foreign miniſters, &c. Interſperſed through the city, where the moſt material ſtreets croſs each other, are a variety of open areas, formed in various regular figures, which in great cities are extremely uſeful and ornamental. Fifteen of the beſt of theſe areas are to be appropriated to the different ſtates compoſing the Union; not only to bear their reſpective names, but as proper places for them to erect ſtatues, obeliſks, or columns, to the memory of their favourite eminent men; for theſe infant republicans are not yet clear of the old ariſtocratic bagatelleries. Upon a ſmall eminence, where a line due W. from the capitol, and due S. from the preſident's houſe, would interſect, is to be erected an equeſtrian ſtatue of general Waſhington, late preſident of the United States. Places are marked out for other public buildings; as a marine hoſpital. with its gardens; a general exchange, and its public walks; a city-hall, churches, colleges, market-houſes, theatres, &c. The preſident of the United States, in locating the ſeat of the city, prevailed upon the proprietors of the ſoil to cede a certain portion of the lots in every ſituation, to be ſold by his direction, and the proceeds to be ſolely applied to the public buildings, and other works of public utility within the city. This grant will produce about 15,000 lots, and will be ſufficient, not only to erect the public buildings, but to dig a canal, conduct water through the city, and to ſweep and light the ſtreets, which will ſave a heavy tax that ariſes in other cities, and conſequently render the lots conſiderably more valuable. The eaſtern branch of the Potomac is one of the ſafeſt and moſt commodious harbours in America, being ſufficiently deep for the largeſt ſhips, for about four miles above its mouth; while the channel lies cloſe along the edge of the city, and is abundantly capacious. This river contains 30 and 35 feet to near the upper end of the city, where it is 18 and 20 feet deep. The city, being ſituated upon the great poſt road, exactly equidiſtant from the northern and ſouthern extremities of the Union, and nearly ſo from the Atlantic Ocean to the river Ohio, upon the beſt navigation, and in the midſt of the richeſt commercial territory in America, commanding the moſt extenſive internal reſources, is by far the moſt eligible ſituation for the reſidence of congreſs; and it is now preſſing forward, by the public-ſpirited enterpriſe, not only of the people of the United States, but alſo of foreigners. The inland navigation of the Potomac is ſo far advanced, that craft loaded with produce now come down that river and its ſeveral branches; from upwards of 180 miles to the great falls, which are within 14 miles of the city; and by the canals at the great and little falls, with their locks, the navigation becomes entirely opened between tide water and the head branches of the Potomac, which will produce a communication by water between the city of Waſhington and the interior parts of Virginia and Maryland, by means of the Potomac, the Shannandoah, the South Branch, Opecan, Cape Capon, Patterſon's Creek, Conoochegue, and Monocaſy, for upwards of 200 miles, through one of the moſt healthy, pleaſant, and fertile regions in America, producing, in vaſt abundance, tobacco, of ſuperior quality, hemp, Indian corn, wheat, and other ſmall grain, with fruit and vegetables peculiar to America, in vaſt abundance. The lands upon the Potomac, above the city of Waſhington, all around it, and for ſixty miles below, are high and dry, abounding with innumerable ſprings of excellent water, and well covered with large timber of various kinds. A few miles below the city, upon the banks of the Potomac, are inexhauſtible mountains of excellent freeſtone, of the white and red Portland kinds, of which the public edifices in the city are now building. Above the city alſo upon the banks of the river are immenſe quantities of excellent coal, limeſtone, and marble, with blue ſlate of the beſt quality. The Tyber, which is the principal ſtream that paſſes through the city, is to be collected in a grand reſervoir, beſide the capitol, whence it will be carried in pipes to different parts of the city; while its ſurplus water will fall down in beautiful caſcades, through the public gardens weſt of the capitol, into a canal. The plan of this city was formed by a Major L'Enfant: 100 miles SW. Philadelphia. Long. 77. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 38. 57. N.

WATCHET, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet, on the Briſtol channel, containing about 140 houſes. It was formerly a place of conſiderable trade, and there was a large herring fiſhery; but now very few veſſels belong to the port, and thoſe are employed in the freightage of coal, kelp, alabaſter, and limeſtone. In the time of queen Elizabeth, the harbour was cleaned out, and a pier built at the expence of the Wyndham family and the Luttrels, at that time joint lords of the manor. This pier was, in the beginning of the preſent century, repaired by the care of Sir William Wyndham, and a duty granted, by two acts of Parliament, on all goods imported here, has been applied to making good the expence of its farther reparations. The coaſt is rocky, and the clifts, two miles weſtward from the town, abound with very fine alabaſter; and great plenty of the Lichen-marinus, ſea-liverwort, or laver, is gathered on them at low water, by the inhabitants, and ſent to diſtant parts of the country. A market is held here on Saturday: 20 miles NW. Taunton, and 153 W. London. Lat. 51. 7. N.

WATEEHOO, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, about ſix miles long, and four broad, diſcovered by Captain Cook in the year 1777, it is a beautiful ſpot, with the ſurface varied by hills and plains, and covered with verdure. Some gentlemen, who landed from captain Cook's company, found the ſoil where they paſſed the day to be light and ſandy. But farther up the country, where a different ſort perhaps prevails, was ſeen from the ſhip, by the help of glaſſes, a reddiſh caſt upon the riſing grounds. There the inhabitants have their houſes; for they could perceive two or three which were long and ſpacious. It appears that Wateehoo can be of little uſe to any ſhip that wants refreſhment, unleſs in a caſe of the moſt abſolute neceſſity. The natives, knowing now the value of ſome of our commodities, might be induced to bring off fruits and hogs, to a ſhip ſtanding off and on, or to boats lying off the reef. It is doubtful, however, if any freſh water could be procured. For, though ſome was brought in cocoa-nut ſhells to the gentlemen, they were told, that it was at a conſiderable diſtance, and probably, it is only to be met with in ſome ſtagnant pool, as no running ſtream was any where ſeen. The manners of theſe iſlanders, their method of treating ſtrangers, and their general habits of life, appear to be much like thoſe that prevail at Otaheite, and its neighbouring iſles. Their religious ceremonies and opinions are alſo nearly the ſame. The language ſpoken at Wateehoo was equally well underſtood by Omai, and by two New Zealanders. What its peculiarities may be, when compared with the other dialects, Captain Cook was not able to point out; for, though Mr. Anderſon had taken care to note down a ſpecimen of it, the natives, who made no diſtinction of the objects of their theft, ſtole the memorandum-book. Long. 158. 15. W. Greenwich. Lat. 20. 1. S.

WATER SOUND, a ſtrait of the North ſea, between South Ronaldſha, and Barra, two of the Orkney Iſlands.

WATERBURG, a town of the United States of America, in Connecticut: 20 miles WSW. Hartford.

WATEREE, a river of the United States of America, in South Carolina, which joins the Cangaree, 5 miles N. Amelia.

WATERFORD, a city, and ſeaport of Ireland: it ſtands on the ſouth ſide of the Suir, a broad and rapid river, and about four miles and a half from its junction with the Nore and Barrow, all which are here united; and over which, there has been erected an elegant wooden bridge, connecting the counties of Waterford and Kilkenny; it is 832 feet long, and 40 feet broad, with ſtone abutments, and forty ſets of oak piers, with a portcullis for ſhipping to paſs up the river, at 1s. 1d. per maſt; the depth of water at ebb tides is thirty-ſeven feet; the expence of the bridge, and purchaſe of the ferry, was £30,000; it was built by Lemuel Cox, a Boſtonian; and has on it this inſcription, in ſtone: "In 1793, a year rendered ſacred to national proſperity, by the extinction of religious diſtinctions and prejudices, the foundation of this bridge was laid at the expence of aſſociated individuals, unaided by parliamentary grants. Sir John Newport, chairman." This bridge, with a number of new houſes lately built, add much to the beauty of the town. This city is diſtant about eight miles from the ſea, and is a moſt convenient port for foreign traffic; the harbour runs almoſt twelve miles up the country, nearly in a ſtraight line, all the way deep and clear. Waterford was originally built in 879, but deſtroyed in 981; it was conſiderably enlarged by Strongbow in 1171, and ſtill further in the reign of Henry VII. who granted conſiderable privileges to the citizens. Richard II. landed and was crowned here in 1399. In 1690, James II. embarked from hence for France, after the battle of the Boyne; and William III. reſided here twice, and confirmed its privileges. This city is governed by a mayor, and other magiſtrates, and ſends two members to parliament; electors freemen and freeholders. It is the ſee of a biſhop, who has here a fine palace, built of hewn ſtone with two fronts. To this biſhopric that of Liſmore was united in 1363; the cathedral is extenſive and elegant, beſides which there are three churches, (one of which is extremely beautiful and ſpacious) four Roman Catholic chapels, one of which lately built, is by much the grandeſt in the kingdom, the roof is ſupported by twelve pillars, and has a beautiful architectural front of hewn ſtone. There are alſo places of worſhip for French Proteſtants, Preſbyterians, Quakers, and Anabaptiſts. The court-houſe, exchange, cuſtom-houſe and barracks, are handſome buildings; and the new theatre and aſſembly-rooms are fitted up in a very fine taſte. There are ſeveral charity-ſchools and humane foundations well ſupported; the private dwellings are generally modern, and with the other improvements of the city, keep pace with the improvement of its trade. The white glaſs, and other manufactures of Waterford are in a flouriſhing ſtate; and its exports of beef, butter, hides, tallow, pork, corn, &c. are conſiderable; to which the extenſive inland navigation it has by means of the Nore, Suir, and Barrow, greatly contributes: as they alſo do to the import trade, from the demand for foreign commodities in the ſeveral rich counties and flouriſhing towns through which theſe rivers flow. The trade it carries on with Newfoundland, and of which it enjoys the principal ſhare, is of the utmoſt importance, as upwards of 70 ſail of ſhipping are employed in the ſupply of the banks with proviſions, &c. and return from thence and the Weſt-Indies with fiſh, rum, ſugar, and cotton, &c. Some idea of the proviſion trade here may be formed by the vaſt number of large hogs killed, which amounts to upwards of 3000 per week, for many weeks together; and of butter there have been exported from hence, from 60 to 80,000 caſks per year. The lat. of Waterford is 52. 18. N. and its lon. from London 6. 54. W. The difference of time between theſe two cities, being 29 minutes, 40 ſeconds, i. e. when it is 12 o'clock, or any other hour by the ſun at London, it wants 29 minutes and 40 ſeconds of that hour at Waterford. The ancient name given to this city by the Iriſh, was Cuan-na-Grioth, i. e. The harbour of the ſun; a ſecond name it was known by was Gleann-na-Gleodh, i. e. The vally of lamentation, from a bloody battle between the Iriſh and Danes, in which the former gained a complete victory, and burned the city to the ground. Several towers and caſtles have been erected here; of which Reginald's tower ſtill remains: the founder of which is ſaid to have been ſon to Ivorus, king of the Danes. Strongbow made uſe of it as a priſon for the chiefs of the Iriſh and Danes. It came at laſt into the poſſeſſion of the ſtore-keeper of the fort of Duncannon, and ſince 1663, was applied to the keeping of the king's ſtores. Where the barrack now ſtands was anciently a ſquare fort, mounted with great guns, and partly encompaſſed by a moat. The quay of this city, which is above half a mile in length, and of conſiderable breadth, is not inferior to, but rather exceeds the moſt celebrated in Europe. To it the largeſt veſſels may conveniently come up, both to load and unload, and at a ſmall diſtance oppoſite to it, may lie conſtantly afloat.

WATERFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munſter; bounded on the north by Kilkenny and Tipperary, on the eaſt by Wexford, on the ſouth by the ſea, and on the weſt by Cork; 42 miles from eaſt to weſt, and from 8 to 22 broad, from north to ſouth. It contains 34 pariſhes, about 18,796 houſes, and 110,000 inhabitants. The country is in general mountainous; in ſome parts 720 yards above the level of the ſea; on the ſides of this chain are ſome frightful rocks and precipices, and on the ſummits of moſt of the mountains, are large heaps of ſtones of great ſize, ſuppoſed to have been the ruins of ſome buildings, but without the intervention of mortar or cement. Among the mountains are four conſiderable loughs or lakes, in which are found trout, and char. The ſoil is, however, fertile, and even on the ſides of the mountains are found good feeding for cattle. Ten members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. by the county, and city of Waterford, and the towns of Dungarvan, Liſmore, and Tallow, two each.

WELLS, a city of England, in the county of Somerſet. It receives its name from a remarkable ſpring, called St. Andrew's Well, vulgarly Bottomleſs Well, which riſes near the epiſcopal palace, and emitting a copious ſtream, ſurrounds that ſtructure with its waters, and thence tranſmits them through the ſouth-weſt parts of the town. Its ancient appellations were Tethiſcine, Tudington, Tidington, Theodorodunum, Welwe, Wielea, and Fonticuli, moſt of them alluding to its fountain. The city is ſmall and compact, in general well built, and neatly paved. It is divided into four verderies, in the manner of wards. The market-place is on the eaſt ſide of the city, and is wide and airy. In it there ſtood till lately a curious market-croſs, built in the year 1542, by biſhop Knight and dean Woolman for the accommodation of poor people. Near the ſite of this croſs ſtands the city conduit, the water of which is derived by leaden pipes, from an aqueduct, built by biſhop Beckington, near the ſource of St. Andrew's Well, between the cathedral and the palace. This city was firſt incorporated by Reginald Fitz Joceline, in the time of Richard I. and afterwards the charter was confirmed by king John, who, in the eighth year of his reign, erected the city into a free borough, and granted the citizens a free market on Sundays. It was then ſtyled The Maſter and Commonalty of the Borough of Wells; but the 19th of July, 31 of Elizabeth, it was incorporated by the name of Mayor, Maſters, and Burgeſſes, of the city of Wells, and was to conſiſt of a mayor, recorder, &c. From the 26th year of Edward I. the city has ſent members to parliament, who, in the reign of Henry V. were choſen in the county-court; but in the reign of Edward IV. by the mayor and commonalty. This city is indebted for its origin to the religious zeal of Ina, king of the Weſt Saxons, who, in the year of our Lord 704, founded here a collegiate church, which he dedicated to the honour of St. Andrew the Apoſtle, whoſe ſacred ſtream invited him to this ſpot of ſolitude and retirement. Sixty-two years after, that is, in the year 766, Kineulf, ſucceſſor to Segebert, in the Weſt Saxon territories, gave, for the ſupport and maintenance of the clergy here eſtabliſhed, who at firſt were only four in number, 11 manſes, or farms, ſituated near the river Welwe, and contiguous to the vally of Aſancomb: in which ſtate this little ſeminary ſubſiſted till the year 905, when ſeveral biſhops, having been conſecrated by Plegmund, archbiſhop of Canterbury, in purſuance of an edict iſſued by king Edward the Elder, one of them was appointed over king Ina's college at Wells, and the province of Somerſet was aſſigned him for his dioceſe and ſeat of juriſdiction. In the year 1087, John de Villula, a native of Tours, in France, ſucceeded to the biſhopric. This prelate being ſtrongly attached to the city of Bath, whence he derived his infant fortune in the practice of phyſic, without any intimation of his clergy, determined to fix his pontifical ſeat there. In this deſign he was encouraged by the monks of Bath, who petitioned him to unite the abby and biſhopric together, and gave him 500 marks, with which he purchaſed the whole city; and then renouncing Wells, took upon himſelf the title of biſhop of Bath. He afterwards rebuilt the monaſtery there, and appointed a prior over it; by which means the monks of Bath, after having had abbots over them for upwards one hundred years, became ſubordinate to the priors, and ſubject to the biſhops of the dioceſe: after this, great contentions aroſe betwixt the people of Bath and Wells, which of thoſe cities ſhould be honoured with the epiſcopal ſeat; and the matter being referred, by compromiſe, to the biſhop's arbitration, he ordained, that the biſhops of this dioceſe ſhould not be called biſhops of Wells, as they had been of old, nor of Bath, as they were of late; but that taking their name from both churches, they ſhould, for the future, be called biſhops of Bath and Wells; that each of the churches, when the ſee was vacant, ſhould appoint an equal number of delegates, by whoſe votes the biſhop ſhould be choſen, and that he ſhould be inſtalled both at Bath and Wells. The cathedral, the greater part of which, as it now ſtands, was built in the year 1239, by biſhop Joceline de Wells, in the form of a croſs, being in length, from eaſt to weſt, 380 feet, and from north to ſouth, 130 feet. The number of houſes is about 600, and the inhabitants about 4000. WERNIGERODE, a county of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, bounded on the north by the principality of Halberſtadt, on the eaſt and ſouth by the principality of Blankenburg, and on the weſt by the Harz Foreſt; about 12 miles in length, and 8 in breadth. One part is mountainous, and the other level. Amongſt the mountains, the moſt diſtinguiſhed of all is the Great Brocken, or Blocksberg, which is one of the higheſt, or, according to ſome, the very higheſt mountain in all Germany. On its ſummit ſcarce any ſmall ſhrubs grow, much leſs trees; and the ſnow remains frequently there till midſummer, and in ſome of the northern parts even yet longer. The levels are very fertile in all kinds of grain, pulſe, turnips, flax, culinary herbs, and other vegetables and fruits. The mountains afford very valuable plants, with berries of various kinds, particularly crown-berries, of which great quantities are preſerved; game and wild fowl are plentiful. The reſearches after ſilver and copper mines in this country, have for ſome time been given over, but it abounds in marl, clay for bricks and pots, together with limeſtone, freeſtone, turf, cobalt, lead, and iron: no part of the country can be called barren. The principal exports, are oatmeal, corn, berries, timber, and bruſh-wood, as alſo deals, oil-cakes, oxen, hogs, veniſon, fiſh, chalk, ſalt-petre, gunpowder, caſt and wrought iron, manufactured copper, paper, cloth, ſtuffs, &c. Formerly, the county had counts of its own, to whom it gave title; but in the year 1268, Conrad, count of Wernigerode, reſigned his ſeat and town of Wernigerode, as a fief to John Otho and Conrad, marggraves of Brandenburg, and their deſcendants. Count Henry, the laſt of his name, dying in the year 1429, without heirs, the county, purſuant to an agreement, devolved to count Botho VI. of Stolberg; and, in the 17th century, on a partition of their patrimony, between the ſons of Chriſtopher, count of Stolberg, Count Henry Erneſt obtained this county, which was ſettled on his eldeſt ſon, count Chriſtian Erneſt: thus the county of Wernigerode is a fief of the king of Pruſſia, as marggrave of Brandenburg, and is under his ſovereignty. In the year 1714, an agreement was entered into betwixt king Frederick William, and count Chriſtian Erneſt, for ſettling of their reſpective rights. The king, as ſovereign of the county, levies the exciſe in the town of Wernigerode, one-tenth of which goes to the count, taxes the county, raiſes ſoldiers, but never quarters any upon it, and appeals lie from the count's regency to the revenue court, at Berlin. The revenues of this county are very conſiderable, being reckoned at no leſs than 50,000 rix-dollars per annum. The inhabitants are Lutherans.

It was divided among ſeveral princes; among others the prince of Lowenſtein had a part, and took the title of Lowenſtein Wertheim, and are divided into two branches, Vinneburg, and Rochefort; each of which pays for a Roman month, 26 florins 30 kruitzers, and to the Imperial chamber 43 rixdollars 25 kruitzers. The biſhop of Wurzburg, and the count of Caſtel alſo poſſeſs a part, beſides ſeveral fiefs of the empire, Bohemia, Wurzburg, and Fulda.

WERTHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and a capital of a county to which it gives name, at the conflux of the Maine and Tauber. The magiſtrates are principally of Calviniſts, but the Roman Catholics and Lutherans have a church in common: 42 miles ENE. Manheim, and 20 W. Wurzburg. Long. 27. 6. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 41. N.

WERTHEIM, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and electorate of Mentz: 22 miles E. Frankfort on the Main.

WERTHER, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Ravenſberg: 5 miles NNW. Bielefeld.

WERTINGEN, a town of Germany, in Auſtrian Swabia: 14 miles NNW. Augſburg, and 30 NE. Ulm.

WERVICK, or Warwick, or Verwick, a town of Flanders, on the Lis: 3 miles SW. Menin.

WESE, a river of the Netherlands, which runs into the Ourt, a little above Chiny, in the duchy of Luxemburg.

WESEL, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Cleves, on the Rhine. This town was formerly Imperial, and governed by its own laws under the protection of the elector of Brandenburg. In the year 1614, it was taken by the Spaniards, and in the year 1672 by the French, and by the latter again in the year 1757: 17 miles ESE. Cleves, and 15 NE. Gueldres. Long. 24. 1. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 43. N.

WESEL, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and archbiſhopric of Treves. This town was immediately dependent on the empire, from Frederick to Henry VII.; the latter of whom, wanting money to carry on an expedition to Italy, ſold it to the archbiſhop of Treves. In the year 1639, it was taken by the Swedes, and in the year 1689 by the French: 20 miles S. Coblentz, and 46 ENE. Treves.

WESELICH, or Weiſling, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and duchy of Juliers: 7 miles SSE. Cologn.

WESEN, a town of Swiſſerland, in the county of Gaſter: 7 miles S. Utznach.

WESEN, a town of the duchy of Guelderland: 4 miles S. Hattem.

WESENBERG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Mecklenburg: 42 miles N. Spandau.

WESEP, a town of Holland, on the Vecht, and being well fortified towards the eaſt, the great buſineſs of the inhabitants, is to carry freſh water from hence out of the Vecht to Amſterdam, for brewing and other uſes, for which traffic they have a particular kind of barges. In the year 1356, this town was ſacked and burned by the Utrechters; and in the year 1506 taken by the duke of Guelderland: 4 miles SE. Amſterdam.

WESER, a river of Germany, formed by the union of the Werra and Fulda, paſſes by Hameln, Rinteln, Minden, Niemburg, Hoya, Bremen, &c. and runs into the German Sea, about Lat. 53. 48. N.

WESLINGBUHREN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Holſtein, ſituated near the coaſt of the North Sea: 55 miles NW. Hamburg, and 30 SW. Sleſwick.

WESOWKA, a town of Poland, in the palatinate of Volhynia: 60 miles NNE. Zytomiers.

WESSELY, a town of Moravia, in the circle of Hradiſch: 5 miles NNE. Straſnitz.

WESSEM, or Weſſum, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Liege, taken by the French under Miranda, in December 1792: 4 miles SSW. Ruremond.

WEISSEN, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 9 miles NW. Efferding.

WEST BAY, a bay of the South Pacific Ocean, in Cook's Straits, between the two iſlands of New Zealand.

WEST BAY, a bay of the Engliſh Channel, on the coaſt of the counties of Dorſet and Devon, of vaſt extent. It begins weſt of Portland, and ends at Berry Point, near Torbay, according to ſome; according to others, from Portland to Lyme or Exmouth. The tide is current here nine hours; high water at ten o'clock at new and full moon; an eaſt-ſouth-eaſt moon makes full ſea. The ſea off the coaſt is reckoned the moſt dangerous part of the Channel, eſpecially on the weſt, where ſhips, not aware of the currents, are embayed and driven aſhore on the beach. When ſhips are ſo deeply embayed, that there is no poſſibility of getting off, eſpecially at the beginning of the ebb, they may run boldly on the beach, and the mariners are to remain aboard for five or ſix ſeas; they may then ſtop on ſhore with ſafety; but if they leave the ſhip inſtantly it is dangerous and fatal: light-houſes have been ſerviceable for preventing theſe accidents. Where ſhips that come from the weſt, neglect to keep a good offing, or are taken ſhort by contrary winds, and cannot weather the highland at Portland, but are driven between the iſland and the main-land, they periſh without remedy; and it has been obſerved, that more Dutch veſſels are loſt here than any other, almoſt every year, eſpecially in winter, which is thought to be owing to an obſtinate adherence to old charts, and not allowing for the true variation of the compaſs. When the variation is weſt, the true Channel courſe is weſt-by-ſouth from Dungeneſs to the Caſkets; Portland Bill and the Caſkets are fifteen leagues aſunder nearly in a meridian. Dr. Halley obſerves, that the navigation up and down the Channel is an eaſt variation: weſt-ſouth-weſt is the true courſe. The Channel between Portland and the Caſkets is forty fathoms deep, and in fair weather, one may ſee in that depth, the land on both ſides: the nearer England the ſhoalier, the nearer the Caſket the deeper.

WEST BAY, a bay in Lake Superior. Long. 91. 45. W. Greenwich. Lat. 46. 45. N.

WEST BAY, a bay on the north-weſt coaſt of Virgin-Gorda, in the Weſt Indies. Long. 62. 48. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 23. N.

WEST GOTHLAND, or Weſtrogothia, ſee Gothland.

WEST HARBOUR, a bay on the ſouth coaſt of the iſland of Jamaica, formed by a peninſula, called Portland Ridge. Long. 77. W. Greenwich. Lat. 17. 48. N.

WEST POINT, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia, on the York River: 35 miles E. Richmond. Long. 76. 56. W. Greenwich. Lat. 37. 30. N.

WESTBOROUGH, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 33 miles W. Boſton.

WESTBURY, a town of England, in the county of Wilts, firſt incorporated by king Henry IV. It is a borough town, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. Here is a manufacture of broadcloth, and a weekly market on Friday: 26 miles WNW. Saliſbury, and 101 W. London.

WESTENSEE, a lake of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein: 8 miles E. Rendſburg.

WESTENSEE, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Holſtein, on the ſide of the lake of the ſame name: 8 miles SE. Rendſburg.

WESTERAHS, a town of Sweden, and capital of the province of Weſtmanland, ſituated on the north coaſt of the Malar Lake, the ſee of a biſhop, and the reſidence of the governor of the province. In this town is a caſtle, and a weighing houſe for metals, from whence a vaſt quantity of iron, copper, and braſs is exported every year to Stockholm. The cathedral is a ſpacious and magnificent ſtructure, but is particularly remarkable for the architecture of its tower, and for being the burial place of king Erick XIV. The trade carried on at Weſterahs is very conſiderable. This city has often ſuffered very much by fire, particularly in the year 1714: 36 miles WSW. Upſal, and 48 WNW. Stockholm.

WESTERBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which gives name to a lordſhip, ſituated in the Weſterwald. The lords of Weſterburg, ſucceeded the counts of Leiningen. They are counts of Leiningen and lords of Weſterburg: 16 miles WNW. Weilburg, and 34 N. Mentz.

WESTERBY, a town of the United States of America, in Rhode Iſland: 30 miles SSW. Providence.

WESTERHAM, or Weſtram, a town of England, in the county of Kent, the native place of the brave general Wolf, and where he lies buried; it has a weekly market on Saturday: 20 miles WSW. Maidſtone, and 22 S. London.

WESTERHAUSEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and biſhopric of Halberſtadt: 3 miles E. Regenſtein.

WESTERN, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 20 miles W. Worceſter.

WESTERN ISLANDS, ſee Azores.

WESTERN ISLANDS, or Hebrides, a name given to a great number of iſlands, ſituated in the North Atlantic Ocean, to the weſt of Scotland. Pliny, who reckoned the number to be thirty, is conſidered to be pretty near the truth. The principal are Lewis, North and South Uiſt, Skye, Benbecula, Mull, and Jura. Theſe iſlands were anciently called Ebudæ, and afterwards Hebrides. The inhabitants had probably, for ſome ages, their own governors: one little king to each iſland, or to each group, as neceſſity required. It is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that their government was as much divided as that of Great Britain, which, it is well known, was under the direction of numbers of petty princes, before it was reduced under the power of the Romans. In the year 1089, is an evident proof of the independency of the iſlanders on Norway: for, on the death of Lagman, one of their monarchs, they ſent a deputation to O'Brian, king of Ireland, to requeſt a regent of royal blood to govern them during the minority of their young prince. They probably might in turn compliment in ſome other reſpects their Scottiſh neighbours: the iſlanders muſt have given them ſome pretence to ſovereignty, for, in the year 1093, Donaldbane, king of Scotland, called in Magnus the Barefooted, king of Norway, and bribed him by a promiſe of all the iſlands; Magnus accepted the terms, but, at the ſame time, boaſted, that he did not come to invade the territories of others, but to reſume the ancient rights of Norway. His conqueſts were rapid and complete, for beſides the iſlands, by an ingenious fraud, he added Kintyre to his dominions. In the 13th century, however, they were ceded to Scotland, but Scotland ſeems to have received no real acquiſition of ſtrength: the iſlands ſtill remained governed by powerful chieftains, the deſcendants of Somerled, thane of Heregaidel or Argyle, who, marrying the daughter of Olave, king of Man, left a divided dominion to his ſons Dugal and Reginald: from the firſt were deſcended the Mac-dougals of Lorn, from the laſt powerful clan of the Macdonalds. The lordſhip of Argyle, with Mull, and the iſlands north of it, fell to the ſhare of the firſt; Hay, Kintyre, and the ſouthern iſles, were the portion of the laſt: a diviſion that formed the diſtinction of the Sudereys and Nordereys. Theſe chieftains were the ſcourges of the kingdom; they are known in hiſtory, but as the devaſtations of a tempeſt: for their paths were marked with the moſt barbarous deſolation. Encouraged by their diſtance from the ſeat of royalty, and the turbulence of the times, which gave their monarchs full employ, they exerciſed a regal power, and often aſſumed the title; but are more generally known in hiſtory by the ſtyle of the lords of the iſles, or the earls of Roſs; and ſometimes by that of the Macdonalds. Hiſtorians are ſilent about their proceedings, from the retreat of the Danes, in the year 1263, till that of 1335, when John, lord of the iſles, withdrew his allegiance. In the beginning of the next century, his ſucceſſors were ſo independent, that Henry IV. entered into a formal alliance with the brothers, Donald and John; this encouraged them to commit freſh hoſtilities againſt their natural prince. Donald, under pretence of a claim to the earldom of Roſs, invaded and made a conqueſt of that country; but penetrating as far as the ſhire of Aberdeen, after a fierce but undeciſive battle with the royal party, thought proper to retire, and in a little time to ſwear allegiance to his monarch, James I. But he was permitted to retain the county of Roſs, and aſſume the title of earl. His ſucceſſor, Alexander, at the head of ten thouſand men, attacked and burned Inverneſs; at length, terrified with the preparations made againſt him, he fell at the royal feet, and obtained pardon as to life, but was committed to ſtrict confinement. His kinſman and deputy, Donald Ballock, reſenting the impriſonment of his chieftain, excited another rebellion, and deſtroyed the country with fire and ſword: but on his flight was taken and put to death by an Iriſh chieftain, with whom he ſought protection. In the reign of James II. in the year 1461, Donald, another petty tyrant, an earl of Roſs, and lord of the iſles, renewed the pretence of independence, ſurpriſed the caſtle of Inverneſs, forced his way as far as Athol, obliged the earl and counteſs, with the principal inhabitants, to ſeek refuge in the church of St. Bridget, in hopes of finding ſecurity from his cruelty by the ſanctity of the place; but the barbarian and his followers ſet fire to the church, put the eccleſiaſtics to the ſword, and, with a great booty, carried the earl and counteſs priſoners to his caſtle of Claig, in the iſland of Ilay. In a ſecond expedition, immediately following the firſt, he ſuffered the penalty of his impiety: a tempeſt overtook him, and overwhelmed moſt of his aſſociates; and he, eſcaping to Inverneſs, periſhed by the hands of an Iriſh harper; his ſurviving followers returned to Ilay, conveyed the earl and counteſs of Athol to the ſanctuary they had violated, and expiated their crime by reſtoring the plunder, and making donations to the ſhrine of the offended ſaint. John, ſucceſſor to the laſt earl of Roſs, entered into alliance with Edward IV. ſent ambaſſadors to the court of England, where Edward empowered the biſhop of Durham and earl of Wincheſter to conclude a treaty with him, another Donald Balloch, and his ſon and heir John. They agreed to ſerve the king with all their power, and to become his ſubjects: the earl was to have a hundred marks ſterling for life, in time of peace, and two hundred pounds in time of war; and theſe iſland allies, in caſe of the conqueſt of Scotland, were to have confirmed to them all the poſſeſſions north of the Scottiſh Sea; and in caſe of a truce with the Scottiſh monarch, they were to be included in it. But about the year 1476, Edward, from a change of politics, courted the alliance of James III. and dropped his new allies. James, determined to ſubdue this rebellious race, ſent againſt them a powerful army, under the earl of Athol, and took leave of him with this good wiſh, Furth, fortune, and fill the fetters; as much as to ſay, go forth, be fortunate, and bring home many captives: which the family of Athol have uſed ever ſince for their motto. Roſs was terrified into a ſubmiſſion; obtained his pardon, but was deprived of his earldom, which, by act of parliament, was then declared unalienably annexed to the crown; at the ſame time the king reſtored to him Knapdale and Kintyre, which the earl had reſigned, and inveſted him anew with the lordſhip of the iſles, to hold them of the king by ſervice and relief. Thus the great power of the iſles was broken; yet, for a conſiderable time after, the petty chieftains were continually breaking out into ſmall rebellions, or haraſſed each other in private wars, and tyranny ſeems but to have been multiplied. James V. found it neceſſary to make the voyage of the iſles in perſon, in the year 1536; ſeized and brought away with him ſeveral of the moſt conſiderable leaders, and obliged them to find ſecurity for their own good behaviour, and that of their vaſſals. He examined the titles of their holdings, and finding ſeveral to have been uſurped, reunited their lands to the crown. In the ſame voyage he had the glory of cauſing a ſurvey to be taken of the coaſts of Scotland and of the iſlands, by his pilot, Alexander Lindeſay, which were publiſhed in the year 1583, at Paris, by Nicholas Nicholay, geographer to the French monarch. The troubles that ſucceeded the death of James, occaſioned a neglect of theſe inſulated parts of the Scottiſh dominions, and left them in a ſtate of anarchy: in the year 1614, the Macdonalds made a formidable inſurrection, oppoſing the royal grant of Kintyre to the earl of Argyle and his relations. The petty chieftains continued in a ſort of rebellion, and the ſword of the greater, as uſual in weak governments, was employed againſt them: the encouragement and protection given by them to pirates, employed the power of the Campbels during the reign of James VI. and the beginning of that of Charles I. An act of parliament paſſed in the year 1748, to aboliſh heritable juriſdictions, &c. has deprived the chieftains of the power of doing ſo much miſchief in future. They are now quiet and good ſubjects. See Lewis, Skye, Mull, Jura, St. Kilda, &c.

WESTERNACH, a river of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, which runs into the Mindel, 2 miles N. Mindelſheim.

WESTERMO, a town of Sweden, in the province of Sudermanland: 62 miles W. Stockholm.

WESTERWALD, a diſtrict of Germany, in the north part of Wetteraw, or Wetteravia.

WESTERWYCK, a ſeaport of Sweden, in the province of Smaland, ſituated in a bay of the Baltic. This bay is called Spareſund; and near it is a cuſtom-houſe, where all homeward and outward bound ſhips are ſearched. Weſterwick formerly ſtood two Swediſh miles higher up in the country, on the ſpot where the market-town of Gammelly now ſtands.

It has a good harbour, a commodious quay, and a cloth manufacture; and carries a briſk trade in ſhip-timber, and all ſorts of naval ſtores: 68 miles N. Calmar. Long. 16. 30. E. Greenwich. Lat. 57. 45. N.

WESTFIELD, a river of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts, which runs into the Connecticut, 4 miles S. Springfeld.

WESTGATE BAY, a bay of the river Thames, on the north coaſt of the county of Kent, ſituated to the weſt of Margate.

WESTHAM, a town of the United States of America, in Virginia: 4 miles NW. Richmond.

WESTHOFEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and palatinate of the Rhine: 5 miles NNW. Worms, and 20 NNW. Manheim.

WESTHOFEN, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Rhine, 4 leagues W. Straſburg, and 3 SSE. Savern.

WESTHOVEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Mark: 4 miles SW. Schwiert.

WESTMAES, a town of the iſland of Beyerland: 4 miles SE. Beyerland.

WESTMAN, or Weſtmonia, an iſland in the North Sea, near the coaſt of Iceland. Long. 20. 28. W. Greenwich. Lat. 63. 20. N.

WESTMANNLAND, a province of Sweden, bounded on the north by Dalecarlia, on the eaſt by Upland, on the ſouth by Sudermanland, Nericia, and the Malar Lake, and on the weſt by Warmeland; about 110 miles in length, and 80 in breadth where wideſt. The ſoil is fertile, and conſiſts moſtly of arable lands, with meadows, paſtures, and very fine woods in proportion; and it is reckoned the moſt famous province in the kingdom for mines. The iron trade carried on by the inhabitants of Weſtmannland, is the moſt conſiderable in all Sweden: the quantity of iron exported annually from Weſterahs, Arboga, and Kioping is very large. The ſouth part of the province chiefly conſiſts of arable and meadow lands, and ſupplies the inhabitants of the mine-diſtricts with corn; and the northern parts abound in mine-works and fine woods. Weſtmannland is well watered both with rivers and lakes, which yield a vaſt plenty of fiſh; and the Malar lake is a great advantage to its commerce, as it opens a paſſage, from this province to Stockholm. The chief ſubſiſtance of the inhabitants is derived from agriculture and the mines, breeding of cattle and fiſhing: the wood, hammer-mills, &c. alſo employ a great many hands.

WESTMEATH, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by Cavan, on the north-eaſt and eaſt by Meath, on the ſouth by King's County, and on the weſt by Roſcommon, and north-weſt by Longford; about 33 miles from north-eaſt to ſouth-weſt, and 24 broad from north-weſt to ſouth-eaſt. It contains 62 pariſhes, about 13,700 houſes, and 69,000 inhabitants. No part of this country is encumbered with mountains, but conſiderable tracts of land are rendered unproductive, by large lakes and bogs; yet the convenience of turf for fuel, is in ſome degree a compenſation. The ſoil is in general light, but in ſome parts rich and deep; and though there is a greater proportion of graſs-land, yet more corn is raiſed than ſerves for the conſumption of the inhabitants. The principal rivers are the Shannon, Inny, and Broſna. Ten members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. for the county, for the town of Athlone, Kilbeggan, and Mullingar, and the village of Fore, two each.

WESTMINSTER, a city of England, on the left bank of the Thames, and ſo united to London, as to appear one city. It is ſaid to take its name from the abby or minſter, ſituated to the weſt of St. Paul's, or the city of London. In early times, this noble part of the great metropolis of the kingdom was a little, mean, unhealthy place, with nothing worthy notice but its minſter or abby, ſituated in a marſhy iſland, called Thorny, ſurrounded on one ſide by the Thames, and on the other by a branch of the river, called Long-ditch. In this ſituation was the abby, minſter, or monaſtery founded; for the convenience of which a few houſes were probably firſt erected, and theſe, at length, grew into a ſmall town, in ancient books, called the town of Weſtminſter. It was thus, for many ages, a place entirely diſtinct from London, and there was a large ſpace between them. The Strand was the road which led from London to that town, and it was open on either ſide to the Thames and to the fields. In the year 1385, we find that this road was paved as far as the Savoy; and many years after Sir Robert Cecil building a houſe at Ivy-bridge, his intereſt brought the pavement of the road to be extended thither, and many of the houſes of the nobility were erected in the Strand. Weſtminſter owed its moſt diſtinguiſhed privileges to Henry VIII.; for, in the 37th year of his reign, an act was paſſed to authorize him, by either letters patent or proclamations, to make it an honour, a title of diſtinction, which he was impowered by the ſame act to confer upon Kingſton-upon-Hull, St. Oſyth's in Eſſex, and Donnington in Berkſhire; and after the diſſolution of the monaſtery, he converted it into a biſhopric, in the year 1541, with a dean and 12 prebendaries, and appointed the whole county of Middleſex, except Fulham, which was ſtill to belong to the biſhopric of London, as its dioceſe; upon this occaſion Weſtminſter became a city, for the making of which, according to the lord chief juſtice Coke, nothing more is required than the appellation of a biſhop's ſee; it had many years before been the ſeat of the royal palace, the high court of parliament, and of our law tribunals; moſt of our ſovereigns had been crowned, and had their ſepulchres in the abby church, and the ancient palace, being almoſt deſtroyed by fire, the laſt mentioned prince had here his palace of Whitehall, which he purchaſed of Cardinal Wolſey; he alſo built the palace of St. James, and incloſed a fine ſpot of ground, which he converted into a park, for the accommodation of both palaces; and this was no ſooner finiſhed, than he erected the ſtately gate near the banqueting houſe, and added to it a magnificent gallery for the accommodation of the royal family, the nobility and gentry to ſit in, in order to ſee the juſtlings and other military exerciſes in the tilt-yard; and ſoon after the ſame prince erected a tennis-court, cock-pit, and places for bowling. From that time the building began to extend every way, but the palace was burned down ſoon after. It never had but one biſhop, the ſee being tranſlated to Norwich, by Edward VI. in the year 1550; though, by courteſy, it has ſtill retained the title of city. It contains two pariſhes, St. Margaret's and St. John's, and ſeven others within its liberties, viz. St. Martin's-in-the-fields, St. James's, St. Ann's, St. Clement's Danes, St. Mary-le-Strand, St. George's, Hanover Square, and St. Paul's, Covent Garden, with the precinct of the Savoy; each of which contains ſo great a number of inhabitants that a moiety of them could not attend divine ſervice, if there were were not likewiſe many chapels of eaſe and other places of worſhip. The government of both city and liberties are under the juriſdiction of the dean and chapter of Weſtminſter, in civil as well as eccleſiaſtical affairs, and their authority extends to the precinct of St. Martin's-le-Grand, near Newgate-ſtreet, in the city of London, and in ſome places in Eſſex, that are exempted from the juriſdiction of the biſhop of London and the archbiſhop of Canterbury; but the management of the civil part has, ever ſince the reformation, been in the hands of laymen, elected from time to time, and confirmed by the dean and chapter. Of theſe magiſtrates, the principal is the high ſteward, who is uſually a nobleman: this great officer is choſen by the dean and chapter; his poſt is not unlike that of chancellor of an univerſity, and he holds it during life; but, upon his death or reſignation, a chapter is called for the election of another, in which the dean ſits as high ſteward, till the election be over. The next great officer is the deputy ſteward, who is choſen by the high ſteward, and confirmed by the dean and chapter. This officer, who alſo holds his poſt during life, ſupplies the place of a ſheriff, for he keeps the court-leet with the other magiſtrates, and is always chairman at the quarter-ſeſſions. The high-bailiff, who is the next in rank, is nominated by the dean, and confirmed by the high ſteward; he likewiſe holds his office for life, and has the chief management in the election of members of parliament for Weſtminſter, and all the other bailiffs are ſubordinate to him. He ſummons juries, and, in the court-leet, ſits next to the deputy ſteward. To him all fines, forfeitures, and ſtrays belong, which renders his place very beneficial; but it is commonly executed by a deputy, well verſed in the laws. There are alſo ſixteen burgeſſes and their aſſiſtants, whoſe office, in all reſpects, reſembles that of aldermens' deputies of the city of London, each having his proper ward under his juriſdiction; and out of theſe are elected two head burgeſſes; one for the city, and the other for the liberties, who take place in the court-leet next to the head bailiff. There is alſo a high conſtable who is alſo choſen by the court-leet, and has all the other conſtables under his direction. Thus the government of Weſtminſter has but a little reſemblance to that of an opulent and noble city; it being much more like that of a little country borough, ſince its repreſentatives are choſen by its houſeholders, and it has not the power of making freemen, has no trading companies, nor any other courts, beſides thoſe of the leet, the ſeſſions, and a court of requeſts. Two members are returned to the Britiſh parliament.

WESTMINSTER HALL, an iſland in the Straits of Magellan, ſituated to the north eaſt of Cape Pillar.

WESTMORELAND, a county of United America, in the State of Virginia.

WESTMORELAND, a county of United America, in the State of Pennſylvania.

WESTMORELAND, a county of England, bounded on the north and north-weſt by Cumberland, on the eaſt by Yorkſhire, and, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by Lancaſhire; about 40 miles in length and 24 in breadth; is divided into 4 wards, which contain 11 towns, 32 pariſhes, and about 70,000 houſes. The air is cold, but wholeſome; the hills are generally barren and moory, chiefly affording paſture for ſheep; the vallies are fertile in corn. Camden ſuppoſes the name to be derived from its lying entirely among high mountains, and, for the greater part, waſte; deſerts, tracts capable of little improvement from cultivation, being called in the north of England Mores; and Weſtmoreland meaning nothing more, with us, than a waſte country to the weſt. But his judicious continuator thinks Mr. Camden's deſcription of the country anſwers only to that part from Lancaſter through the barony of Kendal to Workington in Cumberland, which is a mountainous tract. Whereas the barony of Weſtmoreland, commonly called, from its low ſituation, the Bottom of Weſtmoreland, is a large, open, champaign country, not leſs than 20 miles long, and about 14 broad, affording great plenty of arable land and corn. Nor do Mores in the north parts ſignify wild barren mountains, but generally commons or paſture, in oppoſition to fells or mountains; ſo that in Kendal barony, where there are moſt mountains, there are few or no mores, their commons being generally called fells: and in the bottom of Weſtmoreland there are few mountains (except that ridge which binds the country like a rampire or bulwark); but many more that have ridges that ſtill appear and ſhow to have been formerly ploughed, having probably been deſerted for ſituations more favourable to agriculture. Dr. Burn, correcting Mr. Camden's etymology, denies that the name of this county was derived from moors, it being univerſally written in old records Weſtmerland: he does not ſeem to have been aware, that it might imply the land or county of the weſtern mere or boundary between England and Scotland. Though mountains, or, as they are called in the language of the country, fells, compoſe a large part of it, they are not altogether unprofitable. They feed large flocks of ſheep, produce plenty of grouſe, or moor-game, abound with rivulets, which water the vallies beneath, and yield a great fund of minerals, lead and coal, copper and oker, and ſilverband fell ſilver; and, in the weſtern fells, is found fine blue ſlate, which ſupplies ſeveral parts of the kingdom, not to mention the ſpars and imitations of diamonds, coralloids, foſſils, and marble. The rivers of this county are but ſmall, and only three that can properly be called rivers carry their name to the ſea, Eden, Lure, and Ken. In the hollows among the mountains are found divers large lakes, having ſmall rivulets running through them, which preſerve the water clear, the lakes having commonly a pebbly or rocky bottom; all which bodies of water abound with divers ſpecies of fiſh, as trout, eel, baſs, perch, tench, roach, pike, char, and divers others. The towns are Appleby, Ambleſide, Brough, Burton, Kirkby Lonſdale, Kirkby Stephen, Milthorp, Orton, Sedbergh, and Shap. Four members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. for the county and town of Appleby, two each.

WESTON, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 12 miles W. Boſton.

WESTPHALIA, a circle of Germany, bounded on the north by the Dutch States, on the weſt by the Netherlands, and elſewhere by the circles of the Rhine, Upper and Lower. The ancient Saxons were divided into Weſtphalians, Angrians, and Eaſtphalians. The people inhabiting between the Weſer and the Rhine, were called Weſtphalians, and the tract of country inhabited by them, has from thence been called Weſtphalia. The duchy of that name, in the electoral circle of the Rhine, conſtituted a part of this country; but the circle of Weſtphalia compriſes alſo, under it, other countries which never belonged to the above-mentioned Weſtphalia. And thus we muſt carefully diſtinguiſh from each other the three denominations, which are, the circle of Weſtphalia, Weſtphalia itſelf, and the duchy of that name. Formerly, not only certain ſtates were reckoned in this circle, which at preſent no longer belong to it, as Utrecht, Guelderland, Zutphen, and biſhopric and city of Cambray; but in other reſpects, alſo, the ancient and the modern liſts of the countries of the Weſtphalian circle differ greatly from each. The following appear to be ſtates of the Weſtphalian circle, viz. The biſhoprics of Paderborn, Munſter, Liege, and Oſnabruck; the duchy of Verden; the principality of Minden; the abbies of Corvey, Stablo, Werden, Cornelius Munſter, Eſſen, Thorn, and Hervorden; the duchy of Cleves, with the county of Mark; the duchies of Juliers and Berg, Naſſau Siegen, and Naſſau Dillenburg; the principalities of Eaſt Frieſland and Meurs; the counties of Sayn, Wied-Runkel, Schauenburg, Oldenburg, Delmenhorſt, Lippe, Bentheim, Tecklenburg, Hoya, Virnenburg, Diepholz, Spiegelberg, Rietberg, Pyrmont, Gronsfeld, Reckheim; the ſignories of Anholt, and Winneburg; the county of Holzapfel; the ſignories of Witten, Blankenheim, Geroldſteim, Gehmen, Gymborn and Neuſtadt, Wickerad, Mylendonk, and Reichenſtein; the county of Kerpen and Lommerſum; the ſignory of Schleiden, and the county of Hallermund, to which in the matricula are reckoned moreover to belong the ſignories of Dyck, Severn, Kniphauſen, Keyl, Mechernick, Eyſs, Schlenacken, Wylre, Richold, Dreyz, and Schonau, together with the cities of Cologne, Aix-la-Chapelle, and Dortmund. The ſummoning princes, and directors of the circle, are the biſhop of Munſter, and with him alternately the electors of Brandenburg and Palatine, as dukes of Cleves and Juliers, both of whom in this directory enjoy together but one voice. The diets of the circle are uſually appointed at Cologne. The archives belonging to it are kept at Duſſeldorf. The contribution of this circle in men and money, to the aids of the empire, has been hitherto made equal to the contributions of the circles of Upper and Lower Saxony, Burgundy, and Swabia, and rated at ſomewhat more than the ninth, but leſs than the tenth part of the whole ſum granted by the empire. With reſpect to religion, this circle is one of the mixed. Indeed the Catholic ſtates are to nominate two, and the Proteſtant alſo the like number of aſſeſſors, to aſſiſt at the Imperial and chamber-court of the empire.

WESTPHALIA (Duchy of), a country of Germany, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Munſter and county of Lippe, on the eaſt by Paderborn, Waldeck and Heſſe, on the ſouth by Witgenſtein, Naſſau, and Berg, and on the weſt by Berg and Mark, about 40 miles in extent, from north to ſouth, and 32 from eaſt to weſt. Agreeable to its natural ſituation, this county is divided into three parts. The firſt of theſe, called the Hellwege, is low, and produces plenty of corn and other neceſſaries, with a ſufficient breed of cattle and ſalt-ſprings. The ſecond is the Haarſtrank, which ſtands ſomewhat higher, between Hellwege and the Suderland, and has indeed a good, but not ſo fruitful a ſoil as the Hellwege. The third is the Sunderland, commonly called the Surland, or Saurland, which conſiſts of hills and vales. This tract indeed, is neither of great, nor even a ſufficient fertility in corn, but, on the other hand, it has fine woods and meadows, together with a good breed of cattle, game and fiſh, in particular trout, as alſo, plenty of iron-ore, calamy, lead, copper, ſilver, and gold. The principal rivers are the Ruhr, the Lenne, the Dimel, and the Lippe. The duchy of Weſtphalia contains in it 35 towns. Henry, duke of Bavaria and Saxony, being put under the ban by the emperor Frederick I. in the year 1180, the latter made a donation of the duchy of Weſtphalia, as alſo of a part of the duchy of Engern, which belonged to the former, to the archbiſhopric of Cologn, and inveſted therewith the archbiſhop Philip; concerning which donation, in the ſame year, a record, or inſtrument, was executed at Gelnhauſen, and the ſaid donation confirmed afterwards, in the year 1200, by the emperor Otho IV. as alſo in the year 1204, by the emperor Philip. In the year 1368, Godfrey, the laſt duke of Arenſberg, and his conſort Anne, ceded the county of Arenſberg to the archbiſhopric of Cologne; and, in the year 1371, the emperor Charles IV. inveſted the archbiſhop Frederick therewith. The county was afterwards added to the ſhare of the duchy of Engern. The archbiſhops and electors of Cologn governed this duchy, till the year 1442, by marſhals, but at preſent, it is under the direction of an electoral bailiff: Brilon is the capital.

WESTPORT, a ſea-port town of Ireland, in the county of Mayo, at the mouth of a ſmall river, whoſe mouth forms a fine bay within Clew-Bay: 8 miles W. Caſtlebar. Long. 9. 22. W. Greenwich. Lat. 53. 48. N.

WESTRA, one of the Orkney Iſlands, about 8 miles long, and from 1 to 3 broad; 9 miles NNE. from the iſland of Pamona. There are two ſloops of ſeventy or eighty tons' burthen, belonging to this iſland, chiefly employed in carrying kelp to market. There is a good harbour on the north-weſt coaſt, but only capable of admitting ſmall veſſels. The number of inhabitants is about 1300. Long. 0. 20. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 69. 8. N.

WESTRITZ, a river of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria, which runs into the Laffrity, near Furſtenfeld.

WETA, a river of the duchy of Courland, which runs into the Baltic, a little below Windaw.

WETERFELD, a town of Germany, in the circle of Bavaria, and Upper Palatinate, on the Regen: 21 miles NE. Ratiſbon, and 6 W. Cham.

WETHERBY, or Weatherby, a town of England, in the county of York, with a weekly market on Thurſday: 13 miles W. York, and 191 N. London.

WETTENHAUSEN, a princely abby of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, founded in the 10th century. Its aſſeſſment is 20 florins, and tax to the chamber of Wetzlar, 54 rixdollars 8½ kruitzers: 20 miles W. Augſburg, and 18 E. Ulm.

WETTER, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Mark: 6 miles SW. Schwiert.

WETTER, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Heſſe: 6 miles NW. Marburg, and 34 SW. Caſſel. Long. 26. 24. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 42. N.

WETTER, a river of Germany, which riſes in the county of Solms, and runs into the Nidda at Aſſenheim.

WETTER LAKE, a lake of Sweden, in the province of Eaſt Gothland, 65 miles long, and from 10 to 16 wide. This lake has but one outlet by the river Motala, though above forty little ſtreams diſcharge themſelves into it. This lake lies much higher than either the Baltic, or the North Sea, and is deep and clear, but very boiſterous in winter. It is ſuppoſed certainly to prognoſticate the approach of ſtormy weather.

WETTERAW, or Wetteravia, a country of Germany, ſituated between the county of Heſſe and the river Maine, which takes its name from the river Wetter. It contains the counties of Siegen, Schuamburg, Dillenburg, Dietz, Hadamar, Weilburg, Idſtein, Hanau, Solms, Weſterburg, Iſenburg, Sayn, Witgenſtein, Hohenſtein, Cronberg and Waldeck, the lordſhips of Wied, and the Imperial towns of Wetzlar, Eriedberg, and Gelnhauſen: the northern part is called Weſterwald.

WETTERINGEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Munſter: 7 miles SW. Rheine.

WETTING, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Magdeburg, on the Saale, the principal place of a bailiwick, which was formerly a county, in the year 1288 granted to the cathedral of Magdeburg. In the neighbourhood are ſome coal-mines: 34 miles S. Magdeburg.

WETTINGEN, a town of Swiſſerland, and principal place of a bailiwick, liwick, in the county of Baden, on the Limmat, with a celebrated wooden bridge of one arch over the river, executed by the ſame perſon who built the bridge over the Rhine, at Schaffhauſen: 1 mile S. Baden.

WETZ, a river of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, which runs into the Lahn, near Wetzlar.

WETZ, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Solms Braunfels: 5 miles S. Wetzlar.

WETZLAR, an Imperial town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, ſituated on the Lahn. The Roman Catholics, the Lutherans, and the Calviniſts, have each a church. In the town-houſe are held the meetings of the Imperial chamber, which in the year 1693, were removed hither from Spire. In the year 1714, a motion was made for its removal from Wetzlar to ſome other place, but was over-ruled; and in the year 1751 the chamber itſelf repreſented to the Diet at Ratiſbon, the impoſſibility of its continuance here, and at the ſame time ſignified that Franckfort on the Maine was, of all others, the moſt proper and commodious place for its reſidence; notwithſtanding which, this alſo has produced no alteration. Wetzlar was an Imperial town ſo early as the days of the emperor Frederick I. and has ever ſince continued ſuch in the diet. Its aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire is 32 florins; but it no longer pays any thing to the chamber. Near Wetzlar ſtands the caſtle of Carlſmund, or Talſchmitt. Heſſe-Darmſtadt, as a protector of the city, keeps a company of ſoldiers here, and has a repreſentative in the council; the magiſtrates are chiefly Lutherans: 45 miles E. Coblentz, and 32 NNE. Mentz. Long. 26. 12. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 25. N.

WEVELSBURG, a town and citadel of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Paderborn. In the year 1646, this town was laid waſte by the Swedes, but afterwards repaired: 8 miles S. Paderborn.

WEVER, a river of England, in the county of Cheſter, which runs into the Dee, 7 miles N. Cheſter.

WEVER, a river of England, in the county of Devon, which runs into the Columton, near Bradninch.

WEVERY, a river of Wales, in the county of Brecknock, which runs into the Wye, near Bealt.

WEWER, or Wever, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and biſhopric of Paderborn: 2 miles SSW. Paderborn.

WEWURTZE, a river of Pruſſian Lithuania, which runs into the Minnic, 3 miles S. Proeculs.

WEXEL, a mountain of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 4 miles NW. Fridberg.

WEXFORD, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by Wicklow, on the eaſt and ſouth by the ſea, on the weſt by Waterford and Kilkenny, and on the north-weſt by Carlow. This county cannot be called hilly or mountainous, except on the borders of Carlow and Wicklow; yet it contains a large proportion of coarſe cold land, and ſtiff clay: ſome parts, however, are of a lighter ſoil, and better adapted to cultivation. The principal rivers are the Barrow, which ſeparates this county from Kilkenny, and the Stancy. Eighteen members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. by the county, the towns of Wexford, Bannow, Clonmines, Ennis-corthy, Feathard, Newborough or Gorey, New-Roſs and Taghmon, two each.

WEXFORD HAVEN, a bay of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter; it runs weſt and by north, with its innermoſt part wholly northward; juſt before the haven, lie two great ſhelves by the ſide of each other, of which that on the ſouth ſide is called Hanman's path; and the other, the north grounds; there is a channel between Hanman's path, and the land on the ſouth ſide of the haven; and another between the north ſide and the north grounds; but this laſt has only ſix feet of water at full flood, and the other eight feet at the uſual tides, and ten at ſpring-tides. The chief channel is between the two ſands, being four or five fathoms deep. Beſides theſe ſands there is another ſhelf in the mouth of the harbour; which kind of ſandy banks lying acroſs the mouths of harbours and rivers, are uſually called bars, and the havens which have them barred-havens; with a high flood there are about 16 feet of water; being paſſed the bar, there are 3 fathoms of water, 3½, and 4; but afterwards for a great way, but 10 feet and 10½, with a high flood; though under the caſtle, where the veſſels come to an anchor, there are 4 fathoms, and before the town 3. On account however of the ſhallows before noticed, no veſſels can go to Wexford, that draw above ten feet water, but muſt lade and unlade in a creek near the mouth of the haven, on the ſouth ſide, about three miles from the town, where there is ſufficiency of water, but no ſhelter from the ſouth-weſt winds; at the extremity of each of the two narrow necks of land, which defend the entrance of the harbour, there is a fort; that towards Dublin is called Fort Marget, the other Fort Roſelair.

WEXFORD TOWN, a town of Ireland, and capital of the county of that name, in the province of Leinſter. It is the ſhire and aſſizes town for that county; alſo a market, poſt, and fair town. Adjoining it is the barony of Forth; the inhabitants of which, deſcendants of an ancient Britiſh colony, retain their native language, manners, and many of their cuſtoms till this day. Wexford is ſituated near the ſea, upon the river Slaney, which empties itſelf into the ocean here; over which there ha been an elegant wooden bridge built, by much the largeſt, as well as the handſomeſt in the kingdom, begun in June 1794, and finiſhed in February, 1795; the length 1554 feet, or near one-third of an Engliſh mile; the breadth 34 feet. It conſiſts of 75 piers of oak, drove into the ground, ſix timbers in each pier, with a portcullis for the admiſſion of ſhipping up the river; at low ebb tides there are 16 feet of water underneath: it is elegantly adorned with Chineſe railing from end to end, and two beautiful orcheſtras in the centre; with receſſes or roomy ſeats underneath, as ſhelter from wet, and reſting places for perſons who walk there for pleaſure. This, with many additional new houſes, lately built, has added much to the beauty of the town; the principal part of the inhabitants being greatly ſuperior to thoſe of moſt of the other towns in the kingdom, with reſpect to general information, neatneſs of manner, and hoſpitality. It is governed by a mayor, and other magiſtrates, and ſends two members to parliament. The haven is very large, and the entrance is defended by two narrow necks of land, each forming an iſthmus that ſtretch forward to meet each other, leaving an opening of about half a mile. It was called by the Danes who built it, Weisford, and was formerly a place of more ſtrength and trade than at preſent. The firſt forces from England that attempted the conqueſt of this kingdom landed here, (encouraged by king Dermot) a year before the earl of Pembroke. They were led by Robert Fitzſtephens and Maurice Fitzgerald: the former built a caſtle two miles from the town, called Carrick, which he fortified with the utmoſt art of thoſe times; but the people of Wexford not brooking ſuch a neighbour, got him into their power by a ſtratagem, then confined him and moſt of his followers in priſon, till the arrival of king Henry II. when the inhabitants brought Fitzſtephens to Waterford, where they delivered him to that monarch, and were the firſt who ſubmitted as ſubjects of England. Fitzſtephens was appointed governor of the town, and the diſtrict round it, which in a few years increaſed ſo much with Engliſh inhabitants daily arriving here, that in ſome time they ſpread all over the country, where they ſtill remain, and are famed for the beſt improvements in the kingdom. From this town king Henry embarked for England, after receiving homage from moſt of the kings and princes of this nation. Here was the ceremony of the firſt Engliſh marriage performed, between Raymond (afterwards viceroy of Ireland) and the lady Baſil, ſiſter to Strongbow, earl of Pembroke; and this was the ſecond town which Cromwell beſieged, or that had the courage to oppoſe him. It is ſeated in a bottom, though where the caſtle ſtands is a rocky high hill, which overlooks the ſea, and commands the port and town. There are ſeveral parts of the walls ſtanding, which are very thick, and it contains ſome handſome buildings. At the end of the town are barracks for ſoldiers, formed out of the old caſtle, and which have a fine proſpect of the harbour: moſt of the old buildings are made of a ſtone of a reddiſh colour: the church is in the main ſtreet, of modern taſte, though partly built on the old foundation. The town conſiſts of one long ſtreet, with ſome lanes on each ſide; there are ſeveral ruins of ancient abbeys and religious houſes interſperſed; the market-houſe and cuſtom-houſe are handſome modern ſtructures. The quay is in a ſtate of improvement, and, when finiſhed, will be very uſeful, and have a beautiful appearance. Their chief export is corn, particularly barley and malt, of which they export vaſt quantities; proviſions of all kinds are plentiful and cheap here, and there is very fine wild-fowl to be had from the month of November to May, which contribute much to its increaſe in genteel inhabitants; many perſons going thither from Dublin and elſewhere, for the purpoſe of living cheap and well. This town will alſo be remarkable in hiſtory, from having been the head quarters of the rebel army, in the year 1798, when a rebellion then raged in Ireland. The rebellion commenced in the counties of Dublin and Kildare, on the 23d of May in the above year. On the 28th of the ſame month, we find by lord Camden's diſpatches, who was then lord lieutenant, to the duke of Portland, ſecretary of ſtate in England, that the rebellion had extended to the county of Wexford. that the rebels had riſen to the number of 11,000, and cut off a detachment of the North-Cork militia, who were ſent againſt them. By the bulletins publiſhed at the time, it appears that they after defeated a detachment under the command of major-general Fawcet, between Taghmon and Wexford; and that the general fortunately effected his retreat to Duncannon fort. The next account was of colonel Walpole having inconſiderately attacked a party of rebels poſted advantageouſly near Slievebuy mountain; that the colonel loſt his life by his raſhneſs, and his troops were forced to retire to Arklow. At the commencement of their riſing they had entered the town of Wexford, opened the jail, and liberated ſeveral perſons confined on ſuſpicion of high treaſon; among whom was the unfortunate B. B. Harvey, a gentleman of conſiderable fortune and of an ancient family. He was prevailed upon to accept a command among the rebels, and was the perſon who led their unſucceſsful attack on New Roſs, from which they were repulſed, after having nearly at one time carried their point. Much praiſe is due to general Johnſton for his intrepidity on that occaſion, to whoſe talents and example the ſucceſs of the day may be chiefly aſcribed. The rebels were defeated at Arklow, and the victories of the royal army at Vinegar-hill, under general Lake, and at Fookes's mills under general Moore, produced the ſurrender of Wexford. The day after the battle general Moore was met at Taghmon, by an officer of the North-Cork militia, with a letter from the inhabitants of Wexford offering to capitulate: to which he gave no anſwer, but proceeded directly to Wexford. The rebels who continued in arms evacuated the town on his approach. The terms propoſed were, to deliver up the town, give up their arms, take the oath of allegiance, and to perſuade thoſe who were in arms to ſurrender, on condition of being guaranteed as to their perſon and property by the commanding-officer. General Lake, like a loyal general, refuſed to make any terms with rebels; and in a ſubſequent diſpatch from the general we find, that he had the rebel leaders in his hands without negociation, Keugh, Roach, Colclough, and a Mr. Grogan, a man of large fortune, who had acted in ſome civil department among the rebels. Keugh had been commander-in-chief, in his name all orders had been iſſued; he had ſerved with reputation in America the laſt war, and had raiſed himſelf by his merit from the ſtation of a private ſoldier to the rank of captain. No adequate reaſon has ever been aſſigned for his embracing the cauſe. He had been employed with ſeveral of the loyal inhabitants in providing for the defence of the town, previous to the entrance of the rebels, and before that period had been conſidered a loyal man. Keugh, Roach, Colclough, and Grogan, were in a few days tried by a court martial and executed. Bagnal Harvey, who had been diſcovered in his hiding place, experienced the ſame fate. A party who had abandoned Wexford on the entry of the king's troops, were a few days after defeated by ſir Charles Aſgill, and the rebellion was at an end. There is nothing more remarkable than that the ſeveral generals, during the whole of the rebellion, in their official diſpatches repeatedly returned thanks to the officers under their command, for their able and ſpirited conduct, from which it might be inferred that the ſervice was one of difficulty and danger, if the returns of the killed and wounded did not ſtrongly impreſs a contrary opinion. Ten or twelve men of the royal army to about 500 or 600 rebels, is the proportion generally found in the bulletins, reſembling much more the flight of an Aſiatic multitude than the conflict of European forces. The town contains above 9000 inhabitants: 25 miles WNW. Waterford, and 60 S. Dublin. Long. 6. 29. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 22. N.

WEXIO, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland, ſituated on the Helga Lake. The ſee of a biſhop, and reſidence of the provincial governor. In the year 1570, it was burned by the Danes: 46 miles NNW. Carlſcrona. Long. 14. 51. E. Ferro. Lat. 56. 52. N.

WEY, a river of England, in the county of Surry, which runs into the Thames at Weybridge. This river is made navigable to Guildford and Godalmin, and a canal has lately been made from it to Baſingſtoke, in Hampſhire.

WEY, a river of England, in the county of Dorſet, which runs into the ſea, at Weymouth.

WEYBER, a lake of Germany, in the circle of Swabia: 3 miles WNW. Kempten.

WEYBRIDGE, a town of England, in the county of Surry, ſituated at the conflux of the Wey and the Thames: 9 miles SW. Kingſton, and 20 SW. London.

WEYDA, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and circle of Neuſtadt, on the Elſter: 11 miles ENE. Neuſtadt, and 70 WSW. Dreſden.

WEYDA, a river of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, which runs into the Elſter, 2 miles N. Weyda.

WEYDEN, ſee Weiden.

WEYDENAU, a town of Sileſia, in the principality of Grotkau: 8 miles SW. Neiſſe, and 16 SSE. Munſterberg.

WEYDENEN, a town of Pruſſian Lithuania: 3 miles WSW. Pilkallen.

WEYER, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 1 mile NE. Gmunden.

WEYER, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 6 miles S. Pruck.

WEYEREN, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 6 miles W. Gmunden.

WEYERS, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and biſhopric of Fulda: 8 miles ESE. Fulda.

WEYERSHEIM, a town of France, in the department of the Lower Rhine. In the year 1635, a numerous body of Imperial troops took their quarters in this place and neighbourhood, and left above 500 men expoſed to the air, who died of diſeaſe and famine: 2 leagues S. Haguenau, and 3 N. Straſburg.

WEYHER, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 6 miles W. Bavarian Waidhoven.

WEYHILL, a village of England, in the county of Hants, celebrated for its great annual fair held here for the ſale of ſheep, hops, &c.: 3 miles W. Andover, and 68 WSW. London.

WEYL, or Wyl, a town of Swiſſerland, belonging to the abby of St. Gal, and principal place of a bailiwick: 14 miles SSW. Conſtance, and 14 W. St. Gal.

WEYMOUTH, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Dorſet, ſituated at the mouth of the Wey, which ſeparates it from Melcomb Regis, and the communication between the towns is by means of a draw-bridge, which is opened for the admiſſion of veſſels. It is a well-frequented port, and is defended by two caſtles, Sandford and Portland. The harbour is a tide-harbour, but the road has good anchorage in four or five fathoms. The merchants principally trade to Portugal and Newfoundland. The public aſſembly-rooms were begun in the year 1777, by ſubſcription, and a few years promiſed unfavourably; but for ſome years paſt it has become one of the moſt faſhionable places of reſort for ſea-bathing in the kingdom, and has been honoured with ſeveral viſits of the royal family. Weymouth ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament; the markets are on Wedneſday and Friday: 9 miles S. Dorcheſter, and 129 WSW. London. Lat. 50. 33. N.

WEYMOUTH, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 5 miles S. Boſton.

WEYMOUTH BAY, a bay on the north-eaſt coaſt of New Holland, to the north-weſt of Cape Weymouth.

WEYS, a river of Germany, which runs into the Danube, a little to the eaſt of Ips, in the archduchy of Auſtria.

WEZE, a river of Germany, which runs into the Meuſe at Liege.

WHALE BANK, a fiſhing bank, 20 leagues long, and 7 wide: 30 leagues S. Cape Mary, on the coaſt of Newfoundland.

WHALE COVE, a bay of the Atlantic, on the north coaſt of the iſland of Manan, near the coaſt of Main.

WHALE ISLAND, a ſmall iſland in the North Sea. Long. 134. W. Greenwich. Lat. 69. 14. N.

WHARFE, or Wherſe, a river of England, in the county of York, which runs into the Ouſe, 7 miles below York.

WHATOGA, a town of the United States of America, in the Tennaſee government: 40 miles S. Knoxville.

WHEELER, a river of Wales, in the county of Denbigh, which runs into the Clyde, 2½ miles N. Denbigh.

WHEELOCK, a river of England, in the county of Cheſter, which runs into the Dane.

WHEELWRIGHT GUT, a creek on the north-weſt coaſt of the iſland of St, Chriſtopher's.

WHELDY AHAD LAKE, a lake of North America. Long. 105. 30. W. Greenwich. Lat. 61. 40. N.

WHIDAH, a kingdom of Africa, on the Slave Coaſt: extending about ten miles along the coaſt, and about ſeven miles into the land. Europeans who have been in Whidah, ſpeak of the country with rapture, and extol it as one of the moſt beautiful in the world. The trees are ſtraight, tall, and diſpoſed in the moſt regular order, which preſent to the eye fine long groves and avenues, clear of all bruſh-wood and weeds. The verdure of the meadows, the richneſs of the fields, clothed with three different kinds of corn, beans, roots, and fruits, and the multitude of houſes, form a moſt delightful proſpect. A perpetual ſpring and autumn ſucceed each other; for no ſooner has the huſbandman cut his corn, than he again ploughs and ſows the ground; yet it is not worn out; the next crop puts forth with the ſame vigour as the former, as if nature here were inexhauſtible. Certain it is, the kingdom of Whidah is ſo populous, that one ſingle village contains as many inhabitants as ſeveral entire kingdoms on the coaſt of Guinea; and yet they ſtand ſo cloſe, that one is amazed how the moſt fertile land on earth can ſupply the number of people contained in ſo ſmall a compaſs. One may compare the whole kingdom to a great city, divided by gardens, lawns, and groves, inſtead of ſtreets, the villages in Whidah not being a muſket-ſhot diſtant from each other. Some are the king's, ſome the viceroy's villages, and others are built and peopled by particular private families. The former are the largeſt and beſt built; but the latter the beſt cultivated, if there be any difference in a country ſo uniformly rich and beautiful. Notwithſtanding the ſmall extent of this kingdom, it is divided into twenty-ſix provinces, which take their names from the capital towns. Thoſe ſmall ſtates are diſtributed among the chief lords of the kingdom, and become hereditary in their families. The king of Whidah, who is only their chief, preſides particularly in the province of Sabi, or Xabier, which is the principal province of the kingdom, as the city of the ſame name is the capital of the whole. Bujis, which the French by corruption call Bauges, paſs frequently for money at their fairs in the country: this is a ſmall white ſhell, of the ſize and ſhape of an olive. In the kingdom of Whidah and Ardra, theſe bujis ſerve equally for dreſs and money, for ornament and uſe. They pierce each ſhell with an iron made for that purpoſe; forty of them they ſtring upon a cord, which they call ſenſee, and the Portugueſe toquos. Five of theſe ſtrings compoſe what the Portugueſe call a gallinha, and the Negroes a fora. By theſe the exchange of gold duſt is rated, and the price of ſlaves determined. The Europeans, the nobility of Whidah, and all the rich negroes, are carried, when they go abroad, in hammocks or palanquins on the ſhoulders of ſlaves. The natives of Whidah are in general tall, well made, ſtraight, and robuſt. Their complexion is black, but not ſo gloſſy as that of the people on the Gold Coaſt, and ſtill leſs than thoſe of Senegal, and the river Gambia. They excel all other negroes in induſtry and vigilance. Idleneſs is the favourite vice of the Africans in general; here, on the contrary, both ſexes are ſo laborious and diligent, that they never deſiſt till they have finiſhed their undertaking; carrying the ſame ſpirit of perſeverance into every action of their life: beſides agriculture, from which none but the king and a few perſons of the firſt diſtinction are exempted, they employ themſelves in ſeveral kinds of manufactures: they ſpin cotton yarn, weave fine cotton cloths, make calabaſſes, wooden veſſels, plates, and diſhes; likewiſe aſſagayes, and ſmiths' work in greater perfection, than any other people on the coaſt. Whilſt the men are thus employed, the women brew pito, and dreſs proviſions, which, with their huſbands' merchandize, they carry for ſale to market; as to religion, Boſman is of opinion, that the piety of this country is founded upon no other principles, than thoſe of intereſt and ſuperſtition. In the latter they exceed all other nations; for allowing (ſays he) the ancient heathens, to value themſelves upon 30,000 deities, I dare venture to affirm, that the natives of Whidah may lay juſt claim to four times that number. However, he believes, that they have a faint idea of the one true God, to whom they attribute omnipotence and ubiquity. One of their principal fetiches, or deities, is the ſnake, which they invoke in extreme wet, dry, or barren ſeaſons, on all occaſions relating to their government, civil policy, and cattle: in a word, on all the great difficulties and occurrences of life. This ſnake has a large round head, beautiful, piercing eyes, a ſhort pointed tongue, reſembling a dart; its pace ſlow and ſolemn, except when it ſeizes on its prey, then quick and rapid; its tail ſharp and ſhort; its ſkin of an elegant ſmoothneſs, adorned with beautiful colours, upon a light-grey ground. It is amazingly tame and familiar, permitting itſelf to be approached, and even handled: they have a mortal antipathy to all venomous ſerpents. They attack them wherever they find them, as if they had pleaſure in delivering mankind from their poiſon. The Europeans find no difficulty in familiarizing themſelves to theſe inoffenſive animals, with which they play without any dread or apprehenſion of danger. There is no fear of miſtaking them for the poiſonous ſerpents, the colour and ſize ſufficiently diſtinguiſhing them. The negroes entertain a notion that the firſt progenitor of this race of ſnakes is ſtill living, and growing to an enormous bulk. When the Engliſh firſt ſettled at Whidah, the captain having unſhipped his goods on ſhore, the ſailors found at night one of thoſe ſnakes in their magazine, which they ignorantly killed, and threw upon the bank, without dreaming of any bad conſequences. The Negroes, who ſoon diſcovered the ſacrilege, and had it confirmed by the acknowledgment of the Engliſh, were not long in avenging the horrid impiety, by a method no leſs horrible. All the inhabitants of the province aſſembled; they attacked the Engliſh, maſſacred them all to a man, and conſumed their bodies and goods in the fire they had ſet to the warehouſe. Animals of all kinds are puniſhed with death, for injuring a ſnake. In 1697, a hog having had the preſumption to deſtroy one of theſe deities, an order was iſſued for a general ſlaughter of ſwine throughout the kingdom, and the deſtruction of the whole race was hardly prevented by the interpoſition of the king.

WHIDDY, an iſland on the ſouth coaſt of Ireland, of a triangular form, about 7 miles in circumference, in the north part of Bantry Bay: 2 miles W. Bantry.

WHITBY, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of York, ſituated at the mouth of the Eſk, on the German Sea. It is a tide-haven, and almoſt dry at low water. The harbour is convenient, and in the reign of queen Anne the pier was rebuilt, and repaired by act of parliament. Above 100 veſſels of 100 tons, or more, belong to this port; and ſome of the beſt and ſtrongeſt veſſels employed in the coal trade, are built here: ſeveral veſſels are employed in the Greenland fiſhery. In the neighbourhood are ſome large alum works. In the month of December, 1787, an eſplanade, 300 yards in length, on which a row of houſes had been built, gave way, and moſt of the houſes were deſtroyed. When all the alum-works at Whitby were worked, near 6000 tons were annually made, at preſent about 3000, of which 400 or 500 are ſent to foreign markets. The other exports are, coals from Sunderland and Newcaſtle, canvas, butter, tallow, hams, bacon, and fiſh. The market is on Saturday: 46 miles NNE, York, and 243 N. London. Lat. 54. 30. N.

WHITCHURCH, a town of England, in the county of Hants, with a weekly market on Friday. It is a borough town, and ſends 2 members to the Britiſh parliament: 25 miles E, Saliſbury, and 58 WSW. London.

WHITE BAY, a bay on the eaſt coaſt of Kerguelen's Land, ſituated to the ſouth of Point Pringle.

WHITE CLIFF, a cliff on the eaſt coaſt of the Iſle of Wight, forming the north boundary of Sandown Bay.

WHITE FLAG BAY, a bay on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of St. Chriſtopher: 1½ mile N. Sandy Point.

WHITE HEAD, a cape of Ireland, on the coaſt of Antrim, at the N. ſide of the entrance into Belfaſt Lough, a little to the ſouth of Black Head.

WHITE HILLS, mountains of the United States, in New Hampſhire, 9000 feet above the level of the ſea: 110 miles N. Boſton.

WHITE HORSES, cliffs on the ſouth coaſt of the iſland of Jamaica: 20 miles ESE. Kingſton.

WHITE HOUSE BAY, a bay on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of St. Chriſtopher, a little to the north of Guana Point.

WHITE ISLAND, an iſland in the South Pacific Ocean, near the eaſt coaſt of New Zealand, north of Cape Run-away.

WHITE ISLAND, a ſmall iſland in the Atlantic, near the ſouth-eaſt coaſt of Nova Scotia. Long. 61. 56. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 55. N.

WHITE MOUNTAINS, mountains of United America, in the State of New Hampſhire, peculiarly applied to the higheſt part of a ridge, which extends north-eaſt and ſouth-weſt: the whole circumference at leaſt fifty miles. The height of theſe mountains, above an adjacent meadow is reckoned, from obſervation made by the rev. Mr. Cotler, of Ipſwich, in 1784, to be about 5500 feet, and the meadow 3500 feet above the level of the ſea. The ſnow and ice cover them nine or ten months in the year, during which time they exhibit that bright appearance from which they are denominated the White Mountains. From this ſummit in clear weather, is exhibited a view, extending 60 or 70 miles in every direction: although they are more than 70 miles within land, they are ſeen many leagues off at ſea, and appear like an exceedingly bright cloud in the horizon. Theſe immenſe heights being copiouſly repleniſhed with water, afford a variety of caſcades. Three of the largeſt rivers in New England, receive a great part of their waters from theſe mountains. Amanooſuck and Iſrael Rivers, two principal branches of Connecticut, fall from their weſtern ſides. Peabody River, a branch of the Amariſcogen, falls from the north-eaſt ſide, and almoſt the whole of the Saco deſcends from the ſouthern ſide. The higheſt ſummit of theſe mountains is in about Lat. 44. N.

WHITE PLAINS, a place of United America, in the State of New York, where the Americans were defeated by the Britiſh troops, under the command of general Howe, in the year 1776: 30 miles N. New York.

WHITE RIVER, a river of the United States of America, in Vermont, which runs into the Connecticut, 4 miles E. Norwich.

WHITE RIVER, a river of the iſland of Jamaica, which runs into the ſea, 4 miles W. Morant Bay.

WHITE SEA, a large gulf of the North Frozen Sea, on the north coaſt of Ruſſia, bounded on the north-eaſt and ſouth by the government of Archangel, and on the weſt by the government of Olonets. Long. 49. to 59. E. Ferro. Lat. 63. 30. to 67. 20. N.

WHITE WATER, a river of Scotland, which runs into the Eſk, in the county of Forfar.

WHITEHAVEN, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Cumberland, ſituated on a bay of the Iriſh Sea. This town in the year 1566, had only ſix houſes. It has a good artificial harbour, with a long pier. The coal-mines here are the moſt extraordinary in the world, being ſunk to the depth of 130 fathoms, and extended under the ſea. Here are copperas-works, which yield conſiderable profit. Its chief trade is furniſhing Ireland, and part of Scotland, with ſalt and coal, as it did the latter alſo, with ſalt and ſugars, before the union. Here are ſeveral officers of the cuſtoms, it being the moſt conſiderable port in England, next to Newcaſtle, for the coal-trade, inſomuch, that in time of war, or after croſs winds, it is common to ſee 200 ſail of ſhips go off from hence at once for Dublin, laden with coals, beſides thoſe bound with goods to Cheſter, Briſtol, and other ports. The ſhipping and trade here, is ſo much increaſed lately by acts of parliament for improving its harbour, and repairing the roads to it, that it now contains 16,000 inhabitants, and employs near 300 ſhips. It has a market on Thurſday: 40 miles SW. Carliſle, and 303 NNW. London.—In the year 1778, an American privateer made an attempt on this town, and ſet fire to one of the veſſels in the harbour, but by the exertions of the inhabitants, farther miſchief was prevented.

WHITEHEAD, an iſland in the Atlantic, near the coaſt of Main. Long. 67. 40. W. Greenwich. Lat. 44. 43. N.

WHITEHORN, a town of Scotland, in the county of Wigton. This is a town of great antiquity, having been a Roman ſtation, and the capital of a Britiſh people, called Novantes; and it is ſaid to have been the firſt biſhop's ſee in Scotland. It is now a royal burgh, governed by a provoſt, bailies, and counſellors; the number of inhabitants is about 1890, of which 756 live in the town, the remainder in the country part of this pariſh: 8 miles S. Wigton.

WICHTRACH, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Berne; 12 miles SSE. Berne.

WICK, a ſea-port town of Scotland, in the county of Caithneſs, at the mouth of a river of the ſame name, which forms a bay in the Northern Ocean. The coaſt of this pariſh conſiſts principally of high rocks, diverſified by various creeks, where fiſhing-boats can harbour. The fiſhermen, on this part of the coaſt, to get to their boats, deſcend a huge precipice by winding ſteps in the face of the rock, by which ſome lives have been loſt. To ſecure their boats from being daſhed againſt the rocks, particularly in ſtorms and ſtream tides, the fiſhermen hang up their yauls by ropes, on hooks fixed in the rock, above the level of the water, where they are ſafely ſuſpended, till the weather is fit for going to ſea; underneath theſe rocks are many coves, extending up a conſiderable way, and acceſſible only by water in boats. In theſe hideous caverns, as viſitors advance, the light of the ſun is gradually excluded, till at laſt, they are involved in utter darkneſs, and recourſe muſt be had to torches, before they reach the ſtrand. Along the ſhelving ſides of the coves, many cormorants neſtle and reſt ; and the report of a gun fired in them reſounds with a moſt tremendous noiſe. In the ſeaſon for ſeal-catching, fiſhermen, as ſilently as poſſible, land in boats at the head of the coves, on the beach, where they find numbers of ſeals, which they kill with bludgeons, for their oil. Along that part of the coaſt of this pariſh where the beach is flat and level, the ſea, particularly in winter and ſpring, after a ſtorm, throws in great quantities of ſea-ware, which afford abundance of manure, for the land. The ware is ſometimes put into large heaps, and allowed to rot; it then becomes a very ſtrong manure, diſſolving into a fat ſaponaceous ſubſtance, producing myriads of animalculæ; ſometimes it is mixed up in dung-hills, with cods-heads, herring garbage, and brine; ſome of it is cut at ebb tide, with corn hooks from the ſtones, and burnt into kelp. As about half the coaſt of this pariſh is ſteep and rocky, the quantity of kelp made in it is inconſiderable, not exceeding at an average, from 40 to 50 tons. The fiſheries along the ſhore of this pariſh, form an object of conſiderable importance. The coaſt is of very great extent, and abounds with a vaſt variety of fiſh, which, beſides what are annually exported, furniſh the inhabitants with a liberal ſupply, during every ſeaſon of the year, of ſalmon, trout, herring, and many other ſorts. The number of inhabitants is about 1000. It is a royal burgh, and with five others, ſends one member to the Britiſh parliament : 13 miles S. Duncanſby Head, and 16 SE. Thurſo. Long. 9. 13. E. Edinburgh. Lat. 58. 21. N.

WICKLOW, a county of Ireland, in the province of Leinſter, bounded on the north by Dublin, on the eaſt by the Iriſh Sea, on the ſouth by Wexford, and on the weſt by Kildare and Carlow; about 32 miles from north to ſouth, and from 15 to 26 in breadth, from eaſt to weſt. It contains 58 pariſhes, about 11,550 houſes, and 58,000 inhabitants. The mountainous parts of it afford the moſt beautiful and romantic views, the lower lands are fertile and well cultivated; in the hills rich veins of copper and other minerals are found, and lately conſiderable quantities of gold have been diſcovered. The rivers Liffey and Slaney, with ſome others, have their ſources in this county. Ten members are returned to the Iriſh parliament, viz. by the county, the town of Wicklow, and the boroughs of Baltinglaſs, Bleſſington, and Carysfort, which laſt is not even a village.

WICKLOW, a ſea-port town of Ireland, in the county of that name, ſituated on the ſea ſide, with a narrow harbour, at the mouth of the river Leitrim. This town is improving, having ſeveral good houſes lately built. It is remarkable for having the beſt ale in the kingdom, which, with other proviſions ſent to Dublin, forms the principal part of its trade. About a mile and a half to the SE. is Wicklow Head. It ſends two members to the Iriſh parliament : 41 miles N. Wexford, and 22 S. Dublin. Long. 6. 3. W. Greenwich. Lat. 52. 59. N.

WIESENBURG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and territory of Erzgeburg : 5 miles S. Zwickau.

WIESENSTEIG, a lordſhip of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, ſituated between the territories of Ulm, and the duchy of Wurtemberg, about 8 miles long, and nearly as much in breadth. It deſcended from the dukes of Teck to the counts of Helfenſtein, and has given name to a peculiar line. On the failure of the counts of this houſe, in the year 1627, in the perſon of count Rudolph, one-third of this lordſhip devolved to the houſe of Furſtenberg, but the other two-thirds were purchaſed by the elector of Bavaria, of the two elder daughters of the laſt count; to this the dukes of Wurtemberg indeed would not give their conſent, and, in the year 1704, took poſſeſſion of the lordſhip, but by virtue of the peace of Baden, concluded in the year 1714, were obliged to reſtore it to the elector of Bavaria. It is aſſeſſed by the Imperial matricula, at 24 florins, and to a chamber-term pays 10 rixdollars 73 kruitzers.

WIESENSTEIG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, and capital of a lordſhip of the ſame name : 25 miles SE. Stuttgart, and 16 NW. Ulm.

WIETMARSEN, or Wittmarſchen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Bentheim : 4 miles N. Northorn.

WIGAN, a town of England, in the county of Lancaſter, conſiderable for its manufacture of checks, linen, and cotton. That ſpecies of coal called Cannel, is found in great plenty in the neighbourhood. It is ſo ſoft before it is brought out into the air, that they make ſnuff-boxes and other toys of it. In this neighbourhood Arthur is ſaid to have routed the Saxons; and in the year 1640, there was an engagement here, between the forces of King Charles I. and thoſe of the parliament, wherein the latter were victorious, the earl of Derby, who commanded the former, being then taken priſoner, and afterwards beheaded. Wigan is ſituated on a ſmall ſtream called Douglas, which is made navigable to the Ribble, and joins to a canal from Liverpool. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has two markets weekly, on Monday and Friday : 39 miles S. Lancaſter, and 196 NNW. London.

WIGHT, an iſland in the Engliſh Channel, near the coaſt, and forming a part of the county of Hants. Its form, an irregular ſquare, or as it has been fancifully ſuppoſed, like a bird with expanded wings; about 21 miles in length, and 13 in breadth, containing 5 towns, 30 pariſhes, and about 18,000 inhabitants. It is nearly divided into two parts, by the river Medina, which riſes near the ſouth coaſt, and runs into the ſea, on the north ſide of the iſland, near Cowes; and a ridge of hills traverſes the iſland from eaſt to weſt; to the north of which the land is chiefly meadow and paſture, to the ſouth chiefly arable land; the hills themſelves affording paſture for a great number of ſheep. The ſouth coaſt is bounded with ſteep rocks of chalk and free-ſtone, and on the weſt are thoſe rocks called the Needles. The air is healthy, and thr inhabitants are in general long-lived, the ſoil is fertile, and the production of corn in one year is ſaid to be equal to the conſumption of eight; conſequently, conſiderable quantities are ſent to different ports of England : tobacco-pipe clay is found, and large quantities exported, as likewiſe of a fine white ſand, uſed in the manufacture of glaſs. This iſland was known to the Romans by the name of Vectis, or Vecta; and by Britons called Guith. Veſpaſian is ſaid to have brought it under the ſubjection of the Romans. In the 6th century, it was reduced by Cerdic, the Saxon, who drove away, or ſlaughtered the remaining Britiſh inhabitants. In the year 1066, it was invaded by Toſti, brother of king Harold, with a piratical fleet of Flemings, who laid the inhabitants under contribution. It was afterwards conquered by William Fitz Oſborn, Marſhal to William the Conqueror, who was the firſt lord of the iſland. In the year 1377, it was ravaged by the French, who made a ſecond attempt in the year 1403, but were then beaten off. Fitz Oſborn's ſon being baniſhed, Henry I. granted the iſland to Rivers, earl of Devon, but in the reign of Edward I. it was ſurrendered to the crown. Henry Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was by Henry VI. crowned king of Wight, but this new and extraordinary title died with him. It has a governor and lieutenant-governor appointed by the crown. The principal towns are Newport, New-town, Yarmouth, Cowes, and Ride. The three firſt are boroughs, and ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament.

WILNA, a city and capital of the duchy of Lithuania, on the Wilia, founded in the year 1305. This city lies in a mountainous country, on ſeveral little eminences. It is very large, and has two conſiderable ſuburbs called Antokolla and Rudaiſzka. In the old ruinous royal palace, is the arſenal, and the hall where the court of juſtice is held; and over againſt it is the magnificent church belonging to the caſtle, which was built in the year 1386. The treaſury belonging to this church is very rich; and it is alſo remarkable for the elegant marble chapel of St. Caſimir, whoſe ſilver ſhrine is ſaid to weigh thirty quintals. There are upwards of 40 churches in this city, and among theſe are one Lutheran and one Calviniſt church, a Jewiſh ſynagogue, a Tartarian church, and a Greek church; but all the reſt are Popiſh churches. Not to mention the devaſtation which Wilna formerly ſuffered from the Ruſſians, in the years 1610, and 1655, and from fire in the year 1737, it was deſtroyed by a dreadful conflagration in the year 1748, when 13 churches, the Jewiſh ſynagogue, 25 palaces, 469 ſtone edifices, conſiſting of private houſes, hoſpitals, inns, baths, convents, and mills, with 146 tradeſmens' ſhops and diſpenſaries, beſides a great number of granaries and warehouſes, were conſumed to aſhes. In the year 1749, another fire happened by lightning, which conſumed ſix churches, the council-houſe, eight palaces, and 277 other ſtone buildings. The chapel of St. Caſimir was alſo burned, and the loſs ſuſtained by the deſtruction of this edifice only, amounted to a vaſt ſum. The churches have been ſince rebuilt at a very great expence, and ſome of them in a more elegant manner than before; but the city has not recovered its former grandeur. Wilna is the ſee of a biſhop, founded in the year 1387. The univerſity was founded in the year 1570. It gives name to a palatinate. In the year 1794, it was taken by the Ruſſians, and with its territory annexed to that empire: 168 miles E. Konigſberg, and 216 NE. Warſaw.

WILRE, a town of Germany, in the duchy of Limburg: 4 miles E. Fauquemont.

WILS, a town of Germany, in the county of Tyrol, on the borders of Swabia: 5 miles NNW. Reutten.

WILSCOU, a river of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, which empties itſelf into a lake, which communicates with the Rega: 4 miles S. Treptow, in the New Mark of Brandenburg.

WILSDRUF, or Wilſdorf, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and marggraviate of Meiſſen: 9 miles W. Dreſden, and 9 S. Meiſſen. Long. 31. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. N.

WILSELMAUR, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 3 miles W. Brugg.

WILSNACH, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Mark of Prignitz. This town was anciently famous, there being no leſs than three hoſts worſhipped at this place, which hoſts, they ſay, in the year 1383, remained untouched in the church when it was burned down, and upon each of them was ſeen a drop of blood. To theſe hoſts, numerous pilgrimages were made from the remoteſt countries; by which means this place aroſe from a village to a ſmall town. At length the hoſts were burned in the year 1552, by the Lutheran preacher, Joachim Ellefeldt: 8 miles S. Perleberg, and 56 WNW. Berlin.

WILSON, a town of the United States of America, in South Carolina: 15 miles SW. Queenborough.

WILSTER, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Holſtein, on the river of the ſame name: 8 miles N. Gluckſtadt, and 34 NW. Hamburg.

WILSUM, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Bentheim: 11 miles WNW. Nienbus.

WILTEN, a town of Germany, in the Tyroleſe, on the Inn, one league above Inſpruck.

WILTON, a town of England, in the county of Wilts, on the Willy, formerly the chief town of the county: it was anciently called Ellandum. At this place, Egbert, king of the Weſt Saxons, fought a ſucceſsful battle, in the year 821, againſt Beorwvulf, the Mercian, but with ſo much ſlaughter on both ſides, that the river ran with the blood of the ſlain. Here likewiſe, in the year 872, Alfred fought the Danes, and was at firſt victorious, but ſoon after, by the uncertain fortune of war, worſted, and obliged to retreat. In the Saxon times, it was very populous, and king Edgar, according to the Chronicles, embelliſhed it with a nunnery, over which he appointed his daughter, Edith, abbeſs. But it appears to have been of older date, from the ancient charter of Edgar, in the year 974, in which we find this paſſage, "the houſe founded by my great grandfather, king Edward, in a famous place, well known among the inhabitants by the name of Wilton." Its monaſtery owed its origin to Weoxſtan, or Wulſtan, the famous earl or duke of Wiltſhire, who, about the year 773, repaired an old church of St. Mary here, for a college or chantry of ſecular prieſts. After his death, in the year 800, his relict, Alburga, ſiſter to king Egbert, changed it to a nunnery, which foundation is ſometimes aſcribed to her brother. Wilton, though much reduced, is ſtill the county town, a corporation, and borough; ſending two members to the Britiſh parliament. Leland ſays, it had once 12 or more pariſh churches, which the learned continuator of Camden thinks is mere popular tradition. Wilton is one of the principal objects in a hiſtory of the arts and belles-lettres. The earl of Pembroke's magnificent houſe here was begun on the ſite of the nunnery, in the reign of Elizabeth, by Sir William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, after his advancement to that title by Edward VI. 1551. He dying in the year 1569, his ſon, Henry, finiſhed it, and died in the year 1630. Holbein and Inigo Jones planned the buildings. Here Sir Philip Sidney wrote his Arcadia, for his ſiſter, third wife of earl Henry. Vandyke drew many of the race. Thomas, the ſeventh earl, completed the collection of pictures, and aſſembled the throng of ſtatues; and a late earl, Henry, has ſhewn, by a bridge deſigned by himſelf, that had Jones never lived, Wilton might have been a villa worthy of ancient Rome. The celebrated collection of antiques in this villa contains the whole collection of the cardinals Richlieu and Mazarine, and the greateſt part of the earl of Arundel's: 3 miles W. Saliſbury, and 85 WSW. London.

WILTOWN, a town of the United States of America, in South Carolina: 21 miles WSW. Dorcheſter.

WILTPERG, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 8 miles SW. Freyſtadt.

WILTSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Glouceſterſhire, on the eaſt by Berkſhire and Hampſhire, on the ſouth by Hampſhire and Dorſetſhire, and on the weſt by Somerſetſhire and Glouceſterſhire; about 54 miles in length, and 34 in its greateſt breadth. It is divided into 29 hundreds, which contain one city (Saliſbury) 24 towns, and 304 pariſhes. There is a very ſtriking difference in the external appearance in the ſouth-eaſt and north-weſt ſides of this county, the former being compoſed of a broken maſs of chalk hills, which enter the county from Berkſhire, Hampſhire, and Dorſetſhire, and terminate in an irregular line of bold breaks and disjointed maſſes, running from the north-eaſt to the ſouth-weſt ſide of the county; and the latter being chiefly compoſed of a rich tract of vale land, ſtretching north-eaſt and ſouth-weſt through the county, under the foot of thoſe hills, but riſing gradually north-weſt till it joins the high lands of Glouceſterſhire. In ſpeaking of this county, it is uſual to ſeparate it into two diſtricts, viz. "South Wiltſhire," and "North Wiltſhire," and the diviſion is generally made, by ſuppoſing an eaſt and weſt line paſſing through the county at or near Devizes, thereby leaving Marlborough Downs, in North Wiltſhire: but a gentleman of great knowledge and abilities, who tranſmitted the general view to the Board of Agriculture, from which this account is principally taken, thinks it will make a more natural diviſion to draw an irregular line round the foot of the chalk hills, from their entrance into the north-eaſt part of the county, from Berkſhire, to their ſouth-weſt termination at Maiden Bradley, thus comprehending the whole of Wiltſhire Downs, with their interſecting vallies and ſurrounding edges, under the name of South Wiltſhire, or, perhaps, more properly South-Eaſt Wiltſhire, and calling the other part of the county North Wiltſhire, or more properly North-Weſt Wiltſhire: and ſays, the natural appearance, as well as the agricultural application of the two parts of the county, well warrant this diviſion into South-Eaſt and North-Weſt Wiltſhire, the firſt comprehending the chalk hills, uſually called Wiltſhire Downs, whoſe general application is to corn-huſbandry and ſheep-walks; and the latter being remarkable for its rich paſture-land on the banks of the Lower Avon and the Thames, ſo famous for the feeding of cattle, and ſtill more ſo for the production of one of the moſt excellent kinds of cheeſe this iſland can boaſt. The diſtrict uſually called South Wiltſhire, but more properly South-Eaſt Wiltſhire, comprehending that part of the county called Wiltſhire Downs, is divided into two principal ſubdiviſions, called Saliſbury Plain, and Marlborough Downs, and contains in all about 780 ſquare miles, or nearly 500,000 acres. The diſtant appearance of the whole is that of a large elevated plain, but the ſurface is broken into numberleſs inequalities, and interſected by ſeveral deep vallies, formed by brooks or rivulets, chiefly riſing within this diſtrict, and on which the villages, with very few exceptions, are ſituated. The ſoil of this diſtrict, though various, is in a certain degree uniform. The hills are chalk, with its uſual accompaniment of flint. The land on the ſides of the hills from which the flints have been waſhed, is uſually a chalky loam, or rather a diſſolved chalk (provincially called white-land) the flatter parts are generally a flinty loam, and the centre of the vallies, next the rivulets, is uſually a bed of broken flints, covered with the black earth waſhed from the hills above; and in ſome of theſe, there are veins of peat, formed by the black earth, without any mixture of flints: and it neceſſarily follows, that thoſe parts near the ſource of the rivulets where the hills are the ſteepeſt, abound moſtly with the white-land ſoil, and thoſe near the junction of the rivulets, where the country is of courſe flatteſt, abound moſtly with the flinty loam. The ſides of the hills which have been the moſt waſhed, are the thinneſt and weakeſt ſoil, and the level tops, which have been very little waſhed, or not waſhed at all, frequently the deepeſt and ſtrongeſt: but there are ſome very ſingular ſand veins, running through a large portion of this diſtrict, and there are ſome inſtances of ſtrong clays and clayey loams on the ſkirts. The climate of Wiltſhire Downs is ſo well known for its coldneſs and keenneſs, as to be almoſt proverbial. The ſoil of the north-weſt diſtrict, though not ſo uniform as South Wilts, may, nevertheleſs, be reduced to a few leading features: the underſoil, of a large proportion of it, viz. in a direction from Cirenceſter to Bradford, is a looſe irregular maſs of that kind of flat broken ſtones, called in Wiltſhire, corn-grate, the ſtones being, in ſome places, thin enough for ſlates to cover houſes; in others, lying in large flat beds, fit for pavement, and in ſome, aſſuming the ſhape and qualities of free-ſtone; but, in general, lying in thoſe looſe, flat, broken pieces, ſo well adapted to the building the dry fence-walls in common uſe on Glouceſterſhire hills, and in many parts of this diſtrict, and lying uſually in horizontal beds, mixed with earth. The top ſoil of this rock, or rather maſs of ſtones, is chiefly that kind of reddiſh, calcareous loam, mixed with irregular, flat, broken ſtones, uſually called "ſtone braſh." The goodneſs of this ſoil varies very much, according to its comparative depth to the rock, and according to the abſence or preſence of an intervening vein of old, blue clay. This clay is of a marley appearance; but, in general, not ſufficiently calcareous to be valuable as manure, and its preſence is obvious to every traveller, by its natural and ſpontaneous production of oak trees: while its total abſence, or, at leaſt, its lying very deep, is as ſtrongly denoted by the ſpontaneous and plentiful production of beautiful elms. The north weſt verge of the county may be truly called the Cotſwold part of Wiltſhire. Its external appearance, and internal component parts, are nearly the ſame with the Cotſwold hills of Glouceſterſhire, except where the vein of clay lies ſo near the ſurface, as to make it colder. This part is on account of the thinneſs and looſeneſs of its ſoil, uſually, and, in many inſtances neceſſarily, kept in an arable ſtate; while the adjoining land, viz. about Chippenham, and from thence ſouthward, through Melkſham and Trowbridge, which happens to have a great depth of ſoil, and has a pure warm rock, without the intervening vein of cold clay, is capable of grazing the largeſt oxen, and is, perhaps, one of the moſt fertile parts of the county, unleſs, poſſibly, the vein of gravel, next deſcribed, may be excepted. There is a vein of gravel, of a moſt excellent ſmall pebbly, ſhelly kind, and, in general, covered with a good depth of rich loam. There are two veins of ſand in this diſtrict. They are, in general, red, and of a ſharp, looſe, gravelly texture, and, of courſe, not ſo fertile as the tough, cloſe ſands of South Wiltſhire. The greateſt part of the reſidue of the ſoil of this diſtrict lies on a hard, cloſe rock, of a rough, irregular, ruſtic kind of baſtard limeſtome, of very little uſe but for the roads. The ſoil over this kind of ſtone is various, but generally cold, owing to its retentive nature, and to the frequent intervention of a vein of clay. The climate of this diſtrict is various, and though, in general, milder than that of the high lands in the ſouth-eaſt diſtrict, is, nevertheleſs, cold, and, in general, unfavourable to the purpoſes of early ſpring vegetation, owing to the cold retentive nature of the under ſoil of great part of this diſtrict. The county of Wilts was once a well-wooded county, and till within the memory of man, wood made the principal part of the fuel in the farm-houſes and country villages. The general introduction of pit-coal has very much leſſened the conſumption of wood for fuel. And this has in ſome degree leſſened the attention to its preſervation. The ſorts of timber moſt natural to the county, are oak, aſh, and elm. The manufactures of the county are conſiderable, but the woollen is by far the moſt general; few towns are without a manufacture. The towns are Bedwin, Caln, Chippenham, Cricklade, Devizes, Downton, Heyteſbury, Hindon, Ludgerſhal, Malmeſbury, Marlborough, Weſtbury, Wilton, Wotton-Baſſet, Auburn, Ambreſbury, Bradford, Corſham, Highworth, Melkſham, Mere, Swindon, Trowbridge, and Warminſter; of theſe the fourteen firſt are boroughs, and ſend each two members to the Britiſh parliament, as do likewiſe the county, the city of Saliſbury, and the deſerted borough of Old Sarum; 34 in the whole.

WILZ, a town of the duchy of Luxemburg: 2 leagues NW. Dicrich.

WILZBURG, a fort of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and principality of Anſpach: 23 miles SE. Anſpach.

WIMBLEDON, a village of England, in the county of Surry. In the year 568, Ethelbert, king of Kent, was defeated on this ſpot by Ceaulin, king of the Weſt Saxons: 10 miles SW. London.

WIMES, a town of France, in the department of the Straits of Calais, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of St. Omer: 3 leagues SSW. St. Omer.

WIMMERBY, a town of Sweden, in the province of Smaland: 62 miles N. Calmar.

WIMMIS, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Berne, on the Sibuen: 18 miles S. Bern.

WIMPFEN, an imperial town of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, on the Neckar, near which it is joined by the Jaxt. This place conſiſts properly of two towns, the moſt conſiderable of which is called Wimpffen-auſdem-Berg, or Wimpffen on the Hill, and the other Wimpffen-in-thal, or Wimpffen in the Vale. In the former of theſe is a Lutheran pariſh church, and a grammar-ſchool, as alſo, a Roman Catholic hoſpital; but in the latter is a Roman Catholic abby, with a convent of monks. The magiſtracy here are wholly Lutherans. The Huns are ſaid to have ravaged this town; but an inſtrument of donation by king Henry VII. bearing date in the year 1228, ſhews it to have entirely recovered that calamity. On the failure of the dukes of Swabia, it gradually procured its freedom, and the emperors Charles IV. and Wenceſlaus promiſed to maintain it in its immediate dependency on the empire. Its aſſeſſment to the matricula of the empire is 22 florins. To the chamber of Wetzlar its quota is 51 rixdollars 75½ kruitzers. In the years 1539, and 1540, an Imperial chamber was held here; and in 1626 a ſharp action happened here betwixt count Tilly and the marggrave of Baden Durlach. In the years 1645 and 1688, it was taken by the French: 8 miles N. Heilbronn, and 28 ESE. Manheim. Long. 26. 47. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 11. N.

WINANDER MERE, or Winder Mere, a lake of England, in the county of Weſtmoreland, in which is an iſland, with a village. This is one of the largeſt lakes in England, being 15 miles long, and near one broad, and from 90 to 200 feet deep, well furniſhed with fiſh of ſeveral ſorts, but eſpecially char: 17 miles SSE. Keſwick, and 270 NNW. London.

WINBORN MINSTER, a town of England, in the county of Dorſet, ſituated on the river Stour, which takes its name from an ancient monaſtery, in which the Saxon king Etheldred was buried. The church is built in the form of a cathedral, and was formerly collegiate: it has a weekly market on Friday: 7 miles N. Poll, and 102 SW. London.

WINCAUNTON, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet, with a weekly market on Wedneſday. In this town was ſhed the firſt blood in the revolution of 1688, when the prince of Orange, paſſing through it in his way from Torbay, attacked a party of the king's dragoons, and put ſeveral to the ſword: 30 miles S. Bath, and 108 W. London.

WINCHCOMBE, a town of England, in the county of Glouceſter, with a weekly market on Saturday. It was anciently a county or ſheriffdom by itſelf, till the grant of it, in the reign of king Etheldred, laid it to Glouceſter; it was a borough in the reign of Edward the Confeſſor. It had an abby, whoſe abbot was mitred, and ſat in parliament. The inhabitants planted tobacco here, to very good account, till they were reſtrained in the 12th of Charles II. after which the town decayed: 16 miles NE. Glouceſter, and 93 W. London.

WINCHELSEA, a town of England, in the county of Suſſex, and one of the Cinque-Ports, ſaid to have been built in the reign of Edward I. about two miles from the place where a more ancient town of the ſame name had been ſwallowed up by the ſea. The new town was endowed with the ſame privileges as the old, namely thoſe of the Cinque Ports to which it belongs, as one of the ancient towns; but the ſea, which had before ſwallowed up the old town, left the new before it was finiſhed. It ſtill ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, though the electors are but few: the market and trade loſt, and little more than the ſkeleton of a regular and handſome town remains. The ſtreets ſtand all at right angles, and are divided into thirty-two quarters, as they are called. The ſtonework of three gates is yet ſtanding, and a number of fine vaults, formerly uſed for warehouſes, lately for a cambric manufacture, which did not ſucceed. The chancel of St. Thomas's church is now the only pariſh church in the town. On the level relinquiſhed by the ſea, which is kept out by expenſive works, two miles north-weſt of the town, and half a mile weſt of the ſea, appears a caſtle, called Camber, built by Henry VIII. in the year 1539, or 1540, at the expence of 23,000l. It is circular, and faced with ſquare ſtones, on a plan of others built in the ſame reign, with one large round tower, ſerving as a keep, ſurrounded by an aſſemblage of ſmaller, of the ſame figure, connected by ſhort curtains: 8 miles NE. Haſtings, and 67 SW. London.

WINCHELSEA ISLAND, an iſland in the Pacific Ocean: 10 leagues SE. from Sir Charles Hardy's Iſland.

WINCHENDON, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 48 miles NW. Boſton.

WINCHESTER, a city of England, in the county of Hants, ſituated on the weſt ſide of the river Aire, called, by Ptolemy and Antoninus, Venta Belgarum, and by the Britons, Caer Gwent. It was very conſiderable in the time of the Romans, and it is aſſerted that Conſtans the monk lived here, who was firſt appointed Cæſar, and afterwards emperor, by his father Conſtantine. Under the Saxon heptarchy, this city, though pillaged more than once, recovered itſelf, became the reſidence of the Saxon kings, and was erected into a biſhopric, in the year 660, the ſee being removed from Dorcheſter. During the Norman times, it encreaſed, and became the depoſitory of the archives, or public records. It ſuffered conſiderably in the wars between Stephen and the empreſs Matilda, the latter being beſieged in it by the former, and, to eſcape being taken, was carried out in a coffin. This caſtle is by tradition aſcribed to king Arthur. In this caſtle William II. ſirnamed Rufus, was crowned. In the civil wars of the laſt century, it was taken from Charles I. by Sir William Waller, and was afterwards demoliſhed, except the old hall, a magnificent building, in which the aſſizes are held. In this alſo hangs Arthur's round table. Near the ſite of this caſtle (whoſe keep, with foundation of flint walls, ſtill remains) Charles II. in the year 1683, laid the foundations of a palace, of which only the ſhell was finiſhed. A cupola was deſigned, thirty feet above the roof, which would have been ſeen at ſea, and a ſtreet was to have led from the front to the cathedral. The length of the whole is 328 feet: a park of ten miles in circumference was intended. The beſt materials have ſince been diſpoſed of, and the whole was converted into a priſon ſome years ſince. The cathedral is ſaid to have been founded on an ancient monaſtery; the preſent edifice was begun in the 11th century, by Biſhop Walkeſyn, who built the tower, choir, tranſepts, and probably the weſt end. Biſhop Edinton undertook to repair the nave, but biſhop Wickham entirely rebuilt it, in the year 1394. The choir under the tower was vaulted in the reign of Charles I.; the altar-ſcreen is ſaid to have been the nobleſt in England: ſide-walls, roof of the preſbytery, and its aiſles, were built by biſhop Fox, in the year 1525; the ſcreen at the entrance of the choir, was the work of Inigo Jones. Beſides thirteen Saxon kings, whoſe bones are as much diſperſed as their monuments, having been tumbled out of the cheſts, in which biſhop Fox lodged many of them, and reſtored without diſtinction after the reſtoration; here were buried the kings Lucius, Canute, Hardicanute, and William Rufus; queen Emma, and Richard, third ſon of the Conqueror. The tomb of Rufus in the choir was opened in the civil war, and a gold ring, ſet with rubies, found on his thumb, ſaid to be worth 500l.; his bones were put into one of biſhop Fox's cheſts. All that remains of the monaſtic buildings is the prior's hall, now made into different apartments for the deanery, and a piece of a prebendal-houſe. A noble college was founded here by William of Wickham, biſhop of the city, who laid the firſt ſtone, in the year 1387, and finiſhed it in the year 1393, with endowments for a warden, ſeventy ſcholars, ten fellows, &c. with exhibitions to New College Oxford, which was founded and endowed by the ſame benefactor. Through the intereſt of this biſhop, the ſtaple for wool was, by Edward III. fixed at Wincheſter, though afterwards removed to Calais; he procured ſeveral privileges for his ſee, particularly that the biſhops ſhould always be prelates of the Order of the Garter, and chancellors of the archbiſhops of Canterbury. The city of Wincheſter is about 1½ mile in circumference within the walls. It is governed by a mayor, high ſteward, aldermen, recorder, &c. has two markets weekly, Wedneſday and Saturday, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. About three quarters of a mile ſouth from the town, ſtands an hoſpital, called St. Croſs, founded in the year 1136, by biſhop Blois, for a maſter and penſioners; the income is ſaid to be very great: 61 miles ESE. Bath, and 63 SW. London.

WINDSOR, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Vermont.

WINDSOR, a town of England, in the county of Berks, ſituated on the right bank of the Thames, which ſeparates it from Buckinghamſhire. Windſor is built on the ſide of a hill, and conſiſts of ſeveral ſtreets. The caſtle is ſaid to have been built before the Conqueſt. This caſtle the Conqueror rebuilt, and Henry I. repaired. In the treaty of peace between Henry II. and Stephen, it is called Mola de Windſor; and when Richard I. went to the Holy Land, and left the government to the biſhops of Ely and Durham, the former taking up his reſidence in the Tower of London, the latter occupied this place, as the next ſtrongeſt hold in the kingdom. Eleanor, queen of Edward I. took great delight in it, and was here delivered of four of her children. Her grandſon, Edward III. his ſon William, and Henry VI. were alſo born here. It owes moſt of its preſent magnificence to the attachment of Edward III. to the place of his birth. He built the royal palace, with its chapel, and built St. George's-hall, the lodgings on the eaſt and ſouth ſide of the inner court, the tower on the keep, the chapel of St. George, and the apartments for the dean and canons, with all the walls, towers, and gates, as they now ſtand. St. George's Chapel was rebuilt by Edward IV. Henry VII. added the ſtately fabric adjoining to the king's lodgings. The prebendal houſes were erected in form of a fetter-lock, by Henry VIII. who alſo built the great gate to the outer court; as did Edward VI. and Mary, a curious fountain for ſupplying the whole caſtle with water from Blackmore-Park, near Wingfield. Elizabeth made the terrace. Charles II. gave the armory, beſides repairing and furniſhing the whole caſtle; and James II. and William III. farther adorned the apartment with paintings. In ſome late repairs, the ditch has been filled up. The caſtle covers ſomewhat more than 12 acres, and is divided into three wards, called the outer and inner ſquare, and the tower. In the middle of the ſecond is an equeſtrian ſtatue of Charles II. St. George's hall, where the inſtallation dinners are held, is painted with the triumphs of Edward III. and the Black Prince, by Verrio. As to the origin of the Order of the Garter, Polydore Vergil is the firſt that derived it from a lady's garter, which lady ſucceeding hiſtorians have made countеſs of Saliſbury. The truth ſeems to be, that Edward III. having inſtituted a round table, in imitation of king Arthur, and invited all foreigners to a ſolemn juſt, and tournament, held here, in the year 1344, finding the king of France had copied his example, and that ſuch inſtitution was too general, and having given his own garter for a ſignal at the battle of Creſſy, ordained it afterwards the badge or ſymbol of a particular order. In reference to this, the motto ſeems to retort ſhame and defiance on him who ſhould dare to think ill of the enterpriſe which he had undertaken in ſupport of his claim to the crown of France. It was the age of mottos, and Aſhmole gives one or two more on this very prince's clothes. With this order have been honoured 9 emperors of Germany, 5 kings of Denmark, 3 of Sweden, 5 of Portugal, 2 of Naples, 1 of Aragon, and 5 of France, (30 ſovereigns); 16 electors of the empire, 13 other ſovereign princes, 6 princes of Orange, beſides many peers of France, Spain, &c. The firſt Scotchman admitted into the order was James earl of Douglas, by Edward IV.; and the firſt Scotch king, James V. by Henry VIII. The officers belonging to this order are the prelate, biſhop of Wincheſter, the chancellor, biſhop of Saliſbury, the regiſter, dean of Windſor, garter king at arms, and the black rod. At a meeting of the order, to fill up the vacant ſtalls, the chancellor collects the votes; for though the ſovereign properly elects, the knights have a liberty of nomination, except the perſon be a foreigner. Each knight may nominate nine perſons, out of whom the ſovereign chooſes one. Garter is then ſent out of the chapter to announce it to the perſon elected, and conduct him to the preſence of the ſovereign, who in perſon, or by deputy, inveſts him with the enſigns of the order of the garter, which is buckled round his left leg, and the George hung round his neck by a ſky coloured ribband. The habit and other ornaments are not put on till he is inſtalled in the chapel at Windſor. St. George's Chapel is a moſt beautiful Gothic building, and has within a few years undergone a complete repair; a beautiful painted window, by Mr. Picket, after a deſign of Sir Joſhua Reynolds, has been lately put up by his majeſty's directions. On each ſide are the ſtalls of the ſovereign and knights of the garter, with the inſignia over each ſtall. A new altar-piece, painted by Weſt, was put up in the year 1788. Windſor has been the principal country reſidence of our preſent king and royal family, in a palace purchaſed in the year 1779, of the duke of St. Alban's: it is governed by a mayor, aldermen, recorder, &c. and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament. The market is on Saturday. Adjoining to the town are two royal parks, one, called the Little Park, about 3 miles in circumference; the other, called the Great Park, is ſaid to be 20: both are well ſtocked with deer, and ſome part of the latter has been turned into a corn farm. Windſor is ſometimes called New, to diſtinguiſh it from Old Windſor, a village about a mile from it: 38 miles ESE. Oxford, and 22 W. London.

WINDSOR, a town of Nova Scotia: 25 miles NW. Halifax.

WINDSOR, a town of the United States of America, in Vermont: 92 miles NW. Boſton. Long. 72. 22. W. Greenwich. Lat. 43. 33. N.

WINTERINGHAM, a town of England, in the county of Lincoln, near the Humber: 33 miles N. Lincoln, and 166 N. London.

WINTERTHUR, a town of Swiſſerland, in the canton of Zurich. This was formerly an imperial town. In the year 1467, it was mortgaged to the canton of Zurich, and by ſubſequent treaties entirely ceded, ſince which Winterthur has acknowledged Zurich for its ſovereign. It is governed, however, by a magiſtracy and policy of its own. In all caſes reſpecting the burghers, appeals may be carried from the town-court to the council of magiſtracy, and no farther; but if either of the parties be a foreigner, an appeal lies from the council to Zurich. A bailiff from this latter place likewiſe reſides here, but without any authority over the town, excepting that of aſſiſting at the ceremony of an annual homage paid to Zurich by the burghers on St. Alban's day. In caſe of a war, Winterthur furniſhes Zurich with 200 men, either burghers or dependents, but to ſerve under its own colours. The earthen-ware made here, particularly the white, together with its painted ſtoves, are in great repute for their beauty and durableneſs: 14 miles NE. Zurich, and 21 NW. Conſtance.

WIRKSWORTH, a town of England, in the county of Derby, ſituated in the midſt of mountains, abounding in lead-ore, with furnaces for melting it. Here is a ſtrong medicinal water, and moſt of the ſtreams or ſprings in theſe parts paſs through, and are tainted by lead-mines. It is a large market-town, with a handſome church, a free-ſchool, and alms-houſe. Here the Barmoot court is held by a maſter and 24 jurors, who determine diſputes relative to the mines. There is evidence that the Wirkſworth mines were wrought early in the eighth century by the Saxons, when Eadburga, daughter of Adulf, king of the Eaſt Angles, and abbeſs of Repton, in this county, ſent St. Guthlac a leaden coffin and ſhroud, in which he was buried; and, in 835, Kenwara, another abbeſs, gave lead here to the amount of 300 ſhillings to Chriſt-church at Canterbury. The king claims the thirteenth penny on the mines round Wirkſworth, for which the owners compound at 1000l. per annum, and the tythe is ſaid to have produced as much formerly; the market is on Tueſday: 13 miles N. Derby, and 106 N. London.

WIRSTBERGHOTZEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and biſhopric of Hilderſheim: 8 miles S. Hilderſheim.

WISEADEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and principality of Naſſau Saarbruck Uſingen. This town was known to the Romans, and the Heideniſche Maur, or Heathen Wall, which runs through the preſent town of Wiſbaden, appears to be a work of that nation; and a part of the boundaries of this town are derived from the lined trenches thrown up by Druſus, oppoſite Mentz, for the covering of the Rhine. In the days of the kings of the Franks, in this town was a royal court. In the year 1318, it held out a vigorous ſiege againſt the combined forces of the emperor Louis of Bavaria, and Baldwin archbiſhop of Treves, who were obliged to decamp from before it. In the year 1547, it was burned down; and it ſuffered greatly in the wars of the 17th century, particularly in the year 1644: 5 miles NW. Mentz, and 30 SW. Wetzlar. Long. 25. 43. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 3. N.

WISBERG, a town of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and principality of Culmbach: 8 miles E. Culmbach.

WISBICH, or Wiſbeach, a town of England, in the county of Cambridge, with a weekly market on Saturday. William the conqueror built a caſtle here, which, in the reign of Elizabeth, was made a priſon for Romiſh prieſts and Jeſuits. Its ſituation is among the fens, on a river navigable for barges. In the years 1236, 1613, and 1614, the ſea broke in, and inundated the whole town. It is a well-built town, and a place of conſiderable trade, eſpecially in corn and ſeed oil: 17 miles SW. Lynn, and 19 N. London.

WISBY, a town of Sweden, on the weſt coaſt of the iſland of Gothland. This is a very ancient ſtaple, and in former times one of the Hanſe Towns. When Wineta, a place of great trade, in the iſland of Uſedom, near the coaſt of Pomerania, was deſtroyed by an inundation, ſeveral of its wealthieſt inhabitants removed to Wiſby. It was likewiſe frequented by Swedes, Goths, Danes, Normans, French, Engliſh, Saxons, Livonians, Spaniards, Ruſſians, Greeks, and other nations. The maritime laws of Wiſby were famous in all parts, and adopted along the coaſt of the Baltic. The wall of Wiſby, and the towers with which it is flanked, were built in the year 1289. This town continued in a flouriſhing condition till the year 1361, when the Danes almoſt totally deſtroyed it. The harbour is ſafe and commodious, but not very large. Long. 18.18.E.Greenwich. Lat. 57.38.N.

WISMAR, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and north part of the duchy of Mecklenburg, ſituated in a bay of the Baltic, with a good harbour; large, well fortified, and defended by a citadel. This is one of the beſt and largeſt places in the country; as, beſides ſix churches, it has alſo a particular conſiſtory of its own, with a grammar-ſchool, under the direction of eight maſters, and is the ſeat of a Swediſh court of juſtice, erected in the year 1653, both for the diſtrict, and Swediſh Anterior Pomerania. This court conſiſts of a preſident, a vice-preſident, and four aſſeſſors. It was formerly a Hanſe town, and poſſeſſed of the privilege of coining: the firſt origin is not known with any degree of certainty. In the year 1238, it was enlarged; and in the year 1266, obtained the Lubeck rights. In the year 1261, it was annexed to the duchy of Schwerin; in the year 1627, the Imperialiſts got poſſeſſion of it; but, in the year 1632, were driven out by the Swedes, to whom it was abſolutely ceded, at the peace of Weſtphalia, in 1648. In the year 1675, the Danes took it, but in 1680 reſtored it; whereupon, between the years 1681 and 1711, its fortifications were increaſed. At the end of the year 1711, it was bombarded by the Danes. In the year 1715, it was blockaded; and in 1716, taken by the northern confederates, who, from the winter of the year 1717 to 1718, blew up and razed the fortifications. In the year 1758, the Pruſſians raiſed large contributions here: 33 miles E. Lubeck, and 32 WSW. Roſtock. Long. 29. 7. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 50. N.

WISSEMBURG, or Weiſſemburg, or Korn Weiſſemburg, a town of France, and principal place of a diſtrict, in the department of the Lower Rhine, ſituated on the Lauter, at the foot of the Voſges. In this town was a princely provoſtſhip, united to the biſhopric of Spire, from which the biſhop was aſſeſſed 80 florins. This town was formerly imperial, and was ceded to France by the peace of Ryſwick. The fortifications were deſtroyed by Louis XIV.; but ſtrong lines of defence are fixed from this town to the Rhine, a little to the eaſt of Lauterburg, on the ſouth ſide of the Lauter. In the year 1744, the Auſtrians were driven from theſe lines: in the year 1793, they were paſſed, and the town itſelf, by the Pruſſians, but ſoon after regained by the French: 9 leagues N. Straſburg, and 4 SSW. Landau. Long. 25. 37. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 2. N.

WOAHOO, or Oahoo, one of the Sandwich Iſlands; as far as could be judged from the appearance of the north-eaſt and north-weſt parts, it is much the fineſt iſland of the whole group. Nothing can exceed the verdure of the hills, the variety of wood and lawn, and rich cultivated vallies, which the whole face of the country diſplayed. The road is formed by the north and weſt extremities. Should the ground tackling of a ſhip be weak, and the wind blow ſtrong from the north, to which quarter the road is entirely open, this circumſtance might be attended with ſome danger; but with good cables there would be little riſk, as the ground from the anchoring-place, which is oppoſite to the vally through which the river runs to the north point, is a fine ſand. This iſland is ſuppoſed to contain 60,200 inhabitants. Long. of the anchoring-place 202. 9. E. Greenwich. Lat. 21. 43. N.

WOBBEL, a town of Germany, in the circle of Weſtphalia, and county of Lippe: 6 miles ENE. Horn.

Dunſtable, and 42 NW. London.

WOBURN, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 15 miles NW. Boſton.

WODNIAN, or Wodnany, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Prachatitz: 10 miles S. Piſek, and 58 S. Prague.

WOEL, a town of France, in the department of the Meuſe, and chief place of a canton, in the diſtrict of St. Mihel: 4 leagues NE. St. Mihel, and 5 SE. Verdun.

WOERDEN, or Worden, a town of Holland, built by Godfrey de Rhenen, the 28th biſhop of Utrecht, on the river Rhine, about the year 1160, to keep the citizens of Utrecht in ſubjection, and maintain his authority. It had a caſtle, which was formerly ſuppoſed to be impregnable; but, when the French took the city, in 1672, they entirely demoliſhed it, before that time falling to decay. This city had its own particular lords till the year 1296, when Herman de Woerden forfeited it, having been convicted of being a party in the murder of Florent V. comte of Holland, who was aſſaſſinated by a gentleman, named Gerard de Velſen, whoſe wife he had raviſhed. It was afterwards ſold by Philip II. king of Spain, to Eric, duke of Brunſwick, from whom it came, in the year 1581, under the dominion of the States-General. In the year 1672, the French having made themſelves maſters of this place, the Dutch came to beſiege it, under the prince of Orange and the comte de Zuyleſtein. The comte de Marck, who commanded in the city, began to be much preſſed, when the duke of Luxemburg arrived, with 9000 men. He paſſed the moraſs by a way which was ſuppoſed to be inacceſſible, forced the entrenchments, and put the enemy to flight. The Dutch loſt 2000 men, killed and wounded, among the former of whom was the comte of Zuyleſtein, and the French about 1000: 8 miles W. Utrecht, and 15 S. Amſterdam.

WOGGT, a river of Germany, which runs into the Ager, near Voglabruck, in the archduchy of Auſtria.

WOGSHAID, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 7 miles SW. Aigen.

WOHLAU, a principality of Sileſia, bounded on the north by the principalities of Glogau, on the eaſt by Poland and the principality of Oels, on the ſouth by the principalities of Breſlaw and Lignitz, and on the weſt by the principalities of Lignitz and Glogau, ſituated on both ſides of the Oder. The ſoil is in ſome parts dry, in others marſhy, or overrun with woods and buſhes, though ſeveral tracts alſo yield good corn.

WHOLAU, a town of Sileſia, and capital of a principality, on all ſides ſurrounded with marſhes, which are a kind of natural defence. It has two ſuburbs, a Roman Catholic and a Lutheran church. In the year 1640, it was taken by the Swedes; in the year 1642, ſurpriſed by the Imperialiſts, but ſoon retaken by the Swedes; and in 1644, recovered by the Imperialiſts: 20 miles NW. Breſlau, and 29 SE. Gros Glogau.

WOLFDORF, a town of Bohemia, in the circle of Leitmeritz: 7 miles N. Kamnitz.

WOLFENBUTTEL, a principality of Germany, which conſtitutes a part of the duchy of Brunſwick, divided into two parts by the principality of Halberſtadt, and the dioceſe of Hildeſheim. The north part is ſurrounded on the north by the principality of Luneburg and the marquiſate of Brandenburg, on the eaſt by the duchy of Magdeburg, on the ſouth by the principality of Halberſtadt, and on the weſt by the dioceſe of Hildeſheim. The ſouth part is bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Hildeſheim and the principality of Calenberg, on the eaſt by the dioceſe of Hildeſheim and the Harz Foreſt, on the ſouth by the principality of Grubenhagen and Calenberg, and on the weſt by the territories of the abby of Corvey and Calenberg. The eaſtern half contains under it a part of the Harz Foreſt, the mines and ſalt-works which the prince holds in common with the elector of Brunſwick Luneburg. In the weſtern half of this ſouthern part is a part of the foreſt of Sollinger, conſiſting of oak and beech, with a chain of mountains, covered with woods. Thus the ſouthern part of the principality conſiſts chiefly of hills and woods, with little arable land; but, on the other hand, has a great plenty of timber, iron, and glaſs-houſes, the manufactures of which are greatly admired, particularly thoſe of looking-glaſs, with a fine porcelaine manufacture, and the very rich mine and ſalt-works in the Harz Foreſt. The north part of the principality is more level, and produces abundance of grain, flax, and hemp, together with various kinds of pulſe and fruit. Their graſiery here turns to very good account, beſides which it has a ſalt-work. The culture of ſilk is now followed, and premiums are aſſigned by the prince for the encouragement of it. The Weſer, the Leine, the Inner See, and the Ocker, are the principal rivers. In this principality are 18 towns, 386 villages, and 17 ſees and convents. The eſtabliſhed religion here is Lutheraniſm. The country of Brunſwick was anciently under lords of its own, who poſſeſſed it as their abſolute and hereditary property, and derived their lineage from Ludolphus, duke of Saxony; and, conſequently, by his grandmother Haſala, or Giſela, from duke Wittkind, whoſe daughter ſhe was. From King Henry I. grandſon of this Ludolphus, was deſcended his ſon, Henry, duke of Bavaria, among whoſe iſſue was count Bruno, on whom the emperor Otho conferred a tract of land in Saxony, near Brunſwick, namely, Melverode and Hohenwart. Count Bruno, his ſon, enlarged Brunſwick; and his ſon, count Ludolphus, on the demiſe of the emperor, Henry II. was the firſt that obtained the full ſovereignty over Brunſwick and Tankwarderode, and died in the year 1038. His ſon, Egbert I. became marggrave of Thuringia and Miſnia, and his ſon Egbert II. likewiſe attained to thoſe dignities. This laſt prince being killed in battle, in the year 1091, his ſiſter Gertrude, ſucceeded to the country of Brunſwick, which country ſhe brought to her ſecond huſband, Henry the Fat, count of Nordheim; and by their daughter, Richenza, it came to her huſband, Lothario, count of Supplinburg, and afterwards emperor. By his daughter, Gertrude, it deſcended to her huſband, Henry the Magnanimous, duke of Bavaria and Saxony, and thus to the Houſe of Welpho. The principality of Wolfenbuttel is poſſeſſed of a vote among the princes, both in the college of the princes of the empire, and likewiſe in the diet of Lower Saxony, in each of which, by virtue of an agreement concluded in the year 1706, when the ſeniority lies in the Houſe of Brunſwick Wolfenbuttel, it precedes thoſe of the elector of Brunſwick and Luneburg, for Zell, Grubenhagen, and Calenberg, but otherwiſe comes after them; farther, the Houſe of Wolfenbuttel, when ſenior, obtains the joint-directory of the circle of Lower Saxony. The taxation of this principality, in the matricula of the empire and circle, is 22½ horſe, and 105 foot, or 1734 florins; and the tax to the Imperial chamber, 178 rixdollars 36 kruitzers: he has the ſame right as the elector of Brunſwick, to diſpute an aſſeſſor in the revenue court.

WOLFENBUTTEL, a city of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and capital of a principality of the ſame name, ſituated in a low marſhy ſoil, on the Ocker: it is well built and fortified. In it is a château, a long time the reſidence of the dukes, in which is a noble library, containing 120,000 volumes of printed books and manuſcripts. The principal church contains the ſepulchral monument of the dukes. Wolfenbuttel very probably owes its name to the firſt builder of the palace, called Wolf, or Wolfer, or Wolfhand. The Imperialiſts were in poſſeſſion of it from the year 1626 to the year 1643. In the year 1757, it was taken by the French, who abandoned it the year following. This city was again taken by the French in the year 1761: 24 miles E. Hildeſheim, and 45 W. Magdeburg. Long. 28. 8. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 13. N.

WOLLER, or Wooller, a town of England, in the county of Northumberland, on the river Till, near the Cheviot Hills, with a weekly market on Thurſday: 32 miles N. Morpeth, and 318 N. London.—In a plain near this town the Scots, under the command of earl Douglas, were defeated by lord Percy and earl March, on Holyrood day, 1402. The battle was ſo bloody, that it gave the name of Redriggs, to the place where it was fought.

WOLLERSTORFF, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 5 miles WNW. Newſtatt.

WOLLIEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Ucker Mark of Brandenburg: 10 miles ESE. Prenzlow.

WOLLIN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Anterior Pomerania, on the eaſt coaſt of the iſland ſo called, ſeparated from the continent of Pomerania, by the river Direnow, over which is a bridge, at which all travellers pay a toll. In this town is a ſeat and prefecturate. It ſtands on the ſide of the ancient city of Julin, which was formerly ſo famous for its commerce, though its origin is very obſcure. The firſt mention of this city in hiſtory, occurs immediately after the time of Charlemagne, and in the 11th century its proſperity was ſuch, that Adam von Bremen ſpeaks of it as the largeſt city, at that time in Europe. So early as the records of the 12th century, it is called Wolin. In the year 1127, it was ſet on fire by lightning, and being built of wood, was entirely conſumed. The Pomeranian biſhopric, which had been erected there but two years before, was tranſlated upon that to Uſedom, but on the rebuilding of the city, was reſtored to it. In the year 1170, being taken by Waldemar I. king of Denmark, and Jaromar I. prince of Rugen, it was ſacked and burned; and after retrieving this calamity, was in the year 1175, again ſet on fire, and utterly deſtroyed, inſomuch, that, in the very ſame year the duke of Pomerania removed the biſhopric to Cammin. It was indeed rebuilt again, but never recovered its former greatneſs: 25 miles N. Old Steffiny. Long. 32. 23. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. 47. N.

WOLLIN, an iſland formed at the mouth of the Oder, between the Baltic and the Friſche Haff; the form of an irregular triangle, about 30 miles in circumference. This iſland is frequently in danger of being overflowed, and the ſea-winds hurt it conſiderably, by throwing up drifts of ſand. It produces excellent cattle, with plenty of game and fiſh, and one part of it, called the Pritier, is remarkable for the great quantity of eels taken there. Beſides the town of Wollin, it contains ſeveral villages.

WOLLO, a town of Africa, on the Ivory Coaſt.

WOLMERSTADT, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and principality of Magdeburg. In the year 1642, this town was ſet on fire by the Imperial troops: 10 miles N. Magdeburg.

WOOD'S BAY, a bay on the coaſt of South America, in the Straits of Magellan: about 5 leagues W. Cape Froward.

WOOD'S ISLAND, a ſmall iſland near the north coaſt of the iſland of Jamaica. Long. 76. 8. W. Greenwich. Lat. 18. 12. N.

WOODSTOCK, a town of England, in the county of Oxford, anciently a royal ſeat. King Ethelred is ſaid to have held a council here, and enacted laws. King Henry I. is ſaid to have walled the park round; and Henry II. built here a labyrinth, to ſecrete his miſtreſs, the fair Roſamond Clifford. It is now much more famous for the parliamentary ſettlement of the honour and manor of the town and hundred on the duke of Marlborough, and his deſcendants, as a reward for his victories, in the year 1704, over the French and Bavarians, at Schellemberg, &c. particularly at Blenheim; to perpetuate the memory of which battle, a ſtately palace, by the name of Blenheim-Houſe, was erected here, at the public charge. The duke's deſcendants are obliged, by way of homage for the tenure of it, to preſent a ſtandard to the ſovereign, yearly, on the ſecond of Auguſt, on which the battle at Blenheim was fought. Woodſtock has a weekly market on Tueſday, and ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament: 8 miles N. Oxford, and 62 NW. London.

WOODSTOCK, a town of the United States of America, in Connecticut: 57 miles SW. Boſton, and 24 N. Norwich.

WOODY HEAD, a high cape on the coaſt of New Zealand, in the South Pacific Ocean. Lat. 37. 42. S.

WOODY ISLAND, an iſland in the Eaſtern Indian Sea. Long. 106. 5. E. Greenwich. Lat. 1. 46. N.

WOODY POINT, a cape on the weſt coaſt of North America. Long. 128. W. Greenwich. Lat. 50. N.

WOOLLEY WOOLLEY, a town of Africa, in the kingdom of Yani.

WOOLLY, or Ouly, a kingdom of Africa, ſituated on the north ſide of the Gambia.

WOOLPIT, a town of England, in the county of Suffolk: 8 miles E. Bury St. Edmond's, and 80 NNE. London.

WOOLWICH, a town of England, in the county of Kent, ſituated on the right bank of the Thames. It was formerly only a ſmall village, inhabited by a few fiſhermen; but, for upwards of two centuries, there has been a royal dock-yard at this place, in which are employed about the ſame number of workmen as at at Deptford; and it is, like Deptford, under the immediate direction of the navy-board. This is ſaid to be the moſt ancient naval arſenal in England; or, as the learned Camden ſays, to have a right, by ſeniority, to have the title of Mother Dock to all the king's-yards. As a proof of it, he mentions the ſhip Harry Grâce de Dieu, having been built here as early as the third of Henry VIII. in the year 1539. On the eaſtern, or lower part of the town, is the Gun Park, in which are great quantities of cannon and mortars, of every ſize and dimenſion; and ſo diſtinguiſhed is this arſenal, that there has been depoſited here, at one time, between 7000 and 8000 pieces of ordnance, beſides mortars and ſhells almoſt innumerable. The ordnance forms a conſiderable part of the buſineſs tranſacted for government at this place. Under the military branch is the Warren, where artillery, of all kinds and dimenſions, are caſt, and frequently proved before the principal engineers and officers of the board of ordnance, at which many of the nobility and gentry often attend. The gunpowder, purchaſed by contract, is here proved, as to its ſtrength and goodneſs. Here is alſo a laboratory, where the matroſſes are employed in the compoſition of fire-works and cartridges, and in charging bombs, carcaſes, grenadoes, &c. for public ſervice. A royal academy is here eſtabliſhed, under the board of ordnance, for the inſtruction and qualifying of young gentlemen, intended as candidates for the office of engineer in the military branch of that office: theſe are called cadets, and are appointed by that board. They are taught in the principles and art of fortification, and every branch of military ſcience relating thereto, with the French and Latin languages, writing, fencing, and drawing. They are under the immediate direction of a governor, lieutenant-governor, and maſters in each reſpective branch of literature. A part of the pariſh of Woolwich lies on the Eſſex ſhore. The cauſe of this diviſion cannot be aſcertained; but that the river might be diverted out of its ancient channel after a flood, is no improbable ſuppoſition. In the ſeventeenth of Edward II. a commiſſion of ſewers was iſſued for repairing a very great breach made by the overflowing of the Thames into the marſhes between Woolwich and Greenwich; but, if it was an inundation that occaſioned the ſeparation of the land abovementioned, there is ſufficient reaſon to conclude it was of an earlier date. Harris relates his having ſeen an old MS. which ſet the number of acres at 500, and noticed a few houſes, and a chapel of eaſe. At high-water, the Thames is about a mile broad at Woolwich, and the water brackiſh. As the channel lies direct eaſt and weſt for about three miles, the tide is ſtrong, and the river being free from ſhoals and ſands, and ſeven or eight fathoms deep, the largeſt ſhips may at all hours ride here with ſafety. Here is a market on Friday: 10 miles E. London.

WORBIS, or Stadt Worbis, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and territory of Eichsfeld, on the Wipper: 8 miles SSE. Duderſtadt, and 38 NE. Erfurt.

WORBIS (Breiten), a town of Germany, in the circle of the Lower Rhine, and territory of Eichsfeld: 9 miles SE. Duderſtadt.

WORBITZ SEE, a lake of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and Ucker Mark of Brandenburg. 28 miles NNE. Berlin, and near Joachimſthal.

WORBSTADT, a town of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and county of Salm: 10 miles SSW. Mentz, and 14 E. Creutznach.

WORCESTER, a county of United America, in the ſtate of Maryland.

WORCESTER, a city of England, capital of a county to which it gives name, and ſee of a biſhop, ſituated on the river Severn, over which a new bridge has been built within about thirty years. The judicious continuator of Camden thinks Worceſter had no ſhare in Roman tranſactions, but that it was called Caer Guarongon by the Britons. It was erected into a biſhopric, in the year 680. In the year 1041, it was ſacked and burned by Hardicanute the Dane, who put all the inhabitants to the ſword, except thoſe who ſaved themſelves in an iſland in the Severn, becauſe the citizens had killed the officer appointed to collect the tax called Danegelt: it however ſoon after recovered, and in Edward the Confeſſor's reign, had many burgeſſes, and a mint. In the year 1113, an accidental fire conſumed the caſtle, and much damaged the cathedral. In the wars which happened in the reign of Stephen, it was more than once ſet on fire, but chiefly ſuffered when taken by Stephen from the earl of Mellent. In the cathedral, is the tomb of king John, ſuppoſed to be the oldeſt royal monument remaining in England; he was buried in the choir, between two biſhops. Near this city, in the year 1651, a battle was fought between Charles II. and Cromwell, which proved a deciſive blow to royalty. Charles, after beholding the ruin of his cauſe, and giving many proofs of perſonal valour, was obliged to have recourſe to flight. The duke of Hamilton, who made a deſperate reſiſtance, was mortally wounded, and the Scots were almoſt all either killed or taken. The priſoners, to the number of 8000, were ſold as ſlaves to the American planters. The principal manufacture of Worceſter is that of gloves, with one of elegant China-ware. Worceſter is large, populous, and well built. Beſides the cathedral, it contains nine pariſh churches, about 2000 houſes, and a public infirmary. It is a county of itſelf, and by a charter of James I. is governed by a mayor, ſix aldermen, ſheriff, recorder, &c. Here are three markets weekly, on Monday, Wedneſday, and Friday, and two members are returned to the Britiſh parliament: 59 miles N. Briſtol, and 120 WNW. London.

WORCESTER, a town of the United States of America, in Maſſachuſetts: 34 miles W. Boſton, and 135 NE. New York.

WORCESTERSHIRE, a county of England, bounded on the north by Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, on the eaſt by Warwickſhire, on the ſouth by Glouceſterſhire, and on the weſt by Herefordſhire and Shropſhire. Its figure is very irregular; and it is remarkable for having ſeveral detached portions ſprinkled about the neighbouring counties; a conſequence, probably, of its having no natural boundaries. Its meaſurements, on this account, can ſcarcely be ſtated, but the greateſt length may be about 30 miles, and breadth about 20. It is divided into ſix hundreds, which contain one city (Worceſter), ten towns, and 152 pariſhes: the number of inhabitants is eſtimated at 70,000. The principal rivers are the Severn, which paſſes through a rich vale in its whole length, the Teme, the Avon, the Stour, and the Arrow. Beſides the vale in which the Severn flows, is another, called The Vale of Eveſham, on the banks of the Avon, which flows along the ſouth eaſtern parts of the county in its courſe to meet the Severn. Beſides the uſual objects of agriculture, great quantities of garden-ſtuff are here grown, and ſent to the towns around, to a conſiderable diſtance. In this vale, fell Simon de Montfort, with many of his party, under the arms of prince Edward, ſon of Henry III. in the barons' war againſt that king. The products of Worceſterſhire, beſides the common ones of corn and cattle, are fine wool, hops, cyder, and perry; the latter, eſpecially, is in great reputation. A large quantity of the whiteſt ſalt is made from the brine-ſprings at Droitwich, and ſent to Briſtol and other places. The Severn in this county and Glouceſterſhire abounds with lampreys, which by ſome are much valued as a delicacy. In the Malvern Hills, a ſpring riſes of uncommon purity, which is much reſorted to in ſcrophulous and ſcorbutic caſes. After the Britons were driven out by the Saxons, they retired beyond the Severn, and defended their new territories againſt the encroaching conquerors; ſo that this county, with the others through which that large river runs, were for a long time the frontiers between the two people, and, indeed, it has been ſuppoſed, that moſt of the great cities on the eaſt ſide of the Severn and Dee were built by the Romans or Saxons, or both, againſt the Britons. The towns are Bewdley, Droitwich, Dudley, Eveſham, Kidderminſter, Perſhore, Shipſton, Stout bridge, Tenbury, and Upton: the city of Worceſter, and the county with the towns of Droitwich and Eveſham, each ſend two members to th Britiſh parliament; Bewdley returns one.

WORCUM, a town of Holland, ſituated on the ſouth ſide of the Wahal, firſt ſurrounded with walls, in 1460, and defended with four baſtions. This city belonged to the comtes of Horne; but Philip de Montmorency, comte of Horne, having been beheaded at Bruſſels, in the year 1568, without leaving any children, his widow ſold it to the States-General for 90,000 florins: 13 miles ENE. Dort, and 16 NNE. Breda.

WORCUM, a ſea-port town of Friezeland, ſituated in a fertile country, but ſubject to inundations of the ſea, eſpecially, when the wind blows from the eaſt. The harbour is blocked up with ſand, but it carries on a conſiderable trade by means of its canals: 18 miles SW. Lewarden. Long. 22. 48. E. Ferro. Lat. 53. N.

WORDEN, a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Holſtein, on the right ſide of the Elbe: 10 miles NW. Gluckſtadt.

WORDEN (Groſſen), a town of Germany, in the circle of Lower Saxony, and duchy of Bremen: 10 miles NNW. from Stade.

WORDENBERG, a mountain of Germany, in the duchy of Stiria: 6 miles SSE. Eiſenhartz.

WORDINGBERG, a ſeaport of Denmark, ſituated on the ſouth coaſt of the iſland of Zealand, oppoſite the iſland of Falſter. In the year 1066, Waldemar I. built a ſtrong caſtle here, which is now gone to decay. Waldemar III. who was exceedingly fond of this place, reſided here for the moſt part, and in deriſion of the Hanſe towns, built the well-known tower, which, from a golden gooſe erected on the top of it, he called Gans, that is, The Gooſe. In this tower he purpoſed to confine the priſoners of the Hanſe towns that ſhould fall into the hands in the war he intended to carry on againſt them. As the old caſtle gradually fell to decay, prince George, who was brother to Chriſtian V. and married to Ann, queen of England, built here an entire new caſtle, which Frederick IV. afterwards enlarged; but that edifice has been pulled down. The uſual paſſage to the iſlands, Falſter and Laaland, is from this place. In the year 1240, at a famous diet held here, the Old Juſtiſche Low-buck, or Codex Legum Juticarum, was compiled and promulgated: this body of laws is ſtill in force in South Jutland. In the year 1256, another diet was held here; and, in the year 1658, preliminaries for a peace between Denmark and Sweden were treated of in this town: 43 miles SW. Copenhagen, and 13 SSE. Neſtved. Long. 11. 58. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 3. N.

WORE, ſee Wyre.

WORKINGTON, a village of England, in the county of Cumberland, ſituated near the coaſt of the Iriſh Sea. The harbour admits veſſels of conſiderable burthen, and large quantities of coals are exported; near 100 veſſels are employed: 7 miles N. Whitehaven, and 307 NNW. London. Lat. 54. 35. N.

WORKSBORN, a river of England, in the county of Northumberland, which runs into the North Tine.

WORLITZ, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and electorate of Saxony: 5 miles E. Deſſau.

WORKSOP, a town of England, in the county of Nottingham, with a weekly market on Wedneſday, near a canal, which runs from Cheſterfield to the Trent: 18 miles S. Sheffield, and 146 N. London.

WORMS, a biſhopric of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, ſurrounded by the Lower Palatinate, the county of Katzenelnbogen, and the electorate of Mentz; about ten miles in length along the borders of the Rhine. In ancient times, the Vangiones inhabited this diſtrict. In the middle ages, it was called Wormbſveld, Wormatzfeld, or Wormſergau, and one of the biſhops, named Victor, is ſaid to have aſſiſted at a council at Cologn, in the year 347. Of the ancient biſhops here, however, we have little certainty. The ſeries of the prelates of Worms, which may be moſt depended on, begins with Erembert, who was appointed biſhop thereof about the year 770. The biſhop of Worms is ſubject to the archbiſhopric of Mentz. In the circle of the Upper Rhine, he is the ſummoning prince and director. In the council of the princes of the empire, he exchanges place on the ſpiritual bench with the elector of Wurzburg. His matricular evaluation is two horſe and thirteen foot, or 76 florins, and to one chamber-term he gives 50 rix-dollars 64 kruitzers.

WORMS, an imperial city of Germany, in the circle of the Upper Rhine, and capital of a biſhopric of the ſame name, anciently the capital of the Vangiones. It is ſituated nearly in the centre of the dioceſe to which it gives name, not far from the Rhine, and near the place where the Eiſbach and Gieſſenbach fall into it. This city has undergone many misfortunes, for, to omit its fires, earthquakes, and other calamities, in the year 407, it was deſtroyed by the Vandals; in the years 451 and 938 by the Huns; in 891, by the Normans; and, in 1689, by the French. The magiſtracy here is Lutheran, and the city itſelf is accounted one of the free Lutheran imperial cities, with toleration and freedom of worſhip to the Catholics. The Calviniſts have alſo a church here. To the Catholics belong not only the cathedral, which, ſince its deſtruction by the French, has been rebuilt, but likewiſe four collegiate, and the like number of pariſh-churches in or near the city, a college, a gymnaſium, three convents, and three nunneries. The biſhop's palace here was built quite new, in the year 1719, at the expence of biſhop Francis Louis. The kings of the Francs appointed counts and dukes over it. From time immemorial it has been termed a free imperial city, and is ſo ſtyled in ſome records of the emperor Charles IV. bearing date in the years 1355 and 1356, and in the regiſter of the cities of 1386, and was alſo acknowledged ſuch in the year 1479, in the diet at Nurenberg; and by the emperor Maximilian I. in formal inſtruments of the years 1507 and 1508. Its matricular aſſeſſment to the empire is 75 florins, and to the chamber at Wetzlar it pays 118 florins 34 kruitzers. In the years 1495, 1521, 1545, and 1578, diets were held here, and this was the place in which the reformation began, in the year 1525. In the year 1743, a treaty was concluded here betwixt his Britannic majeſty, the queen of Hungary, and the king of Sardinia. In the year 1792, Worms ſurrendered to a detachment of the French republican army, and was laid under a heavy contribution by Cuſtine, but evacuated after the loſs of Mentz. It was again taken in the year 1794: 25 miles S. Mentz, and 82 ESE. Treves. Long. 25. 57. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 36 N.

WURTEMBERG (Duchy of), a principality of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, bounded on the north by the biſhopric of Spire, the palatinate of the Rhine, the county of Hohenlohe, and territories of the city of Hall, in Swabia, on the eaſt by the county of Limburg, the territories of the Imperial towns Gemund and Ulm, and the county of Oettingen, on the ſouth by Auſtrian Swabia, the territories of Furſtenberg, Zwifalten, Rothweil, and the Briſgau, and on the weſt by the marquiſates of Baden Baden, and Baden Durlach: about 64 miles from north to ſouth, and about as much from eaſt to weſt. This dukedom conſiſts of a great number of counties and lordſhips, ſome of which were purchaſed, ſome devolved to it by marriage, and others were acquired by conqueſt. It is beyond diſpute the moſt conſiderable and fertile part of the circle of Swabia, and, may indeed, be ſaid, to be one of the beſt countries in all Germany. From its natural diſpoſition, the country conſiſts of three tracts, which are all remarkably different. Of theſe the loweſt and warmeſt is the north, called Unterland, reaching from Heilbronn to Stuttgard. This duchy abounds ſo in grain, that it exports conſiderable quantities; but this grain is chiefly ſpelt; rye and wheat being much leſs cultivated here. Of all the other ſorts of grain, however, here is alſo a ſufficiency. Flax and hemp are alſo cultivated, and the former of theſe thrives beſt in the cold parts. The vallies, ſome of which are 7 or 8 miles in length, are covered as it were with foreſts of fruit-trees, of which there is no ſcarcity in the other parts of this country, cider and perry being the liquors drank in common by the country people, when wine happens to be dear. This duchy abounds likewiſe in very rich, palatable, and wholeſome wines, called by the general name of Neckar wines, though each has a particular title of its own, which it receives from the parts where it grows. The grapes alſo, which yield the beſt wines, bear the appellation of the countries, whence the ſets were firſt brought, as the Chiavenna, Valteline, Tyroleſe, and Hungarian. The vineyards of the duchy of Wurtemberg have been greatly improved by ſhoots from France, Italy, Greece, Hungary, Cyprus, and even Schiras, in Perſia. The cultivation of ſilk was revived under duke Charles. The foreſts of this country are conſiderably leſſened. The conſumption of oak, in particular, has been very large. Moſt parts of the country abound in game, near Frudenſtadt, and near Konigſwart, are mines of ſilver and copper. Of minerals, the Terra ſigillata, which is reckoned preferable to that of Malta, and a fine clay for earthenware, as alſo porcelain, which is worked at Calw; fine variegated marbles, ſome of which are equal to thoſe of Italy, and remarkably tranſparent alabaſter, agate, cryſtalline pebbles, black amber, fine mill-ſtones, &c. Among the baths in Wurtemburg, the moſt celebrated is that of the Wildbad. The principal rivers are the Neckar, the Enz, and the Nagold. The number of inhabitants in this duchy, is known to preciſion, an exact enquiry being made every year, by the general ſuperintendants, and reported to the annual ſynod. In the year 1754, were numbered 477,115 ſouls, and they have hitherto been obſerved to increaſe. In the duchy are 68 cities and towns, with about 1200 boroughs, market-towns, villages, and hamlets. The eſtabliſhed religion of this country is Lutheraniſm, and though duke Charles Alexander embraced the Roman, yet in the years 1729, 1732, and 1733, he gave aſſurances to the States, in formal inſtruments, that no change or innovation ſhould be made in the Lutheran religion, in any part of the whole duchy, and that in all the churches and ſchools throughout the duchy, and the countries thereto belonging, no other religion than that of Lutheraniſm ſhould be taught; that no new Catholic churches, chapels, altars, or images, ſhould be erected or ſet up, nor any ſuch as were decayed or forſaken again uſed. The Calviniſts only are tolerated here, and their place of worſhip at Stuttgard is a private houſe. In this duchy are alſo ſome Waldenſes, who are either huſbandmen or farmers, and live in the Italian villages, as they are called, ſome few towns alone excepted; where they have eſtabliſhed manufactures of hats and ſtockings, and are allowed the public exerciſe of their religion. The toleration of the Jews here, was aboliſhed by an edict of duke Chriſtopher, that of two or three families at Stuttgard excepted, under the particular protection of the court. The origin of the princely houſe, is ſomewhat obſcure and uncertain. It is certain however, that there were counts of Wurtemberg, at the beginning of the 12th century. The Wurtemberg inheritance had frequently been divided, but the laſt diviſion of it, was in the year 1442, betwixt the counts Lewis and Ulrich. In the year 1473, the ſeveral counts of Wurtemberg then living, entered into a compact, for eſtabliſhing the rights of primogenitureſhip, and indiviſibility of the Wurtemberg territories. This compact was ratified, in the year 1482, by the convention at Munzingen, as the fundamental law of Wurtemberg; and in the year 1484, received the ſanction of the emperor Frederick III. In the years 1485, 1486, and 1489, it was confirmed by new compacts, and particularly, in the year 1490, by the ratification of the ſtates of the country, and the Swabian confederacy. In the year 1495, the emperor Maximilian conferred on his ſucceſſor count Eberhard I. the title of duke; and again ratified the indiviſibility of the country, and the right of primogenitureſhip in it. By the convention of Prague, in the year 1599, the reverſion of the duchy of Wurtemberg was ceded to the houſe of Auſtria, who, by virtue of this ceſſion, aſſumed its title and arms; but the ducal houſe of Wurtemberg maintains, that this reverſion became void in the year 1740, by the deceaſe of the emperor Charles VI. The dukes are hereditary ſtandard-bearers, and alſo grand huntſmen of the empire; and, in alluſion to the laſt honour, duke Eberhard Louis, in the year 1702, founded the order of hunting; and in the year 1719, renewed and increaſed its ſtatutes, the reigning duke of Wurtemberg being always grand maſter. The aſſeſſment in the matricula of the empire is 1828 florins; to the Imperial chamber at Wetzlar, the duchy pays 953 rixdollars 53½ kruitzers. Stuttgart is the capital; the caſtle of Wurtemberg, which gives name to the duchy, is ſituated 4 miles E. from Stuttgart.

WURZBACH, a river of Germany, in the circle of Swabia, which runs into the Klein Enz, near Culmbach, in the marggraviate of Baden.

WURZBURG, a princely biſhopric of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, bounded on the north by the county of Henneberg and principality of Coburg, on the eaſt by the biſhopric of Bamberg, the marggraviate of Anſpach, and the county of Caſtel; on the ſouth by the county of Hohenlohe, and on the weſt by the maſterſhip of Mergentheim, county of Wertheim, electorate of Mentz, and the biſhopric of Fulda; about 80 miles in length, and 64 in breadth. The biſhopric of Wurzburg is fertile in corn, paſtures, and divers ſorts of fruits and plants, as alſo in wine, the very beſt Franconian vines growing in it. The prevailing religion is the Roman Catholic; but there are alſo Lutheran and Calviniſt churches within the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction and territory of Wurzburg, which from time to time, prefer to the diets of the empire grievous complaints of oppreſſion and injuſtice. In the 16th century, this biſhopric abounded with Proteſtant inhabitants. Biſhop Kilian came, about the year 686, for the firſt time, to Wurzburg, where at that time reſided Gozbert, duke of Thuringia, whom he baptized in the year 687; but the biſhopric was not founded here till the year 741. The biſhops of Wurzburg began, towards the middle of the 15th century, to ſtyle themſelves dukes of Frankenland; and it is generally held that biſhop Godfrey was the firſt who made uſe of that title, and ſucceeding biſhops have retained it. The biſhops of Wurzburg cauſed a naked ſword to be carried before them. In the year 1752, pope Benedict XIV. granted them the privileges of bearing the archiepiſcopal pall and croſs; but in other reſpects they are ſuffragans to the archbiſhops of Mentz. The Imperial matricular evaluation of this biſhopric amounts to 850 florins; to the chamber-term it pays 826 rixdollars. The epiſcopal revenues are eſtimated at 400,000 or 500,000 guldens. This prince and biſhop maintains five regiments of foot and horſe, military affairs being ſubject to the aulic council of war.

WURZBURG, a city of Germany, in the circle of Franconia, and capital of a biſhopric of the ſame name, and reſidence of the biſhop. It is ſituated on the Maine, well fortified, and defended by a fortreſs, ſituated on a rock without the town; in which fortreſs is an epiſcopal palace, and a church, ſuppoſed to be the oldeſt in Franconia. The town is divided into four quarters and four ſuburbs, in which are, a new epiſcopal palace, built in the beginning of the preſent century, a cathedral, ſeveral collegiate and pariſh churches, colleges, abbies, and convents. The univerſity was founded in the year 1403; and, after falling to decay, reſtored again in the year 1582. The foundation of the town is uncertain; it was anciently the reſidence of certain dukes of Thuringia. In the year 1631, it was taken by the Swedes: 50 miles ESE. Frankfort on the Maine, and 66 ENE. Mentz. Long. 27. 36. E. Ferro. Lat. 49. 43. N.—In the month of Auguſt, 1796, this city was taken by the French, and retaken by the Auſtrians in the beginning of the following month.

WURZEN, or Wurtzen, a town of Germany, in the circle of Upper Saxony, and territory of Leipſic; the bailiwick of which extends over 76 villages, and 22 noble eſtates; anciently the ſee of a biſhop, but in the year 1661, the eſtates of the foundation were annexed to the Leipſic circle. The town is ſituated on the Mulda; though not large itſelf, is much increaſed by its fauxbourgs, which contain the citadel and cathedral. The beer brewed here is the chief article of trade, and is exported in great quantities: 14 miles E. Leipſic, and 44 NW. Dreſden. Long. 30. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 51. 19. N.

YARMOUTH, or Great Yarmouth, a ſea-port town of England, in the county of Norfolk, ſituated at the mouth of the Yare, ſuppoſed by Camden, to have riſen from the ruins of Garianomum ; built by the Saxons at ſome diſtance from that town. In the reign of William I. it had ſeventy burgeſſes. It was ſurrounded with walls in the year 1340 ; and in a little time became ſo powerful at ſea, as frequently to attack their neighbours of Loweſtoff and the Cinque-ports, with great loſs on both ſides. The royal authority was at laſt exerted to put a ſtop to this turbulent ſpirit : and a plague, which carried of 7000 people in one year, ſo humbled their ſpirit, that they applied themſelves to trade inſtead of warfare, and fitted out veſſels for the herring fiſhery ; which now employs about 150 veſſels, of 40 to 50 tons ; the fiſhing ſeaſon begins at Michaelmas, and continues to the end of October, during which time, all the veſſels that come to fiſh for the merchants of any part of England, are allowed to ſell their fiſh duty free, and 50,000 barrels of herrings are generally taken and cured in one year. The quay is handſome and convenient. The roads eaſt of the town, within the dangerous ſands and banks of the offing, are much frequented, though ſhips are frequently caſt away there : large ſums of money are expended yearly, to clear the harbour from the accumulating ſand and mud : the ſea-coaſt is for two miles each way, nearly a level common, about 8 feet above high-water mark : the tides do not riſe above 6 feet. YEMEN, a province of Arabia, comprehending the fineſt and moſt fertile part of Arabia, is ſurrounded by the Red Sea, and by the provinces of Hadramaut, Nejed, and Hedjas. Yemen is naturally divided into two parts, differing greatly in ſoil and climate: that bordering on the Red Sea is a dry and ſandy plain, nearly two days' journey in breadth, and is ſcorched by the moſt torrid heats; the other, extending immediately beyond this, is a high-lying country, full of precipitous, yet fertile hills, and enjoying a much more temperate air. Yemen is, like the reſt of Arabia, parcelled out among a number of different ſovereigns, in unequal portions. Some of them are princes of conſiderable power; but many are petty ſchiechs, who are, however, perfectly independent: the moſt conſiderable of thoſe princes is the imam, who reſides at Sana. There are ſeveral other independent ſtates, as Aden, Kaukeban, Kobail, or Haſchid-u-Bekil, Abu Ariſch, a large diſtrict between Abu-Ariſch and Hedjas, inhabited by free Bedouins; Khaulan, Sahan, comprehending the principality of Saade, Nedsjerau; Kachtau, Nehhm, Eaſt Khautan, Jafa, and ſeveral others. The ſame intermixture of fertile and barren territory, and the ſame productions, appear every where through the whole province: the imam, however, ſeems to be maſter of the richeſt, the moſt agreeable, and the moſt intereſting part of this tract of country. It would not be eaſy to explain, diſtinctly, the extent and limits of this ſovereign's territories, as they are ſo interſected by the domains of a number of petty princes. The general diviſion of Yemen into Tehama, the Lowlands, and Djebar, the Highlands, obtains in the imam's dominions, as well as elſewhere. Upon this grand diviſion depends the ſubdiviſion of the kingdom of Sana into 30 governments or countries. Tehama contains ſix of theſe governments, and the Highland country 24: theſe ſmall governments are not all alike populous, or remarkable. There are in the territory of the imam many ſchiechs diſperſed among the mountains, who acknowledge not his authority, and are but in a very ſlight degree dependent upon him. From the expulſion of the Turks, in the year 1630, the reign of the imams began: their great anceſtor Khaſſem Abu Mahomed, was the chief author of that revolution. The throne of Yemen is hereditary; if generally approved of by the ſubjects, the eldeſt legitimate ſon of an imam is his rightful ſucceſſor. But in the deſpotic governments of the eaſt, indeed no order can be cloſely obſerved, becauſe there are no fundamental laws. The imam is an abſolute prince, and the more ſo by uniting in his own perſon ſupreme authority, both ſpiritual and temporal, over his ſubjects. His juriſdiction in eccleſiaſtical matters, however, extends not over the dominions of other ſovereigns of the ſame ſect: theſe ſtates have each a mufti, or cadi, for its ſpiritual uſe. Although the imam be abſolute, he is checked in the exerciſe of his authority by the ſupreme tribunal of Sana, of which he is only preſident: this tribunal, conſiſting of a certain number of kadis, poſſeſſes the ſole power of life and death. The imam may not order any of his ſubjects for execution, but ſuch as have been condemned in conſequence of a criminal proſecution before this court. The kadis are generally eſteemed to be perſons of incorruptible integrity, of blameleſs lives, and devoted to the faithful diſcharge of their duties: they are not changed here ſo often as in Turkey, but hold their offices uſually for life. Every petty diſtrict in the dominions of the imam has its governor, if not a prince, of one of the higher nobility; this governor is called wali and dola, or ſometimes emir, when he happens to be a perſon of low birth. In every little town, a ſub-dola, with a ſmall garriſon, conſiſting ſometimes of only five or ſix ſoldiers, reſides, to maintain order. The chief of a large village is a ſchiech; he of a ſmall one, a hakin. Every city in which a dola reſides, has alſo a kadi, dependent on the chief kadi of Sana; the kadi is ſole judge in civil and eccleſiaſtical affairs, nor may the dola interfere to contradict his ſentences, or render them inefficacious. The kadis in the provinces, no leſs than in the capital, are in high reputation for wiſdom and integrity. The manufactures of a people of ſo little induſtry, cannot but be very trifling: no ſabres are manufactured in Yemen, nor any edged weapon, except a kind of crooked knives, called jambea. The making of match firelocks has been here attempted within theſe few years; it ſucceeds but indifferently. It is only of late that glaſs-works have been eſtabliſhed at Mocha; ſome coarſe cloth is manufactured here, but not ſo much as is required for the uſe of the country: broad cloths are neither made nor worn here. The Engliſh brought ſome goods of this ſort to Mocha, but were obliged to carry them back to India unſold. A country which affords ſo few articles for ſale, cannot have a great trade. Coffee is almoſt the ſole article exported from Yemen; a valuable commodity, in exchange for which many of thoſe things which this country needs from abroad, may well be obtained. All the commerce of Yemen is carried on by Mocha, except only that ſome ſmall quantities of coffee are exported by Loheia and Hodeida.

YEN, a river of China, which runs into the Hoang, 17 miles SE. Yen-tchang.

YEN-CHAN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li: 22 miles SE. Tſang.

YEN-CHI, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Ho-nan: 37 miles W. Ho-nan.

YEN-TCHANG, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chen-ſi: 30 miles E. Yen-ngan.

YEN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Tche-kiang. Near this town are mines of copper, and trees that yield varniſh, which give a value to the cabinet-work ſo much eſteemed in Europe; when this varniſh is once dry, it never melts again, and will bear boiling water. The paper manufacture of this place is in equal eſteem, and for which they have a great demand. Six towns of the third order are under its juriſdiction: 650 miles SSE. Peking. Long. 137. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 38. N.

YEN-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Chan-tong. The territory depending upon this capital is incloſed between two conſiderable rivers which abound with fiſh, and make the ſoil very fruitful. The country is very well cultivated, and the mountains are covered with woods, and the air is mild and temperate. There are 27 towns within the juriſdiction of this capital; 4 of the ſecond order, and 23 of the third: 267 miles S. Peking. Long. 134. 22. E. Ferro. Lat. 35. 44. N.

YEN-TCHIN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Chan-tong: 115 miles S. Tcin-tcheou.

YEN-TCHING, a town of China, in the province of Chan-tong, where a peculiar ſpecies of glaſs is manufactured, of ſo delicate a nature, that it will not endure the inclemencies of the air: 45 miles SE. Tci-nan.

YEN-TING, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Se-tchuen: 15 miles NE. Tong-tchouen.

YEOU, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Hou-quang: 40 miles ENE. Heng-tche.

YEOVERIN HILL, a mountain of England, in the county of Northumberland, about 2000 feet in height, ſituated to the weſt of Wooller.

YEOVIL, a town of England, in the county of Somerſet, ſituated on the Ivel, and containing many good houſes. Near the town is a pool, the water of which is green, and ſuppoſed to receive that tincture from ſome latent veins of vitriol; there is alſo a chalybeate ſpring, which is reckoned to contain more ſteel than moſt others of like nature. The town abounds with fine ſprings, and in the centre is a common pump, from which a great part of the inhabitants are ſupplied with water. In the year 1449, 117 houſes in this town were deſtroyed by fire. The market here is kept on Friday, and is very large, for corn, cattle, and pigs; for bacon, cheeſe, butter, flax, and hemp: in the two laſt articles, there is frequently from 600l. to 1000l. returned on a market day. There was formerly a large manufacture of woollen cloth; but now the principal one is of leather gloves, in which a great number of hands are conſtantly employed: 4 miles S. Ilcheſter, and 123 WSW. London.

YEOU-NHING, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Kiang-nan: 15 miles WSW. Hoei-tcheou.

YONG-PING, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Pe-tche-li, on a river which runs into the Gulf of Leao-tong. This city is advantageouſly ſituated, but its juriſdiction is not very extenſive; it contains but one city of the ſecond order, and five of the third. It is environed by the ſea, by rivers, and by mountains, covered for the moſt part with fine trees: this makes the country leſs fertile, but the neighbouring bay ſupplies its want, with great plenty of all the neceſſaries of life. Not far from this city, ſtands a fort named Chun-hai, which is the key of the province of Leao-tongo. This fort is near the beginning of the great wall, which is built, for a league together, in a boggy marſh, from the bulwark in the ſea: 115 miles E. Peking. Long. 136. 20. E. Ferro. Lat. 39. 55. YONNE, a river of France, which riſes about four miles ſouth from Chateau-Chinon, in the department of the Nyevre, paſſes by or near to Monceaux, Clamecy, Coulanges, Cravant, Auxerre, Joigny, Villeneuve, Sens, Pont-ſur-Yonne, &c. and joins the Seine at Montereau.

YONNE, a department of France, bounded on the north-eaſt by the department of the Aube, on the ſouth-eaſt by the department of the Côte-d'Or, on the ſouth by the department of the Nyevre, on the weſt by the department of the Loiret, and on the north-weſt by the department of the Seine and Marne; about 70 miles in length, and from 30 to 40 in breadth. The river Yonne, from which it receives its name, croſſes it from ſouth-eaſt to north-weſt. It is formed of the Auxerrois, heretofore a part of Burgundy. Auxerre is the capital.

YO-PING, a town of Aſia, in the kingdom of Corea: 53 miles SW. King-ki-tao.

YO-PING, a town of Aſia, in the kingdom of Corea: 28 miles SSE. Tſin.

YORK, a city of England, and ſee of an archbiſhop, ſituated on the river Ouſe, in the weſt-riding, near the centre of the county to which it gives name. It has always been conſidered as the capital of the north part of England, and the ſecond in rank. The origin of this city is not well known; certain it is, however, that it was the ſtation of the ſixth legion, called Victrix, which Adrian brought out of Germany, and a Roman colony. The emperor Conſtantius Chlorus, is ſaid to have died here, and his ſon, Conſtantine the Great, being in England at the time of his father's death, to have been proclaimed emperor. This city, under the Saxon government, was for a conſiderable time in a very flouriſhing ſtate, till the Daniſh ſtorm, burſting on it from the north, waſted it in a dreadful manner with fire and ſword. And in the next century it felt greater and more terrible calamities in the Daniſh ravages. In the year 867, the walls had ſuffered ſo much from the aſſaults of war, that Oſbright and Ella, kings of Northumberland, purſuing the Danes, got the city without any difficulty; and being ſlain in a bloody battle in the middle of the city, left the victory to the Danes who had retired into it. Hence Malmſbury obſerves, that York was always firſt expoſed to the fury of the northern nations, received the barbarous ſhocks of the Danes, and groaned under repeated devaſtations: but, as the ſame author aſſerts, our Athelſtan wreſted it from the Danes, and levelled with the ground the ſtrong caſtle which they had erected there. It was not, however, altogether free from wars in ſucceeding years, that whole century being remarkable for the ruin of cities: but the Normans, as they put a ſtop to theſe calamities, ſo they almoſt utterly deſtroyed York; for the ſons of Swain arriving with a fleet of 240 Daniſh ſhips in the neighbourhood, the Norman garriſon that held two caſtles in the city, fearing leſt the houſes in the ſuburbs might favour the enemy in filling up the ditch, ſet them on fire; but the wind blowing ſtrong, ſpread the flames over the whole city, ſo that it was all in a blaze, when the Danes broke in and made a dreadful maſſacre of the inhabitants, putting the Normans to the ſword, reſerving only William Mallet and Gilbert Gant, principal officers of diſtinction, to be decimated with the ſoldiers. For they ſet apart every tenth man of the Normans by lot for execution. This ſo provoked William I. that he extirpated the inhabitants, as if they had taken part with the Danes, and burned the city a ſecond time, and, according to Malmſbury's account, ſo deſolated the neighbouring villages, and ſo exhauſted this fruitful province by his devaſtations, that the ground lay uncultivated for 60 miles together. Peace ſucceeding theſe turbulent times, York recovered itſelf, though often devoted to deſtruction by the Scots and ſeditious. In the reign of Stephen, it ſuffered by an accidental fire, which conſumed the cathedral, St. Mary's abby, and other religious houſes, together, as is generally thought, with a well-furniſhed library, founded by archbiſhop Egelred. St. Mary's abby ſoon recovered its former magnificence by a new building, but the cathedral lay neglected till the time of Edward I. when John Roman, treaſurer of the church, laid the foundation of the new work, which his ſon John, William Melton, and John Thoreſby, all archbiſhops, gradually brought to perfection by the aſſiſtance of the neighbouring nobility. About the ſame time alſo, the citizens fortified the city with new walls, and a number of towers, thick ſet, and planned a body of excellent laws for their government. King Richard II. made it a county, corporate by itſelf, and Richard III. began the caſtle anew: and Henry VIII. eſtabliſhed here a council or ſenate-houſe, not unlike the French parliaments, to try and determine the cauſes of this part of the kingdom, conſiſting of a preſident and council, whoſe numbers depended on the king's pleaſure, a ſecretary, and other officers. Before William the Conqueror burned York, authors do not ſcruple to compare it to Rome. It was the chief emporium in the north of England, and fifty years after the terrible fire in king Stephen's time, in the year 1186, this city had ſo raiſed its head, as to bear half proportion to London. A woollen manufacture was held here to the reign of Henry VIII. But the navigation of the Ouſe was neglected till the reign of George I. when an act of parliament was obtained for its improvement, but not effectually carried into execution at that time. The walls of this ancient city are all entire, being repaired every year if there is occaſion. Thoſe on the ſouth and eaſt from Fiſhergate to the Red Tower, and thence to Walmgate, were rebuilt in the years 1487 and 1673; and in the former of theſe diviſions is a walk. The city is divided into four wards, Micklegate, Botham, Monk, and Walmgate, and has four principal gates, and ſix poſterns. The latter of theſe gates is ſuppoſed to derive its name by corruption from Watling-ſtreet. In the reign of Henry V. it had 44 pariſh churches, beſides 17 chapels, 16 hoſpitals, and 9 religious houſes. At the reformation, theſe were reduced to little more than half the number of pariſh churches, eighteen of them being united to the reſt, three hoſpitals, and one or two chapels. Clifford's Tower, a round ſhell, is beautifully ſituated on an artificial mount, commanding an extenſive view over the river. It is ſaid to be as old as the Conqueſt, and might have been raiſed by the Conqueror, or, as its mount exactly correſponds with the old bank on the weſt ſide of the river, it may have been Roman work. It was uſed as a garriſon in the civil war, and till the year 1683, when the magazine blowing up, reduced it to its preſent form. The bridge over the Ouſe conſiſts of five arches, the middlemoſt 81 feet, or 27 yards wide, and 17 high. It was built about the year 1566, after the old one had been broken down by a ſudden thaw. On its north ſide is an old chapel, with Saxon zigzag, probably built by the citizens, in the year 1628, in memory of certain Scots then ſlain in an affray on the bridge: it was turned into an exchange. The cathedral, alike venerable for ſize, ſtile, and ornaments, was two centuries in building, from the year 1227, when archbiſhop Grey began the ſouth croſs, to 1426, when the grants of the dean and chapter call it new built. The whole length, from eaſt to weſt, is 524 feet, the breadth 109, length of the croſs-aiſle and the height of the lantern ſteeple 180. The eaſt window is ſaid hardly to have its equal for tracery, painting, and preſervation, and was the work of John Thornton, a glazier, of Coventry, in the year 1405. The archiepiſcopal ſee of York was inſtituted in form, though not in ſubſtance, by pope Gregory, in his letter to Auguſtine, in the year 602, but in ſubſtance by pope Honorius, who ſent to Paulinus, in the year 634. By a charter of Richard I. it was governed by a mayor, to which the title of lord was prefixed by Richard II. Other members of the corporation are aldermen, aſſiſtants, town-clerks, common-council, &c. The guild-hall was built in the year 1446; the lord-mayor's houſe in the year 1726; and an elegant aſſembly-room in the year 1736, from a deſign of the earl of Burlington. Manufactures have not ſucceeded in York. The diſtrict ſituated to the ſouth and ſouth-weſt of the city is called the Ainſtey of York. It ſends two members to the Britiſh parliament, and has four markets weekly, Tueſday, Thurſday, Friday, and Saturday: 197 miles N. London, and 191 S. Edinburgh.

YORK (New), a ſtate of United America, bounded on the north by the 45th degree of latitude, which ſeparates it from Canada, on the eaſt by Connecticut, Maſſachuſetts, and Vermont, on the ſouth-eaſt by the Atlantic, on the ſouth and ſouth-weſt by New Jerſey and Pennſylvania, and on the north-weſt by the river St. Lawrence, and the lakes Erie and Ontario: containing in the whole 44,000 ſquare miles, or about 28 millions of acres. The ſtate, to ſpeak generally, is interſected by ridges of mountains, running in a north-eaſt and ſouth-weſt direction. Beyond the Allegany Mountains, however, the country is a dead level, of a fine rich ſoil; covered, in its natural ſtate, with maple, beach, birch, cherry, black walnut, locuſt, hickery, and ſome mulberry trees. On the banks of lake Erie, are a few cheſtnut and oak ridges. Hemlock ſwamps are interſperſed thinly through the country. All the creeks that empty into lake Erie, have falls, which afford many excellent mill-ſeats. Eaſt of the Allegany Mountains, the country is broken into hills, with rich intervening vallies; the hills are cloathed thick with timber, and when cleared, afford fine paſture; the vallies, when cultivated, produce wheat, hemp, flax, peas, graſs, oats, and Indian corn: beſides the trees already mentioned, there are, in various parts of the ſtate, the ſeveral kinds of oak, ſuch as white, red, yellow, black, and cheſtnut, oak; white, yellow, ſpruce, and pitch, pines; cedar, balſam, or fir-tree; butternot, poplar, white-wood, which in Pennſylvania is called poplar, and in Europe, the tulip-tree; ſugar and rock maple, the linden-tree, which, with the white-wood, grows on the low rich ground; the button-wood, or ſycamore, ſhrub cranberry, the fruit of which hangs in cluſters, like grapes, as large as cherries; this ſhrub, too, grows on low ground. Beſides theſe is the ſumach, which bears cluſters of red berries; the Indians chew the leaves inſtead of tobacco; the berries are uſed in dyes. Of the commodities produced from culture, wheat is the ſtaple, of which immenſe quantities are raiſed and exported. Indian corn, and peas, are likewiſe raiſed for exportation; and rye, oats, barley, &c. for home conſumption. In ſome parts of the ſtate, large dairies are kept, which furniſh for the market, butter and cheeſe. The beſt lands in this ſtate, which lie along the Mohawk River, and weſt of the Allegany Mountains, are yet in a ſtate of nature, or are juſt beginning to be ſettled. This ſtate, agreeably to an act of their legiſlature, paſſed in March, 1788, is divided into 16 counties; which, by another act paſſed at the ſame time, were divided into townſhips. In the above-mentioned acts, the limits of the counties and townſhips are defined. Theſe townſhips, are corporations, inveſted with certain privileges. The act directs, that the freeholders in the ſeveral townſhips, ſhall aſſemble in town meetings, on the firſt Tueſday in April, annually, and chooſe their town-officers. The number of inhabitants in this ſtate, in 1786, was 238,897; of which 18,889 were negroes. In 1756, there were 83,233 whites, and 13,542 blacks; 96,775 in the whole. In 1771, there were 148,124 whites, and 19,883 blacks; total 168,007. The population for every ſquare mile, including the whole ſtate, is only five, ſo that this ſtate is but a ninth part as populous as Connecticut. But it is to be conſidered, that Connecticut has no waſte lands, and not half the ſtate of New York is ſettled. The ſtate of Connecticut, however, throughout, is at leaſt three times as thickly populated, as the ſettled parts of New York. This ſtate contains vaſt quantities of iron ore. There is a ſilver mine at Philipſburg, which produces virgin ſilver, ſpar, zink, or ſpelter, a ſemi-metal, magnez, uſed in glazings, peritus, of a golden hue; various kinds of copper ore, and lead and coal mines, are found in this ſtate: alſo petrified wood, plaſter of Paris, iſinglaſs in ſheets, talcs, and cryſtal of various kinds and colours, aſbeſtos, and ſeveral other foſſils. A ſmall black ſtone had alſo been found, which vitrifies with a ſmall heat, and makes excellent glaſs. The principal rivers are, Hudſon, Qnondago, Mohawks, Delaware, Suſquehanna, Allegany, Tyoga, &c. The conſtitution of this ſtate, provides for the free exerciſe of religious profeſſion and worſhip, without diſcrimination or preference, within the ſtate, for all mankind; provided the liberty for conſcience hereby granted ſhall not be ſo conſtrued as to excuſe acts of licentiouſneſs, or juſtify practices inconſiſtent with the peace and ſafety of the ſtate. The miniſters of every denomination in the ſtate, are ſupported by the voluntary contributions of the people, raiſed generally by ſubſcription, or by a tax upon the pews, except the Dutch churches in New York, Albany, Skenectady, and Kingſton, which have, except the two laſt, large eſtates confirmed by a charter. The epiſcopal church, alſo, in New York, poſſeſs a very large eſtate in and near the city. The ſupreme legiſlative powers of the ſtate, are veſted in two branches, a ſenate and aſſembly. The members of the ſenate, are elected by the freeholders of the ſtates, who poſſeſs freehold eſtates to the value of 100l. clear of debts. For the purpoſe of electing ſenators, the ſtate is divided into four great diſtricts, each of which chooſes a certain number. The ſenators are divided by lot into four claſſes, ſix in each claſs, and numbered, firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth. The ſeats of the firſt claſs, are vacated at the expiration of one year; the ſecond at the expiration of the next, &c. and their places filled by new elections. Thus a ſmall change is made in the ſenate every year; but three-fourths of the members remaining, preſerve a knowledge of the buſineſs of the former ſeſſion. A majority of the ſenate is neceſſary to do buſineſs; and each branch of the legiſlature, has a negative upon the other. The legiſlature can at any time alter this diviſion of the ſtate, for the choice of ſenators ; and an increaſe of electors in any diſtrict, to the amount of one twenty-fourth of the electors in the whole ſtate, entitles the diſtrict to another ſenator. But the number of ſenators can never exceed 100. The aſſembly of the ſtate, is compoſed of repreſentatives, from the ſeveral counties, choſen annually in May. By the conſtitution, however, it is ordered, that at the end of ſeven years, after the termination of the late war, a cenſus of the electors and inhabitants ſhall be taken, and the repreſentation apportioned, according to the number of electors in each county. The ſupreme executive power of the ſtate is veſted in a governor (in whoſe abſence, a deputy-governor is appointed to ſerve) choſen once in three years, by the freemen of the ſtate. The lieutenant-governor is, by his office, preſident of the ſenate ; and, upon an equal diviſion of voices, has a caſting vote ; but has no voice on other occaſions. The governor has not a ſeat in the legiſlature ; but, as a member of the council of reviſion, and council of appointment, he has a vaſt influence in the ſtate. Hudſon's River was firſt diſcovered in 1608, by Henry Hudſon, an Engliſhman, who ſold his claim to the Dutch. In 1614, the States-General granted a patent to ſeveral merchants, for an excluſive trade on the river Hudſon. The ſame year this company built a fort on the weſt ſide of the river, near Albany, and named it Fort Orange. In 1614, captain Argall, under ſir Thomas Dale, governor of Virginia, viſited the Dutch on Hudſon's River, who being unable to reſiſt him, prudently ſubmitted, for the preſent, to the king of England, and, under him, to the governor of Virginia. Determined upon the ſettlement of a colony, the States-General, in 1621, granted the country to the Weſt-India company ; and, in the year 1629, Wouter Van Twiller arrived at Fort Amſterdam, and took upon himſelf the government. On Auguſt 27, 1664, governor Stuveſant ſurrendered the colony to colonel Nicolls, who had arrived in the bay a few days before, with three or four ſhips and about 300 ſoldiers, having a commiſſion from king Charles II. to reduce the place, which was then called New Amſterdam, but was changed to New York, as was Fort Orange to Albany, in honour of his royal highneſs James, duke of York and Albany. Very few of the inhabitants thought proper to remove out of the country ; and their numerous deſcendants are ſtill in many parts of this ſtate and New Jerſey. In 1667, at the peace of Breda, New York was confirmed to the Engliſh, who, in exchange, ceded Surinam to the Dutch. The Engliſh kept peaceable poſſeſſion of the country until the year 1673, when the Dutch, with whom they were then at war, ſent a ſmall ſquadron, which arrived at Staten Iſland on the 30th of July. John Manning, a captain of an independent company, who had, at that time, the command of the fort, ſent a meſſenger down to the commodore, and treacherouſly made his terms with him. On the ſame day the ſhips came up, moored under the fort, landed their men, and entered the garriſon, without giving or receiving a ſhot. All the magiſtrates and conſtables from Eaſt Jerſey, Long Iſland, Æſopus, and Albany, were ſummoned to New York, and the major part of them ſwore allegiance to the States-General and the prince of Orange. The conquerors, however, did not long enjoy the fruits of their ſucceſs, for, on the 9th of February, the year following, a treaty of peace between England and Holland was ſigned at Weſtminſter ; by the ſixth article of which, this province was reſtored to the Engliſh, in whoſe hands it remained until the late revolution. While New York remained in poſſeſſion of the Dutch, it was called New Belgium, or New Netherlands, and governed by an eſcout, burgomaſters, and echevins. From its ſurrender to the Engliſh, in 1664 to 1683, the province was ruled by governors, appointed and commiſſioned by the duke of York, and their council, whoſe rules and orders had the force of laws. From the laſt-named period, the people were admitted to a ſhare of the legiſlative authority. The confederated cantons of Indians, before the incorporation of the Tuſcaroras, a people driven by the Carolinians from the frontiers of Virginia, conſiſted of five nations, viz. the Mohawks, Oneidas, Senecas, Onondagas, and Cayugas. The alliance and trade of theſe ſix nations, inhabiting the territory weſt of Albany, to the diſtance of more than 200 miles, though much courted by the French of Canada, have been almoſt uninterruptedly enjoyed by the Engliſh. The chief towns are New York, Albany, and Hudſon.

YORK (New), a city of America, and capital of a ſtate of the ſame name, ſituated at the ſouth-weſt point of an iſland, at the confluence of the Hudſon and Eaſt River. The principal part of the city lies on the eaſt ſide of the iſland, although the buildings extend from one river to the other. The length of the city on Eaſt River is about two miles, but falls much ſhort of that diſtance on the banks of the Hudſon : its breadth, on an average, is nearly three-fourths of a mile, and its circumference may be four miles. The plan of this city is not perfectly regular, but is laid out agreeably to the ſituation of the ground. The principal ſtreets are nearly parallel with the rivers : theſe are interſected, though not at right angles, by ſtreets running from river to river : the width of the ſtreets is various. The houſes are generally built of brick, and the roofs tiled : there are remaining a few houſes built after the old Dutch manner, but the Engliſh taſte has prevailed almoſt a century. Upon the ſouth-weſt point of the land ſtands the fort, which is a ſquare, with four baſtions ; within the walls of which the governors uſed formerly to reſide. Below the fort, near the water, there is a line of fortifications of conſiderable extent, deſigned to command the entrance into both rivers. But it is queſtionable, whether any number of cannon would prevent ſhips from paſſing with a favourable wind and tide ; and, indeed, whether New York is capable of defence, by land, againſt a powerful marine force. The city hall is a brick building, more ſtrong than elegant ; it is three ſtories in height, with wings at each end. There are three houſes of public worſhip, belonging to the reformed Proteſtant Dutch church, four Preſbyterian, and three Epiſcopal churches, with nine places of worſhip for other Chriſtians, and a ſynagogue for the Jews. The government of the city (which was incorporated in 1696) is now in the hands of a mayor, aldermen, and common-council. The city is divided into ſeven wards, in each of which there is choſen annually, by the people, an alderman and aſſiſtant, who, together with the mayor and recorder, form the common-council : the mayor and recorder are appointed, annually, by the council of appointment. This city is eſteemed the moſt eligible ſituation for commerce in the United States ; it almoſt neceſſarily commands the trade of one-half of New Jerſey, moſt of that of Connecticut, and part of that of Maſſachuſetts, beſides the whole fertile interior country, which is penetrated by one of the largeſt rivers in America. This city imports moſt of the goods conſumed between a line of 30 miles eaſt of Connecticut River, and 20 miles weſt of the Hudſon, which is 130 miles ; and between the ocean and the confines of Canada, about 250 miles : a conſiderable portion of which is the beſt peopled of any part of the United States, and the whole territory contains at leaſt half a million of people. In times of peace, New York will command more commercial buſineſs than any town in the United States. In time of war it will be inſecure without a marine force ; but a ſmall number of ſhips will be able to defend it from the moſt formidable attacks by ſea. A want of good water is a great inconvenience to the citizens, there being few wells in the city : moſt of the people are ſupplied every day with freſh water, conveyed to their doors in caſks, from a pump, which receives it from a ſpring almoſt a mile from the city. It is found, by a memorandum in one of the old regiſters, that the total number of inhabitants in the city, taken by order of the king, in the year 1697, was 4302. The number of inhabitants in the city and county of New York, in 1756, was 10,881 ; in 1771, 21,863 ; and in the year 1786, 23,614 : 70 miles NNE. Philadelphia. Long. 74. W. Greenwich. Lat. 40. 40. N.

YORKSHIRE, a county of England, and by far the largeſt in the kingdom, is bounded on the north by Durham, from which it is ſeparated by the Tees, on the eaſt and north-eaſt by the German Sea, on the ſouth by Lincolnſhire, Nottinghamſhire, and Derbyſhire, on the ſouth-weſt by Cheſhire and Lancaſhire, and on the north-weſt by Weſtmoreland ; about 80 miles from north to ſouth, and 100 from eaſt to weſt. It is divided into three ridings, called, from their reſpective ſituation, north, eaſt, and weſt ridings, which are again ſubdivided into wapontakes ; the north-riding containing 12, the eaſt 7, and the weſt 12. The north-riding is bounded by the county of Durham on the north, the German Sea on the north-eaſt, the eaſt riding on the ſouth-eaſt, the weſt riding on the ſouth, and the county of Weſtmoreland on the weſt. The length of the riding, from eaſt to weſt, is 83 miles, the breadth, from north to ſouth, 47 miles, and it contains about 2048 ſquare miles, or 1,311,187 acres. The whole riding may be divided into the following diſtricts, viz. the Coaſt, Cleveland, the vale of York, with Howardian Hills, &c. ; Ryedale, with Eaſt and Weſt Marſhes, and the Eaſtern and Weſtern Moorlands. The diſtrict deſcribed by the term Coaſt, comprehends the land lying between the Eaſtern Moors and the Ocean. It is hilly, bold, and bleak ; but in ſome of the vales, which are ſheltered both from the weſterly winds and the ſea air, corn ripens well. The ſoils are a browniſh clay, a clayey loam, a loam upon a ſtrong clay, a lightiſh ſoil upon an alum ſhale, a loam upon a free-ſtone, or, as it is here called, a greet ſtone, and in ſome vallies weſt of Whitby, a deep rich loam. The hills along the coaſt abound with alum ſhale, and works for procuring this mineral are carried on in ſeveral parts of it ; no other minerals have been found. The fertile diſtrict of Cleveland lies on the north-weſt ſide of the Eaſtern Moors ; from theſe it is divided by a range of cliffs, from which, probably, it derives its name : It is lightly featured with hills, and has few fields, except near the ſea, which have not a gentle ſlope. The climate of it, from its ſituation betwixt the Eaſtern Moorlands and the ſea, and from lying open to the weſtern winds, form an extenſive, uncultivated, and mountainous country ; is cold ; but the ſoil, dry and ſtiff, by a long ſtate of culture, and the frequent uſe of lime, bakes with the heat of the ſun, and haſtens harveſt to the time of warmer climates : the ſoil is generally a fertile clay, with ſome clayey loam, and fine red ſandy ſoil. The vale of York is extenſive, and has the Moorlands on each ſide, except where it opens into Cleveland, or is ſeparated from Ryedale by a range of hills ; the ſoil and fertility are here extremely variable. The Howardian Hills runs from weſt to eaſt, dividing the vale of York from Ryedale ; this tract is high and bold ; the climate, particularly of the weſt end, from its vicinity to the Moors and greater elevation, is cold, and the corn, conſequently, rather late in ripening. The ſoil, on the weſt end of this tract, is moſtly a ſtrong loam, upon a clay mixed with cobble-ſtones; but on the ſouthern ſide of theſe hills, a good clay and loamy ſoil prevails; ſome pits have been here ſunk for coals, but the quantity has proved ſo ordinary, and the ſeams ſo thin, as not to encourage a farther ſearch. The ſurface of the lower parts of Ryedale is very flat, and a large proportion of it liable to be flooded. The climate is mild and favourable to the production of crops in an extraordinary degree. The ſoil, at the foot of the northern margin, conſiſts chiefly of an hazle loam upon a clay bottom; this ſoil is of extraordinary fertility: ſome cold clay, and yellow loamy ſoil, of leſs fertility than the laſt, are in ſome places to be met with. The Eaſtern Moorlands are a wild and extenſive tract of mountains, which occupy a ſpace of about thirty miles by fifteen, or upwards, penetrated by a number of fertile cultivated dales. The great elevation of theſe Moors, renders the climate extremely cold and bleak, which will always be a bar to their improvement. The ſurface of ſome of the higher hills is entirely covered with large free-ſtones; on others, large beds of peat (which in many places are very deep, frequently not to be paſſed, and never without danger) extend themſelves to a great diſtance. The minerals are coals and alum: the firſt of but an ordinary quality, and thin in the ſeam; the laſt of great thickneſs and inexhauſtible. The climate is colder than in the country ſurrounding this diſtrict, yet corn will ripen very well, where ſown in pretty good aſpect. Moſt of the dales partake more or leſs of a black moory earth upon a clay, a loam upon a clay, a ſandy ſoil in ſome places, intermixed with large greet-ſtones upon a ſhale, and a light loam upon a greet-rock. On the eaſtern part of the Moors we find, in ſome inſtances, on the hill ſides, a rather ſtiff loam upon lime-ſtone, and a deep ſandy loam upon a whin-ſtone; and in the bottoms, a light loam upon gravel, or free-ſtone. The Weſtern Moorlands are a part of the long range of mountains which extend northward from Staffordſhire, through Derbyſhire, Yorkſhire, Lancaſhire, Weſtmoreland, and Cumberland, into Scotland: that part of it which lies within the north-riding, differs materially from the Eaſtern Moorlands; inſtead of black heath, we find many of the mountains covered with a fine ſweet graſs, others with extenſive tracts of bent; ſome produce heath, but it is moſtly mixed with a large portion of graſs bent, or ruſhes. In the lower part of theſe Moors is ſome fine loamy ſoil, in many places a ſtiff loam upon blue lime-ſtone. The hills, covered with graſs, conſiſt, with ſcarce any exception, of lime-ſtone. There are many lead mines upon theſe Moors, ſome of which have been, and are ſtill, very valuable. Coals are alſo got, but they are not good. The quantity of woodland in this part of the county is eſtimated at 25,500 acres. Yorkſhire contains the city of York and 19 towns, viz. Aſkrigg, Bedale, Eaſingwould, Giſborough, Hawes, Helmſley-blackmoor, Kirby-moorſide, Malton, Maſham, Middleham, Northallerton, Pickering, Reethe, Richmond, Scarborough, Stokeſley, Thirſk, Whitby, and Yarm, and about 450 villages. The principal rivers are the Ouſe, Derwent, Swale, Foſs, and Eſk. The eaſt-riding is bounded on the north by the river Derwent, which ſeparates it from the north-riding, on the eaſt by the German Ocean, on the ſouth by the Humber and Ouſe, and on the weſt by the weſt-riding. Almoſt every variety of ſoil is found here; that part adjoining the ſea is much expoſed to the eaſterly winds, which generally blow a conſiderable length of time in the ſpring. The ſhore is for the moſt part low, except round Flamborough-Head, which is high; behind which lie what are called The Yorkſhire Wolds: a diſtrict particularly adapted for the feeding of ſheep. Wood is ſcarce. The country is well watered by ſmall ſtreams which run almoſt through every village: the country, extending from the Ouſe to the Wolds, and ſouthward to the Humber, is flat, and the ſoil loamy, or clayey, with a ſpringy bottom. That part which is ſituated to the eaſt of the river Hull, is called Holderneſs. The produce of wheat in this part of the county is greater than the conſumption, as the manufactures are not extenſive; the exports conſiſt of grain, bacon, butter, horſes, cattle, ſheep, hogs, and potatoes, chiefly to London. The coals uſed in this riding are chiefly imported from Newcaſtle, or ſupplied from the weſt-riding: the towns are Beverley, Bridlington, Cave, Driffield, Headon, Howden, Hull, Hunmanby, Hornſea, Kilham, Patrington, Pocklington, and Weighton. The weſt-riding is bounded on the north by the north-riding, on the eaſt by the Ouſe, on the ſouth by the counties of Nottingham and Derby, and on the weſt by Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and Weſtmoreland. The weſt-riding is ſituated nearly in the centre of the kingdom, and, though an inland diſtrict, is watered by numerous rivers and navigable canals; it is about 95 miles in length, and 48 in breadth. The face of the country is irregular; towards the weſt and north it is mountainous, interſected with vallies; the other parts are level. The ſoil is various; the tracts near the great towns are made rich by cultivation and manure, however barren they might otherwiſe have been. The principal rivers are, the Ouſe, the Don, the Calder, the Aire, and the Wharfe. The principal riches ariſing to this part of the county, ariſe from the extenſive woollen and other manufactures carried on in many of the towns, for which no places can be more conveniently ſituated, the raw materials being each way abundant, and coals, that neceſſary article, being plentiful and cheap; and conſiderable tracts of woodland, which ſupply oak and aſh to the manufacturing towns, and for exportation. This riding contains 28 towns: Aldborough, Barneſley, Bawtry, Boroughbridge, Bradford, Doncaſter, Giſburn, Halifax, Huddersfield, Keighley, Knareſborough, Leeds, Otley, Pontefract, Ripley, Ripon, Rotherham, Selby, Settle, Sheffield, Sherburn, Skipton, Snaith, Tadcaſter, Thorn, Tickhill, Wakefield, and Wetherby. Thirty members are returned to the Britiſh parliament, viz. for the county, the city of York, and the thirteen borough towns printed in Italic.

YO-TCHEOU, a city of China, of the firſt rank, in the province of Hou-quang, ſituated on the Yang-tſe River, and on the Tong-ting Lake. This lake, which reſembles a ſea, is remarkable for the greatneſs of its circuit, which is more than 70 leagues; for the quantity of its water, eſpecially in certain ſeaſons, in which the two great rivers of the province, ſwelled with rains, diſcharge themſelves into it, paſſing out on the other ſide inſenſibly diminiſhed; and for the aſtoniſhing quantity of fine fiſh which are caught therein. The great number of barks and merchandizes which are brought thither, render it one of the richeſt cities in the empire; its diſtricts contain one town of the ſecond order, and ſeven of the third; ſome on the eaſt ſide of the lake, and others on the weſt. The country round is every where extremely fruitful, and full of different kinds of orange and lemon trees: 675 miles S. Peking. Long. 130. 21. E. Ferro. Lat. 29. 23. N.

YOU, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Tche-kiang: 20 miles ENE. Kin-hoa.

YOUAN, a town of China, of the third rank, in the province of Kiang-ſi: 25 miles W. Keen-tchang.

YOUGHAL, a ſea-port town of Ireland, in the county of Cork. It is a market, fair, and poſt town, pretty large, and ſituated under a high hill, cloſe to the water's edge, on the river Blackwater, near the mouth of the bay. It is governed by a mayor and other magiſtrates, being an ancient corporation; the original inhabitants were a colony from Briſtol, who ſtill retain much of the old Engliſh dialect. This town has increaſed vaſtly within a few years, having a number of corn-ſtores built, with whole back-ſtreets of private houſes; alſo a new Roman Catholic chapel, very elegant, and of great extent; there is a very great market of freſh fiſh here, but their principal mart is the exportation of oats, in which it exceeds any port in the kingdom. It has a barrack, and returns two members to parliament. Here is a manufacture of earthen-ware, which is in a thriving ſtate; there is a bar at the entrance of the port which makes it troubleſome, and often dangerous, but ſhips when they are once in, lie very ſafely, and it is equally convenient and capacious: ſome time ago the ſtrand here was eſteemed proper for a horſe-race, but now the ſea has worn ſo many deep holes in it, that it is utterly ſpoiled of that diverſion. The town conſiſts chiefly of one large ſtreet, with a few outlets; the cuſtom-houſe is pretty enough; this place held out for the crown againſt the Deſmond rebellion; in the reign of queen Elizabeth the earl beſieged it, and for want of promiſed aſſiſtance, the town yielded, but the mayor was hanged by order of this victorious malecontent, in the year 1579.—Youghal ſubmitted to Cromwell, notwithſtanding in the year 1648, the corporation had proclaimed Charles II. king of England, &c. At this port Cromwell embarked for England, after his incredible ſucceſſes in this kingdom. Here are the ruins of two abbeys, one at the north, and the other at the ſouth end of the town, and ſome remains of the college or abbey which was dedicated to St. Mary: ſome of the apartments are kept in repair, they are the remains of a ſpacious building; here are alſo the ruins of a Franciſcan houſe, built by an earl of Kildare, in 1232. In the gardens of Youghal, the potatoe, it is ſaid, was firſt planted in this kingdom, being firſt introduced, as it is ſaid, by Sir Walter Raleigh, which is not improbable, ſince this was part of his eſtate, which he ſold to the earl of Cork: 31 miles SW. Waterford, 25 E. Cork, and 115 SW. Dublin.

YOUGHIOGENI, a river of the United States of America, which riſes in the north part of Virginia, and runs into the Allegany, at Pittsburg, in Pennſylvania.

YPRES, or Ipres, a city of Flanders, ſituated on the river Yperlee, from whence it takes its name. Before the year 800, it was only a château, which was ſacked and ruined by the Normans. Baldwin III. comte of Flanders, repaired the château, and built a town, about the year 960, which was afterwards enlarged by Thierry, comte of Flanders, and Ferrand, the ſon of Sanchez, king of Portugal, who had eſpouſed Jane, the daughter of Baldwin IX, eighteenth comte of Flanders. In the year 1128, it was taken by Louis VI. king of France; and more than half of it pillaged and burned. Philip Auguſtus, king of France, took it in the year 1213. In the year 1240, great part of it was burned by accident. In the year 1297, the Fauxbourgs were taken by the troops of Philip the Fair, king of France. In the year 1325, the inhabitants revolted with moſt part of the neighbouring towns againſt Louis de Nevers, comte of Flanders, and pulled down the old wall to build a new one, in which they incloſed the Fauxbourgs, which had become ſo extremely populous, from weavers and other tradeſpeople, that, in the year 1242, the number of perſons amounted to 200,000. In the 14th century the inhabitants of Ypres, for the moſt part weavers, were exceedingly troubleſome to their neighbours, being unwilling that any people ſhould carry on trade beſides themſelves. In the year 1383, the rebels of Ghent, aſſiſted by the Engliſh, under the command of the biſhop of Norwich, beſieged this town with great vigour for ſix weeks, but were compelled to retire; and the Engliſh being obliged to quit Flanders, Philip the Hardy, duke of Burgundy, having become maſter by a marriage with the heireſs of the late comte Louis, enlarged it, and ſurrounded it with walls. It was erected into a biſhopric, under the archbiſhop of Malines, by pope Paul IV. in the year 1559. The prince of Iſenghein is lord of the town, which is governed by an advocate, twelve echevins, four or five council, and a greffier, whoſe juriſdiction extends over the city and precincts, which are of no great extent. The town-houſe is a very large building, forming a ſquare, and is ſaid to have been built by the Engliſh, 600 feet in front; it has a very handſome tower, in which are kept their public archives from the year 1342. Beſides the cathedral, it has ſeveral other churches, and ſome religious houſes. The inhabitants carried on formerly a great trade in woollen cloth, but by the ſeverity of the duke of Alva, the principal manufacturers were driven to England, from which time, that branch of trade declined. At this time they carry on a conſiderable manufacture of linen, of excellent fabric. Ypres has ſuſtained ſeveral remarkable ſieges. In 1577, it declared with the reſt of the country, againſt the Spaniards. In 1648, the prince of Condé took it for the French king, but it was retaken the next year by archduke Leopold, governor of the Low Countries. In 1658, it was taken by Mareſchal Turenne, and reſtored to Spain by the treaty of the Pyrennees. In 1678, Louis XIV. took it in perſon, and added it to his dominions. By the treaty of Utrecht, it was ceded to the houſe of Auſtria, as one of the Dutch barriers, in whoſe poſſeſſion it remained till 1744, when the French laid ſiege to it, and took it in a few days; but they reſtored it at the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. On the 20th of June, 1792, this city ſurrendered to the French; on the 8th of November following, it was retaken by the Auſtrians; and on the 16th of June, 1794, it was again taken by the French. It was blockaded on the 5th of June, and an army of obſervation advantageouſly poſted, which general Clairfait attacked on the 13th, and was at firſt ſucceſsful in driving back the right wing: but the French ſoon recovered, and the Auſtrians were compelled to fall back, in their turn: the conteſt was ſevere, and many men were killed. This battle not only decided the fate of Ypres, but likewiſe of all Weſt Flanders. The garriſon having learned the defeat of Clairfait, capitulated on the 17th. Although between 6000 and 7000 men, they were compelled to accept of the enemy's terms. They ſurrendered all the cannon, ammunition, and baggage, laid down their arms, and were made priſoners of war. The châteleny of Ypres contains about 30 villages, and ſends deputies to the ſtates of Flanders: 5½ poſts S. Oſtend, and 4 NW. Liſle. Long. 20. 31. E. Ferro. Lat. 50. 48. N.

YUCATAN, a province of North America, in the government of Mexico: it is a peninſula, ſurrounded on the weſt and north by the gulf of Mexico, between the Bay of Campeachy on the ſouth-weſt, and that of Honduras on the ſouth-eaſt, having the little province of Tabaſco on the ſouth-weſt, and that of Vera Paz, in the audience of Guatimala on the ſouth, where it is joined on the continent by an iſthmus not 40 leagues broad. The climate is pretty warm in ſummer, which begins about April, and ends in September. It rarely rains here during the winter ſeaſon, though the weather is tolerably cool, except in January and February, which are almoſt as hot as in the middle of ſummer. It is, however, a very healthy country, eſpecially a large mountainous tract, extending from Salamanca on the weſt, to the eaſtern boundary, and where the natives live to a great age. The ſouth ſide of this ridge is ill peopled, and worſe cultivated, for want of water; but the north part is very populous, being rendered pleaſant by gentle breezes; though the ſun is very hot. The days and nights are nearly equal all the year. The ſoil, when properly cultivated, produces great quantities of corn, cotton, and indigo. All ſorts of cattle, wild beaſts, honey, wax, and fowl, are here in great plenty; and on the coaſts are found large pieces of amber: but as no mines were ever diſcovered in this country, the Spaniards are not fond of making ſettlements here; ſo that it abounds moſtly with Indians, ſubject to the Spaniards, who employ them in making ſalt, in the bay of Campeachy. This peninſula has but very few rivers, but wells without number; and whereſoever they dig up land, abundance of ſhells are found, which, with the lowneſs of the country, and ſhallowneſs of the ſea about it, has induced many to think, that the greateſt part of it was once under water. The capital of Yucatan is Campeachy, in the bay of which, and of Honduras, the former lying on the weſt, and the latter on the eaſt ſide of this province, the Engliſh cut their logwood.

YVERDUN, or Iſferten, a town of Swiſſerland, in the Vaudois, and capital of a bailiwick in the canton of Berne, ſituated on the lake of Neufchâtel, otherwiſe called the lake of Yverdun, at the mouth of the river Orb, which divides into two branches, forming a good port and an iſland, on which the town is ſituated. The two fauxbourgs communicate with the town by bridges. It is ancient, and in the Theodoſian table called Caſtrum Ebredunenſe, and Ebrodunenſe, by which it is underſtood to have been a place of ſtrength. The Romans maintained here a præfectus barcariorum, and there yet exiſts a ſociety of boatmen, of ancient ſtanding, and numerous, who have a particular police, privileges, and laws of navigation. From the Romans it paſſed to the kings of Burgundy, and afterwards to the dukes of Zahringen. In the year 1259, it was taken by Peter of Savoy, who reduced it by famine, and it continued in that family till the year 1536. In the 15th century, it underwent great calamities from a fire, and an inundation of the river, which deſtroyed many buildings, and amongſt the reſt the town-houſe. In the year 1475, it was beſieged and taken by the Swiſs, on account of the affinity which then appeared between the duke of Burgundy and the houſe of Savoy. In the year 1476, the count of Romont ſurpriſed the town, but not being able to take the citadel, he was obliged to retire: however, the town, with the reſt of the Vaudois, was reſtored to Savoy, by the peace of Friburg, the ſame year. By an act publiſhed by the duke of Savoy, in the year 1480, it appears, that this unfortunate town ſuffered during this war, being plundered by both parties, whether friends or enemies: the greater part of the inhabitants had fled in the utmoſt diſtreſs, and wandered without houſe or property. The prince, affected by their misfortunes, recalled them, and granted them conſiderable privileges. In the year 1536, the troops of Berne, when they had reduced the reſt of the Vaudois, laid ſiege to this town, and after a few days, became maſters, ſince which time Yverdun has been ſubject to Berne. The police is adminiſtered by a great and little council, compoſed of 36 members, the preſident of whom has the title of banneret. It has a large and ſtrong caſtle, flanked with four towers, built in the 12th century, by Conrad, duke of Zahringen: other public buildings are, a college for the inſtruction of youth, an hoſpital, divers magazines, &c. and in the town-houſe is a library, formed not long ſince by contribution. The environs were formerly a moraſs, which has been drained, and is now become good and fertile land. Near the town is a ſulphurous medicinal ſpring, and in the year 1730, a building, for the purpoſe of bathing, was erected by the magiſtrates. In the middle of the laſt century, a company was formed, for the purpoſe of making a navigable canal from the Lake of Yverdun to the Lake of Geneva, but it was never finiſhed. The bailiwick is one of the moſt conſiderable in the canton of Berne, containing about 25 pariſhes, and 20 lordſhips, and is about 5 leagues in length. The fertility is moderate; the wine is not of the beſt quality: 34 miles SW. Berne, and 16 N. Lauſanne. Long. 24. 14. E. Ferro. Lat. 46. 48. N.

ZANGARISA, a town of Italy, in the kingdom of Naples, and province of Calabria Ultra : 6 miles NE. St. Severina.

ZANGUEBAR, a name given to a large territory of Africa, bordering on the Eaſtern Sea, including many kingdoms ; the name is ſaid to import " the coaſt of the negroes," all the inhabitants being blacks, with curled woolly hair ; extending from 2 degrees north to the 21ſt degree of ſouth latitude. The principal kingdoms on the coaſt have been ſeparately ſpoken of and deſcribed. Of the country in general, we are much unacquainted : the whole tract is repreſented as barren and unhealthy, the lands lying low, and interſected with rivers, lakes, thick woods, foreſts, and marſhy grounds. The fruits of it are very unwholeſome, their rivers, for the moſt part, covered or choked up with weeds, buſhes, and thickets ; all which ſo ſtagnate the air, and corrupt the products of the earth, and render the inhabitants ſo ſickly and indolent, that they receive little or no benefit from its produce. The Bedouin Arabs are the only people who make advantage of it, by breeding multitudes of cattle, and living moſtly upon their fleſh and milk ; whilſt the negroes, or Zanges, content themſelves with feeding upon wild beaſts and fowl, which ſwarm all over thoſe parts. To ſupply the want of corn, pulſe, roots, and other wholeſome food, of which they are deſtitute, the Divine Providence hath interſperſed that whole country with mines of gold, eaſily got, by the help of which they can purchaſe all the neceſſaries and conveniencies of life from other parts : but this is the very circumſtance that makes them ſo extremely jealous of letting ſtrangers penetrate into the inland ; more eſpecially ſince the Portugueſe have made themſelves maſters of ſuch a number of places along this coaſt. They are in their nature fierce and ſtout, ignorant and brutiſh, without religion, eſpecially the negroes ; upon which laſt account they have the name of Caffers. As for the Bedouins, they have ſome kind of religion, or rather obſerve a variety of ſuperſtitious rites, but are no leſs ignorant and uncivilized than the Caffers ; yet they chiefly herd among themſelves, and live at a great diſtance from the coaſts, and by the ſides of lakes and rivers, for the convenience of paſture for their numerous herds. They go all naked, both Caffers and Arabs, excepting that they wrap a piece of cotton cloth round their middle, which deſcends a little below the knee ; but thoſe who live along the coaſts are ſomewhat more civilized, affect a little more finery in their dreſs, and inſtead of cotton cloth, cover themſelves with the ſkins of wild beaſts, more or leſs rich, according to their rank, with the tails of animals trailing behind on the ground : they likewiſe adorn their necks, arms, and legs, with variety of beads, bugles, and other trinkets, of amber, jett, glaſs, and other materials, which they purchaſe from the merchants with their gold, furs, ivory, and other commodities. There are among theſe coaſters a great number of Mahometans, but a much greater number ſtill among the iſlanders along the coaſt ; they being, for the moſt part, deſcended from thoſe Arabs who were baniſhed out of their country. The countries are Melinda, Mongala, Jubo, Moſambique, and ſome others.

ZANHAGA, or Zanzaga, or Zenhaga, a province of Africa, in the country of Sahara, bordering on the Atlantic.

ZANONA, a ſmall iſland in the Mediterranean : 2 miles NE. from Ponza.

ZANTE, an iſland in the Mediterranean, near the coaſt of the Morea, about 12 miles in length and 6 in breadth, chiefly inhabited by Greeks, under the Venetians, who appoint a governor, called proveditor, and two counſellors. The Greeks have 40 churches, beſides convents, and a biſhop ; the Roman Catholics have 3 convents, and a biſhop. The iſland produces excellent wine, and that ſpecies of grapes called currants, olives, figs, melons, peaches, and other choice fruits : towards the coaſts, the iſland is is in general mountainous, but level in the interior parts. It is much ſubject to earthquakes. Zante, the capital of the iſland, is ſituated on the eaſt coaſt, about 7 leagues SSW. from Chiarenza, in the Morea. Long. 38. 54. E. Ferro. Lat. 37. 55. N.

ZARA, a ſeaport, the capital of Venetian Dalmatia, and ſee of an archbiſhop, ſituated in a diſtrict, called The County of Zara, which was purchaſed of the king of Naples, in the year 1409, by the Venetians, in whoſe hands it has hitherto continued. Zara is ſurrounded on all ſides by the ſea, ſaving that it has a communication eaſtward with the continent, by means of a draw-bridge, commanded by a fort. It is reckoned one of the beſt fortifications in Dalmatia, and deemed almoſt impregnable. The citadel is divided from the town by a very deep ditch, hewn out of a rock. The harbour, which lies to the north, is capacious, ſafe, and well guarded. The rain is carefully preſerved in ciſterns, to ſupply the want of freſh water. In the caſtle reſides the governor or proveditor of Dalmatia, whoſe office is only triennial : 28 miles NW. Scardona. Long. 33. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 44. 22. N.

ZARA VECCHIA, or Old Zara, a town of Venetian Dalmatia, now little better than a village ; in the time of the Romans, it was a place of conſiderable figure, and received a new ſet of inhabitants by a numerous colony of that people. In the middle ages, it was called Belgrad, or Alba Maris. Here was alſo a biſhop's ſee, which, on the demolition of the town, was removed to Scardona ; at preſent deſolate, and its inhabitants conſiſting only of a few peaſants : 18 miles SE. Zara.

ZATMAR, a town of Hungary. This is properly two towns ; namely, Zatmar, on an iſland in the river Samos ; and Nemethi, oppoſite to it, on an arm of the river ; but in the year 1715, both were erected into one town : the firſt of which is fortified. In 1334, or 1335, it was taken, pillaged, and laid in aſhes, by the troops of the emperor, Ferdinand the Firſt. In 1562, it was beſieged by the Turks, and ſet on fire, but not taken. In 1564, king John took it ; in 1605, Stephen Botſkay ; in 1660, Barſkay, prince of Tranſylvania, made himſelf maſter of it ; and in 1662, the Imperialiſts. In 1681, the malcontents laid ſiege to this place ; and the reformed held a national ſynod here in 1646 : 56 miles NNW. Coloſvar, and 170 E. Preſburg. Long. 39. 25. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 43. N.

ZBORROW, a town of Poland, in the new kingdom of Galicia, near which an obſtinate battle was fought between the Poles on one ſide, commanded by their king, John Caſimir, and the combined army of the Coſaks and Tartars on the other. In this engagement the latter were defeated, and left 10,000 men dead on the ſpot; but the day after, a treaty of peace was concluded on terms diſadvantageous to Poland: 21 leagues E. Lemberg, and 26 NW. Braclaw.

ZDANICHA, a river of Ruſſia, which runs into the Chatanga. Long. 116. E. Ferro. Lat. 70. 40. N.

ZDZIECOL, a town of Lithuania, in the palatinate of Novogrodeck: 12 miles W. Novogrodeck.

ZEALAND, or Zeeland, or Seeland, the largeſt iſland belonging to the kingdom of Denmark, bounded on the north by the Scaggerac, on the eaſt by the Sound, on the ſouth by the Baltic, and on the weſt by the Great Belt; about 65 miles in length from north to ſouth, and where wideſt, 60 from eaſt to weſt, though in ſome parts ſcarcely 30, and in no part above 20 miles from the ſea. The coaſt is much interſected by large bays; and within the country are ſeveral lakes, which, as well as the rivers, abound in fiſh. The ſoil is generally fertile, and produces corn more than ſufficient for the inhabitants, with excellent paſtures, and in moſt parts is plenty of wood, except towards the centre of the iſland, where the inhabitants generally uſe turf for fuel. Copenhagen is the capital. Long. 10. 58. to 12. 40. E. Greenwich. Lat. 55. 2. to 56. 6. N.

ZEALAND (State of), one of the United Dutch States. It conſiſts of iſlands which are formed by thoſe branches and outlets of the Scheldt, called Zeeuwſche Stromen, or Sea Streams; on the north it is bounded by Holland, eaſtward by Brabant, ſouthward by Flanders, and weſtward by the North Sea; its name ſufficiently indicates its natural poſition and ſituation. The iſlands of Walcheren and Schouwen, on the weſtern coaſt, are defended againſt the violence of the ſea, by downs, or ſand hills, and on the other ſides, like the reſt of the iſlands of Zeeland, by vaſt dykes, which, at the bottom, have a breadth of 25 German ells, and at the top are ſo wide, that two carriages may paſs abreaſt: the height is alſo proportioned to their thickneſs; notwithſtanding which, in high tides and ſtormy weather, the waves, in many places, force a paſſage, or even flow over them: the firſt formation of theſe dykes muſt have been attended with immenſe expence, the very repair and maintenance of them requiring large ſums. Emanuel van Meteren, in the ſixteenth book of his Commentaries, ſays, and confirms it by the atteſtations of the workmen employed in them, that the dykes, in this province alone, if placed in one direction, would form a length of forty miles, each mile to be reckoned at 1400 rods, and that the expence of one rod with another was a pound Flemiſh, or ſix Dutch guilders. Thus the charge of the ſeveral outward dykes taken, amount to 340,000l. ſterling. Though the inhabitants of the other provinces, and foreigners in general, complain of the air here, as being heavy, diſagreeable, and unhealthy, yet no people look better, or enjoy a more confirmed ſtate of health, than the natives who are born and bred up in it. The ſoil too is very fruitful, and famed for its excellent wheat, as likewiſe for madder, the cultivation of which furniſhes out great employment to the inhabitants of Zealand; it abounds alſo in good fruits, and its rich paſtures are covered with flocks of fine ſheep. The waters around the iſlands ſupply them with plenty of fiſh, particularly with oyſters, lobſters, and muſcles, of an uncommon ſize and goodneſs. Zealand enjoys likewiſe an affluence of all kinds of proviſions, but fuel is very ſcarce there, eſpecially turf, which, being brought from the other provinces, bears a high price: great quantities too of Engliſh coals are uſed here. In the whole province are 121 towns and villages, ſome of which are very large. The inhabitants are reckoned the moſt wealthy in all the Netherlands, which is, in a great meaſure, owing to their traffic by ſea, and for this, indeed, they have every conveniency that can be deſired. Zealand was anciently a county, but inſtead of particular counts of its own, thoſe of Holland were likewiſe counts of Zealand, and in the year 1436, the two provinces devolved together to the Houſe of Burgundy. The aſſembly of the ſtates of Zealand conſiſts of ſeven members, the preſident of which is the firſt nobleman of the province: this dignity was annexed to the marquiſate of Vliſſingen, or Fluſhing and Veere, belonging to the prince of Naſſau Orange. On the death of king William III. it was aboliſhed: but in 1747, the ſtates of the province unanimouſly confirmed it to the ſtadtholder William IV. Since that time, a clauſe has been added to the inveſtiture, that the dignity ſhall not be annexed to any particular ſtate, rank, or family. The other members or ſtates of this province, are deputies of the voting towns, which are, Middleburg, Ziriczee, Goes, Tolen, Fluſhing, and Veere: this aſſembly, as well as that of the deputriten Rathe, or deputed counſellors, hold their meetings at Middleburg, as being the capital of the province. Zealand has two high courts of juſtice in common with Holland, viz. the high council, and the provincial court. To the aſſembly of the States-General it ſends four deputies, who hold their office during life, and are alternately choſen from among the magiſtrates of the ſeveral voting towns, excepting that Middleburg always ſends one. The right branch of the Scheldt, called the Eaſt Scheldt, dividing this province into two quarters, viz. into that on the eaſt and that on the weſt of the ſaid river. The quarter on the Weſt Scheldt is compoſed of five iſlands, viz. Walcheren, South Beveland, North Beveland, Wolferſdyk, and St. Jooſtland. The quarter of the Eaſt Scheldt contains four iſlands, viz. Schouwen, Duiveland, Tholen, and St. Philip's Land.

ZEALAND (New), two iſlands in the South Pacific Ocean, firſt diſcovered by Taſman. In the year 1642, he traverſed the eaſtern coaſt from Lat. 34. to 43. and entered the ſtrait called Cook's Strait; he was attacked by the natives, ſoon after he came to an anchor, in the place to which he gave the name of Murderer's Bay, and never went on ſhore: he gave the country the name of Staaten Land, in honour of the States-General, and it is now generally diſtinguiſhed in our maps and charts, by the name of New Zealand. As the whole of this country, except that part of the coaſt which was ſeen by Taſman from on board his ſhip, had from his time, to the voyage of the Endeavour in the year 1770, remained altogether unknown; it was by many ſuppoſed to be part of a ſouthern continent. It is, however, now known to conſiſt of two large iſlands, divided from each other by a ſtrait or paſſage, which is about four or five leagues broad. The northermoſt of theſe iſlands, is by the natives Eaheinomauwe; and the ſouthermoſt Tovy or Tavai Poenammoo; yet it is uncertain whether the name Tovy Poenammoo comprehends the whole ſouthern iſland, or only part of it. Tovy Poenammoo is for the moſt part a mountainous, and to all appearance, a barren country and thinly peopled. Eaheinomauwe has a much better appearance; it is indeed, not only hilly, but mountainous, yet even the hills and mountains are covered with wood, and every vally has a rivulet of water; the ſoil in theſe vallies, and in the plains, of which there are many that are not over-grown with wood, is in general light, but fertile, and fit for every kind of European grain, plants, and fruit. From the vegetables that were found here, there is reaſon to conclude clude the winters are milder than in England, and the ſummer not hotter, though it was more equally warm: dogs and rats are the only quadrupeds that were ſeen, and of the latter only a few. The inhabitants breed the dogs for the ſole purpoſe of eating them. There are ſeals and whales on the coaſt, and they once ſaw a ſea-lion. The birds are hawks, owls, quails: and there are ſong-birds, whoſe note is wonderfully melodious, There are ducks and ſhags of ſeveral ſorts, not unlike thoſe of Europe; and the gannet, which is exactly the ſame. The ſea-coaſt is viſited by albatroſſes, ſheerwaters, pintados, and penguins. The inſects are fleſh-flies, beetles, butterflies, ſand flies, and muſquitos; and the neighbouring ſea abounds with fiſh, which are equally delicate and wholeſome food: captain Cook ſeldom came to anchor, but they catched enough, with hook and line only, to ſupply the whole ſhip's crew; and, when they fiſhed with nets, every meſs in the ſhip, except thoſe who were too indolent, ſalted as much as ſupplied them when at ſea ſome time after. The fiſh was not leſs various in kind than plentiful in quantity; there were many ſorts they had never before ſeen, but the ſailors readily gave names to all of them. This country abounds with foreſts filled with very large, ſtraight, and clean timber. There is one tree about the ſize of an oak, which was diſtinguiſhed by a ſcarlet flower, that appeared to be compoſed of ſeveral fibres; and another which grows in ſwampy ground, very ſtraight and tall, bearing ſmall bunches of berries, and a leaf reſembling that of the yew-tree; about 400 ſpecies of plants were found, all of which are unknown in England, except garden nightſhade, ſow-thiſtle, two or three kinds of fern, and one or two ſorts of graſs. They found wild celery, and a kind of creſſes, in great abundance on the ſea ſhore, and of eatable plants raiſed by cultivation, only cocoas, yams, and ſweet potatoes. There are plantations of many acres of theſe yams and potatoes. The inhabitants likewiſe cultivate the gourd; and the Chineſe paper mulberry-tree is to be found, but in no abundance. There is only one ſhrub or tree in this country which produces fruit, and that is a kind of berry almoſt taſteleſs: but they have a plant which anſwers all the uſes of hemp and flax. There are two kinds of this plant, the leaves of one of which are yellow, and the other deep red, and both of them reſemble the leaves of flags; of theſe leaves they make lines and cordage, and much ſtronger than any thing of the kind in Europe. Theſe leaves they likewiſe ſplit into breadths, and dying the ſlips together form their fiſhing-nets. Their common apparel by a ſimple proceſs is made from leaves, and their finer by another preparation, is made from the fibres. This plant is found both on high and low ground, in dry mould, and deep bogs; but as it grows largeſt in the latter, that ſeems to be its proper ſoil. The men of this country are as large as the largeſt Europeans. Their complexion is brown, but little more ſo than that of a Spaniard. They are full of fleſh, but not lazy or luxurious, and are ſtout and well ſhaped. The women poſſeſs not that delicacy which diſtinguiſhes the European ladies, but their voice is ſingularly ſoft, which, as the dreſs of both ſexes is ſimilar, chiefly diſtinguiſhes them from the men. The men are active of a high degree, their hair is black, and their teeth are white and even. The features in both ſexes are regular; they enjoy perfect health, and live to a very advanced age; they are of the gentleſt diſpoſitions, and treat each other with the utmoſt kindneſs, but they are perpetually at war, every little diſtrict being at enmity with all the reſt. They have neither black cattle, ſheep, hogs, nor goats; ſo that their chief food being fiſh, and that not at all times to be obtained, they are in danger of dying through hunger; they have a few, and but a very few dogs; and when no fiſh is to be got, they have only vegetables, ſuch as yams and potatoes to feed on, and if, by any accident theſe fail them, their ſituation muſt be deplorable. This will account for their ſhocking cuſtom of eating the bodies which are ſlain in battle, for he who fights through mere hunger, will not ſcruple to eat the adverſary he has killed. The inhabitants of New Zealand are modeſt and reſerved in their behaviour and converſation. The women, indeed were not dead to the ſofter impreſſions; but their mode of conſent was, in their idea, as harmleſs as the conſent to marriage with us, and equally binding for the ſtipulated time. If any of the Engliſh addreſſed one of their women, he was informed, that the conſent of her friends muſt be obtained, which uſually followed, on his making a preſent. This done, he was obliged to treat his temporary wife, at leaſt as delicately as we do in England. They anoint their hair with oil, melted from the fat of fiſh or birds. The poorer people uſe that which is rancid, ſo that the ſmell is very diſagreeable: but thoſe of ſuperior rank, make uſe of that which is freſh. They wear combs both of bone and wood, which is conſidered as an ornament, when ſtuck upright in the hair. The men tie their hair in a bunch on the crown of the head, and adorn it with the feathers of birds, which they likewiſe, ſometimes, place on each ſide of the temples. They commonly wear ſhort beards; the hair of the women ſometimes flows over the ſhoulders, and ſometimes is cut ſhort. Both ſexes, but the men more than the women, mark their bodies with black ſtains, called Amoco; in general, the women ſtain only the lips, but ſometimes mark other parts with black patches; the men, on the contrary put on additional marks from year to year, ſo that thoſe who are very ancient, are almoſt covered; excluſive of the Amoco, they mark themſelves with furrows: theſe furrows make a hideous appearance, the edges being indented, and the whole quite black. The ornaments of the face are drawn in the ſpiral form, with equal elegance and correctneſs, both cheeks being marked exactly alike, while the painting on their bodies, reſemble fillagree work, and the foliage in old chaſed ornaments, but no two faces or bodies are painted exactly after the ſame model. Theſe Indians likewiſe paint their bodies, by rubbing them with red oker, either dry or mixed with oil. Their dreſs is formed of the leaves of the flag, ſplit into ſlips, which are interwoven, and made into a kind of matting, the ends, which are ſeven or eight inches in length, hanging out on the upper ſide. One piece of this matting being tied over the ſhoulders, reaches to the knees: the other piece being wrapped round the waiſt, falls almoſt to the ground. Theſe two pieces are faſtened to a ſtring, which by means of a bodkin of bone, is paſſed through, and tacks them together. The men wear the lower garment only, at particular times. What they conſider as the moſt ornamental part of their dreſs, is the fur of dogs, which they cut into ſtripes, and ſew on different parts of their apparel. As dogs are not plenty, they diſpoſe theſe ſtripes with great œconomy. They have a few dreſſes, ornamented with feathers; and one man was ſeen covered wholly with thoſe of the red parrot. The women never tie their hair on the top of their head, nor adorn it with feathers; and are leſs anxious about dreſs than the men. Their lower garment is bound tight round them, except when they go a fiſhing, and then they are careful that the men ſhall not ſee them. The ears of both ſexes are bored, and the holes ſtretched ſo as to admit a man's finger. The ornaments of their ears are feathers, cloth, bones, and ſometimes bits of wood: a great many of them uſe nails, which were given them by the Engliſh, for this purpoſe, and the women ſometimes adorn their ears with the white down of the albatroſs, which they ſpread before and behind the hole, in a large bunch. They likewiſe hang to their ears by ſtrings, chiſſels, bodkins, the teeth of dogs, and the teeth and nails of their deceaſed friends. The arms and ancles of the women, are adorned with ſhells and bones, or any thing elſe, through which they can paſs a ſtring. The men wear a piece of green talc, or whalebone, with the reſemblance of a man carved on it, hanging to a ſtring round the neck. The houſes are from 16 to 24 feet long, 10 or 12 wide, and 6 or 8 in height. The frame is of ſlight ſticks of wood, and the walls and roof, are made of dry graſs, pretty firmly compacted. Some of them are lined with bark of trees, and the ridge of the houſe is formed by a pole, which runs from one end to the other. The door is only high enough, to admit a perſon crawling on hands and knees; and the roof is ſloping. There is a ſquare hole near the door, ſerving both for window and chimney, near which is the fire place. A plank is placed near the door, adorned with a ſort of carving, and this they conſider as an ornamental piece of furniture. The ſide walls, and roof, projecting two or three feet beyond the walls at each end, form a ſort of portico, where benches are placed to ſit on. The fire is made in the middle of a hollow ſquare, in the floor, which is encloſed with wood or ſtone. They ſleep near the walls, where the ground is covered with ſtraw for their beds. Beſides the fern root, which ſerves them for bread, they feed on albatroſſes, penguins, and ſome other birds. Whatever they eat is either roaſted or baked, as they have no veſſels in which water can be boiled. They ſaw no plantations of coacos, potatoes, and yams, to the ſouthward, though there were many in the northern parts. The natives drink no other liquor than water, and enjoy perfect and uninterrupted health. When wounded in battle, the wound heals in a very ſhort time, without the application of medicine; and the very old people carry no other marks of decay about them, than the loſs of their hair and teeth, and a failure of their muſcular ſtrength; but enjoy an equal ſhare of health and cheerfulneſs with the youngeſt. The canoes of this country are not unlike the whale boats of New England, being long and narrow. The larger ſort ſeem to be built for war, and will hold from 30 to 100 men; one of theſe meaſured near 70 feet in length, 6 in width, and 4 in depth. It was ſharp at the bottom, and conſiſted of 3 lengths, about 2 or 3 inches thick, and tied firmly together with ſtrong plaiting: each ſide was formed of one entire plank, about 12 inches broad, and about 1½ inch thick, which were fitted to the bottom part, with equal ſtrength and ingenuity. Several thwarts were laid from one ſide to the other, to which they were ſecurely faſtened, in order to ſtrengthen the canoes. Theſe veſſels are rowed with a kind of paddles, between five and ſix feet in length, the blade of which is a long oval, gradually decreaſing till it reaches the handle; and the velocity with which they row with theſe paddles, is really ſurpriſing; their ſails are compoſed of a kind of mat or netting, which is extended between two upright poles, one of which is fixed on each ſide. Two ropes faſtened to the top of each pole, ſerve inſtead of ſheets. The veſſels are ſteered by two men, having each a paddle, and ſitting in the ſtern; but they can only ſail before the wind, in which direction, they move with conſiderable ſwiftneſs. Theſe Indians uſe axes, adzes, and chiſſels, with which laſt they likewiſe bore holes. The chiſſels are made of jaſper, or of the bone of a man's arm; and their axes, and adzes, of a hard black ſtone. Their tillage of the ground is excellent, owing to the neceſſity they are under of cultivating, or running the riſk of ſtarving. A long narrow ſtake, ſharpened to an edge at bottom, with a piece fixed acroſs, a little above it, for the convenience of driving it into the ground with the foot, ſupplies the place both of plough and ſpade. The ſoil being light, their work is not very laborious, and with this inſtrument alone they will turn up ground of ſix or ſeven acres in extent. Their fiſh-hooks are of ſhell or bone; and they have baſkets of wicker-work to hold the fiſh. Their warlike weapons are ſpears, darts, battle-axes, and the patoo-patoo. The ſpear, which is pointed at each end, is about ſixteen feet in length, and they hold in the middle, ſo that it is difficult to parry a puſh from it. Whether they fight in boats or on ſhore, the battle is hand to hand, their conteſts muſt be bloody. The employment of the men, is ſuppoſed to conſiſt in cultivating the ground, making nets, catching birds, and fiſhing; while the women are engaged in weaving cloth, procuring fern-roots, and ſhell-fiſh, and dreſſing food. With regard to religion, they acknowledge one ſuperior being, and ſeveral ſubordinate. Their mode of worſhip could not be learned, nor was any place proper for that purpoſe ſeen. There was indeed a ſmall ſquare area, encompaſſed with ſtones, in the middle of which, hung a baſket of fern-roots on one of their ſpades. This they ſaid was offered to the gods, in hope of a plentiful crop of proviſion. The inhabitants of the ſouthern diſtrict, ſaid they diſpoſed of their dead by throwing them into the ſea, but thoſe of the north ſaid they buried them in the ground; captain Cook's crew, however, ſaw not the leaſt ſign of any grave, or monument; but the body of almoſt every inhabitant bore the marks of wounds which they had given themſelves, in token of grief for the loſs of their friends and relations. Some of theſe ſcars were newly made, which is a proof that their friends had died while the ſhip's crew were there, yet no one ſaw any thing like a funeral, as theſe iſlanders conceal every thing reſpecting the dead, with the utmoſt caution. A great ſimilitude was obſerved between the dreſs, furniture, boats, and nets of the New Zealanders, and thoſe of the inhabitants of the South Sea Iſlands, which furniſh a ſtrong proof that the common anceſtors of both were natives of the ſame country. Long. 181. to 194. ZEBID, a city of Arabia, in the province of Yemen. Zebid was once the place of a ſovereign's reſidence, and the moſt commercial city in all Tehama; but, ſince the harbour of Ghalefka was choked up, its trade has been transferred to Beit el Fakih and Mocha, and this city now retains nothing but the ſhadow of its former ſplendour. Viewed from a diſtance, it appears to ſome advantage, by means of the moſques and kubbets, of which it is full. Several of thoſe moſques were erected by different pachas, who reſided here during the ſhort period, while this part of Arabia was in the poſſeſſion of the Ottoman porte. Zebid had once eight gates; of theſe only five are now ſtanding, and the river is gradually breaking down a part of them. The walls of the old city are demoliſhed, and the very ruins are ſold by poor people, who gather out the ſtones, and ſell them for building new houſes: the preſent buildings occupy about one-half of the ancient extent of the city. Zebid is ſtill diſtinguiſhed for an academy, in which the youth of Tehama, and a part of Yemen, ſtudy ſuch ſciences as are cultivated among the Muſſulmans. This is beſides the ſeat of a dola, a mafti, and three cadis: 52 miles N. Mocha. Long. 43. 15. E. Greenwich. Lat. 14. 13. N.

ZIRICZEE, one of the moſt ancient towns of Zealand, and capital of the iſland of Schouwen, built and ſurrounded with walls in the year 859, by one named Ziringus, from whom it is called. It was the ancient reſidence of the comtes of Zealand, and was at that time a place of much more conſequence than it is at preſent, the port being filled with ſand. The inhabitants carry on a conſiderable trade in grain, ſalt, and fiſh : the town is large and populous, and has ſeveral good buildings; the church, called the Munſter, dedicated to St. Levinus, is a handſome ſtructure. The Flemings having again attacked the city, in the year 1303, without ſucceſs, under the command of Guy de Dampierre, comte of Flanders, they were beat the following year by the Hollanders, ſupported by the French fleet, under the command of Roger de Lauria; the greater part of them were ſlain, and the comte taken priſoner. In the year 1576, it was taken by Louis de Requeſens, governor-general of the Netherlands, after a ſiege of ſeven months, ſuſtained by Arend Vander Dorp, the commander. The Spaniards, under the conduct of the marquis de Cetone, and Chriſtopher de Mondragon, the brave defender of Middleburg, performed a very gallant action; in the night of the 28th of September, 1575, they paſſed on foot the channels of the ſea which ſeparate the Iſle of Schouwen from Duyveland, and notwithſtanding the waters generally came up to their ſhoulders, and their enemies diſputed their paſſage, they victoriouſly made good their landing; Louis de Boiſot, admiral of Zealand, loſt his life. Long. 20. 24. Gorlitz, and 52 NNE. Prague. —In the year 1757, this town, where the Pruſſians had large magazines, and a garriſon of ſix battalions, was attacked by the Auſtrians, and bombarded with ſuch fury, that moſt of the garriſon finding themſelves unable to reſiſt, made their eſcape, and carried off as much as they could of the magazines, leaving only 300 or 400 men in the town, under colonel Diricke, to hold it out as long as poſſible; which he accordingly did : the whole place was almoſt deſtroyed. The cannonading began on the 23d of July, at eleven o'clock in the morning, and laſted till five in the evening. In this ſpace of time 4000 balls, many of them red hot, were fired into this unfortunate city, with ſo little intermiſſion, that it was ſoon ſet on fire in ſeveral places. In the confuſion which the conflagration produced, the Auſtrians entered the town. The Pandours and Sclavonians, who ruſhed in with the regular troops, made no diſtinction between the Pruſſians and the inhabitants of Zittau : inſtead of helping to quench the flames, they began to plunder the warehouſes, which the fire had not reached; ſo that all the valuable goods they contained, particularly linens, were either carried off or reduced to aſhes. Upwards of 600 houſes, and almoſt all the public buildings were entirely deſtroyed, and more than 400 citizens were killed in this aſſault. Of the whole town there was left ſtanding only 138 houſes, two churches, the council-houſe, and the ſalt-work.

ZUG, a canton of Swiſſerland, bounded on the north and eaſt by Zuric, on the ſouth by Schweitz, and on the weſt by Lucern; only about 10 miles long, and nearly as much in breadth. The paſtures here are excellent, and it produces alſo a ſufficiency of grain, with plenty of fruit, and ſome wine; on one ſide of the Zug Lake, the country is covered with cheſtnut-trees, which form a very profitable branch of trade, by the ſale of the nuts to the neighbouring countries. This diſtrict, on the extinction of the counts of Lenzburg, devolved to thoſe of Kyburg, which latter alſo failing, it came to the counts of Habſburg, and in them to the houſe of Auſtria, towards which it always manifeſted an inviolable attachment; but in the year 1352, the town of Zug being beſieged by the Helvetian confederacy, and not only neglected by the archduke, but even recommended by him to ſurrender, it followed his advice, and was admitted into the confederacy, to which its territory had previouſly acceded. This canton is the ſeventh in rank, and among the leſſer ones the fifth, beſides which, it is in a particular manner connected with Lucern, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, commonly called the five territorial confederates. The government of this canton is entirely democratical; the ſupreme council being lodged in the landegemeine, which meets annually in the town of Zug. In this council, every male of ſixteen years of age is poſſeſſed of a vote, and here alſo all public poſts are conferred. It is compoſed of deputies from the ſeveral quarters of the canton. The chief perſon here is the amman, who is elected alternately from the town and the territory, though with this difference, that the town amman continues in office three years, but the country amman two; this officer muſt always reſide in the town; next to him is the ſtatthalter, who has the keeping of the provincial ſeal. The people of this canton are reckoned the moſt reſtleſs of Swiſſerland: their general aſſemblies are often tempeſtuous, though ſeldom attended with bloodſhed.

ZUG, a town of Swiſſerland, and capital of a canton of the ſame name, at the north-eaſt extremity of a lake. It contains two churches, a convent, a town-houſe, arſenal, corn-magazine, a college, hoſpital, &c.: 15 miles S. Zurich, and 12 NNE. Lucerne. Long. 26. 3. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 8. N.

ZURARA, a town of Portugal, in the province of Entre Duero e Minho, on the ſouth ſide of the mouth of the Ave, oppoſite Villa de Conde.

ZURIC, or Zurich, a canton of Swiſſerland, and firſt in rank, bounded on the north by Swabia and the canton of Schaffhauſen, on the eaſt by the Thurgau and the county of Toggenburg, on the ſouth by the cantons of Schweitz and Zug, and on the weſt by the county of Baden. This canton is not unaptly called an epitome of all Swiſſerland, as containing in it hills, vallies, plains, corn-lands, vineyards, lakes, rivers, vegetables of all kinds, and whatever elſe is neceſſary to the ſupport of life. Grain is cultivated all over the country; but it ripens later in the mountainous parts, where the air is coldeſt, than in the levels or ſunny vallies. The hilly grounds in the eaſt, weſt, and ſouth borders, afford a ſpecimen of the fertile Alps, as abounding in cattle, milk, butter, and cheeſe; at firſt the wines have a tartneſs attending them, yet they improve by keeping; and, after lying ſome years in the caſk, become ſmooth, pleaſant, and wholeſome. Fruits alſo are every where found in great plenty, and very good. The moſt remarkable minerals and foſſils are chalk, potters' earth of ſeveral ſorts and colours, ſulphur, and pit-coal; ſome mineral ſprings are likewiſe found. The proportion of grain to the other productions of the earth, will appear from the following calculation: there are 217,424 acres laid out in grain, 14,466 in vines, 94,553 in meadows, 42,549 in paſturage, and 103,772 in foreſts. As ſufficient corn is not produced for the interior conſumption, the deficiency is chiefly ſupplied from Swabia. In order to prevent a ſcarcity of this material article, a public granary is maintained, at the expence of government, for grain at the common price; but, in ſeaſons of ſcarcity, it is ſold conſiderably cheaper than it can be purchaſed at the market. The canton contained, in 1784, 174,572 ſouls, including 10,500 in the capital: this large population, in proportion to the ſize of the canton, is owing to the trade of Zuric; as, at leaſt, two thirds of the inhabitants derive their livelihood by ſpinning thread and ſilk, and making linen for the manufactures of the town. The ſovereign power reſides excluſively in the burgeſſes of the town, conſiſting of about 2000. The reformation was begun by Zuinglius, in the year 1517, in the town of Zurich; and in 1524, gained footing in the whole canton.

ZURICH, a city of Swiſſerland, and capital of a canton of the ſame name, ſituated on a large lake, where the river Limmat is diſcharged, which divides it into two parts, ſuppoſed to have been built on the ſite of the ancient Tigurum, which was deſtroyed by the Allemanni. Zurich was formerly an imperial city, and obtained, from the emperor Frederic II. very conſiderable privileges, which were acknowledged and augmented by ſeveral of his ſucceſſors. The civil war between the magiſtrates and the people, in the year 1335, nearly reduced the city to ruins; but the former being baniſhed, the citizens, in 1337, eſtabliſhed a new form of government, which was confirmed by the emperor Louis of Bavaria. The exiles, after ſeveral fruitleſs attempts, were at length re-admitted; but engaging in a conſpiracy againſt the city, were diſcovered, and put to death. In conſequence of this tranſaction, the nobles in the neighbourhood took up arms; and Zuric, after having ineffectually applied for aſſiſtance to the emperor Charles IV. formed an alliance with Lucerne, Uri, Schweitz, and Underwalden, and was admitted a member of their confederacy: this event happened in the year 1351. The four cantons yielded the pre-eminence to Zuric; a privilege it enjoys at preſent; being the firſt canton in rank, and the moſt conſiderable in extent, both of territory and power, next to Berne. In the ſame year, Zuric was aſſiſted by the four cantons againſt Albert, duke of Auſtria, who beſieged the town, and was repulſed with great loſs. Zuric was the firſt town in Swiſſerland that ſeparated from the church of Rome, being converted by the arguments of Zuinglius. The town is divided into two parts; the old part, ſurrounded with the ſame ancient battlements and towers which exiſted in the 13th century; and the ſuburbs, which are ſtrengthened by fortifications in the modern ſtyle, but too extenſive. The ditches, inſtead of being filled with ſtagnant water, are moſtly ſupplied with running ſtreams. The inhabitants are very induſtrious, and carry on with ſucceſs ſeveral manufactures: the principal are thoſe of linens and cottons, muſlins and ſilk handkerchiefs. The manufacturers do not, in general, dwell within the walls; but the materials are moſtly prepared, and the work is completed in the adjacent diſtricts: for this reaſon, Zuric does not exhibit the activity and numbers of a great commercial city: the environs, on the contrary, are ſo extremely populous, that, perhaps, few diſtricts in the neighbourhood of a town, whoſe population ſcarcely exceeds 10,500 inhabitants, contain, within ſo ſmall a compaſs, ſo many ſouls. The ſtreets are moſtly narrow; the houſes and public buildings accord more with plainneſs and convenience, than with the elegance and ſplendor of a capital. The town contained, in 1780, 10,559 ſouls. Among their ſumptuary laws, the uſe of a carriage in the town is prohibited to all ſorts of perſons, except ſtrangers. The militia of the canton amounted, in 1781, to 25,718 infantry, 1025 artillery, 886 dragoons, and 406 chaſſeurs; in all, 28,235 effective men. The arſenal is well ſupplied with cannon, arms, and ammunition, and contains a reſerve of muſkets for 30,000 men: 41 miles SE. Bâle, and 36 SW. Conſtance. Long. 26. 9. E. Ferro. Lat. 47. 22. N.

ZURICH, a lake of Swiſſerland, in a canton to which it gives name; 22 miles long, and 2 wide. It is divided into Upper and Lower.

ZURITA, a town of Spain, in New Caſtile, on the left bank of the Tagus: 48 miles NE. Toledo, and 30 SE. Madrid.

ZUSNIN, a town of Iſtria: 11 miles NNE. Pedena.

ZUTPHEN, a city of the United Dutch States, and capital of a county to which it gives name, ſituated on the river Berckel, which paſſes through the middle of it, fills its ditches, and immediately joins the Iſſel. It takes its name from the two Flemiſh words Zudt Vunen, which ſignify Southern Meadows. The States-General of the United Provinces, having ſeized it at the beginning of the revolution, it was retaken by aſſault, in the year 1572, by the Spaniards, under the command of Frederic de Toledo, ſon of the duke of Alva, who pillaged and ſacked the town, and maſſacred the greater part of the inhabitants, as a puniſhment for their rebellion; which treatment, obliged the other cities of Guelderland to open their gates to the Spaniards. In the year 1583, the prince of Parma placed in it a numerous garriſon, and built ſeveral forts in the environs, to render the acceſs more difficult. The States beſieged it twice, in 1584, and in 1586, without ſucceſs; at length it was taken by Maurice, prince of Orange, in the year 1591, having firſt ſurpriſed the fort of Zutphen, nine days before, by means of ſome ſoldiers, dreſſed as peaſants. It remained with the Hollanders till the year 1672, when the French, under the conduct of Philip, duke of Orléans, the only brother of Louis XIV. made themſelves maſters of it in a few days, although it was well provided, and defended by a garriſon of 2500 foot, and four companies of horſe, beſides the inhabitants. In the year 1672, the French deſtroyed the fortifications, and abandoned the place; the fortifications have been ſince repaired. The principal buildings are the church of St. Walburge, the town-houſe, the college of the deputies of the compté, and an ancient building, which they call s'Graven-Hof, or Palace of the Comte. Otho I. of Naſſau, acquired this county in the 11th century, by his marriage with the heireſs of Gerlach, count of Zutphen, ſince which it has ever been annexed to Guelderland: 7 miles S. Deventer, and 40 E. Utrecht. Long. 23. 38. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 11. N.

ZUYDER-ZEE, or Zuider-Sea, a great gulph or bay of the German Ocean, which extends from ſouth to north, in the United Provinces, between Frieſland, Overiſſel, Guelderland, and Holland. It is ſo called from its ſituation towards the ſouth, and is ſaid formerly to have been a lake, and that the land is ſwallowed up, that united North Holland with Frieſland.

ZUZON, a town of Spain, in Old Caſtile: 22 miles NE. Siguença.

ZWAMMERDAM, or Zwadenburgerdam, a town of Holland, on the Rhine, which was pillaged and burned by the French, in the year 1672: 6 miles N. Gouda, and 10 ESE. Leyden.

ZWOLFAING, a town of Germany, in the archduchy of Auſtria: 8 miles SSE. Vienna.

ZWOL, or Swol, a town of Overiſſel, ſituated on the river Aa, between the Iſſel and the Vecht, in the country of Zallant. It is a ſtrong place, well fortified, and ſurrounded with a double ditch, filled with the waters of the Aa. Its ſituation is very advantageous, on an eminence which commands the country, and is the ordinary paſſage from Holland to the provinces of Frieſland, Groningen, and Overiſſel. It was formerly a free and imperial city, and ranked among the Hanſe towns. The magiſtracy is compoſed of eight echevins and eight common-council. It was taken by the French, in 1672, who razed the fortifications before they abandoned it. The celebrated Thomas a Kempis, otherwiſe called Hamerken, was a regular canon in the priory of Auguſtines in this place, and died here, in the year 1471, at the age of 91: 28 miles SW. Covorden, and 15 N. Deventer. Long. 23. 30. E. Ferro. Lat. 52. 32. N.
